Mr. SHERMAN. I withdraw the amendments of the committee which include the proposed fourth section and move that the third section be stricken out. That would leave it as an independent proposition. As a matter of course, the Committee on Finance can report upon the subject hereafter and the effect would be to leave the first and second sections stand intact.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri insist on his motion to postpone?

Mr. BOGY. I do not. I am glad of the proposition of the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to postpone is withdrawn.

Mr. KERNAN. If we strike out the third section of the House bill the bill will then still be amended by the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. My motion is to strike out all after the second section. As a matter of course the amendments of the committee are not acted on and they fall with the third section of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio to strike out all after the second section of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish it distinctly understood, not only for myself but others, that the vote which has just been taken to strike out does not imply that we are opposed to that part which has been stricken out. Some Senators seem to think that in voting to strike out this section they were voting against the amendments. I made the motion simply to expedite the business of the Senate; to have the action of the Senate on the first and second sections.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I move to insert at the end of the first section of the bill the words:

And the further sum of $48,000 to provide for engraving and printing national-bank notes, to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

An appropriation of $100,000 was made for this specific object for the current year, but it has run short, and this is to supply a necessary deficiency. In further support of the amendment I will send to the Chair, and ask that it may be read, a communication from the Comptroller of the Currency.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY,
Washington, April 6, 1876.

SIR: I have the honor to suggest an amendment to House bill No. 2450, now pending in the Finance Committee of the Senate, so as to provide for an appropriation of $48,000 for the purpose of engraving and printing national-bank notes. The annual appropriation for engraving and printing national-bank notes being exhausted, this Office is now unable to furnish to the banks new notes in place of the worn and mutilated notes which are returned to us canceled from the Office of the Treasurer. In other cases it has been impossible to furnish to new banks circulating notes upon the bonds which they have deposited with the Treasurer as security therefor, causing great inconvenience to these institutions and embarrassment to this Office.

The backs of the national-bank notes are printed by the bank-note companies and the faces by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. The coat-of-arms of each State is printed upon the backs of the notes issued to the banks therein, and the backs of each denomination are different, so that a great variety of backs is required, and it is necessary that the Bureau of Engraving and Printing shall have on hand a supply of each kind in order to furnish suitable notes for the banks in all the States. More than one hundred and ninety banks are now entirely out of circulating notes, and the Printing Bureau is unable to fill the orders of the banks until an appropriation shall be made to pay the expenses of printing such notes.

In this connection it is proper to state that section 5173 of the Revised Statutes provides that the expenses of this Office shall be paid out of the proceeds of the taxes or duties assessed and collected on the circulation of the national banks. The amount of such taxes from the organization of the system to July 1, 1875, was $30,836,937, while the total expenses of this Office, including the printing and preparation of the notes, has been but $1,689,617.

The appropriation asked for will be sufficient to supply this Office with circulating notes for the remainder of the present fiscal year.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

JNO. JAY KNOX,
Comptroller.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN,
Chairman Finance Committee, United States Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine, [Mr. MORRILL.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will now move to add at the end of the second section of the bill the last words of the fourth section as reported by the committee, to which, I suppose, there will be no objection:

And the fractional currency redeemed under this act shall be held to be a part of the sinking fund provided for by existing law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I would like the Senator to explain that. What is to be done with this after you make it a part of the sinking fund?

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator is aware that, when fractional currency and United States notes are retired, it will relieve the Secretary from the necessity of buying bonds to the extent that he receives and cancels fractional currency and United States notes for the subsidiary coin he issues.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes; so much I can see; but you are making it a part of the sinking fund, which implies a fund which in some way is invested and draws interest.

Mr. SHERMAN. Interest will be counted on this just as much as on the other. It will be counted on the whole sinking fund.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator is quite sure about that, I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is no doubt of it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should have a little doubt about that.

Mr. MORTON. My understanding is that the bonds purchased go into the sinking fund to draw their interest, and they are not extinguished in the sinking fund; they are created and live, and if this bond did not draw interest it would not require a note.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is precisely the question I was putting to my friend from Ohio; and his saying it will be a part of the sinking fund without saying interest shall be included upon it in some way was what raised the doubt in my mind.

Mr. SHERMAN. As I am not prepared to answer the question positively, I will accept with pleasure any amendment the Senator from Vermont may offer.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not prepared to offer any. I am merely asking for information, and making the suggestion.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think these words will cover the point:

Interest to be computed thereon the same as in the case of bonds redeemed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think that would answer.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. What kind of bonds?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Call them the lowest kind; it is a gain of that interest.

Mr. BOUTWELL. It is all computed at 6 per cent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Ohio will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of section 2, line 12, it is proposed to insert:

And all fractional currency redeemed under this act shall be held to be part of the sinking fund provided for by existing law, the interest to be computed thereon as in the case of bonds.

Mr. EDMUNDS. "As in the case of bonds redeemed under the sinking-fund acts."

Mr. SHERMAN. My impression is that they count the interest on the whole sinking fund.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It may be; but to save all question I think it better to state it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

And all fractional currency redeemed under this act shall be held to be part of the sinking fund provided for by existing law, the interest to be computed thereon as in the case of bonds redeemed under the sinking-fund acts.

Mr. SHERMAN. Instead of "sinking-fund acts" say "the acts relating to the sinking fund." There are two, the act of 1862 and the act of 1871.

Mr. BOUTWELL. As I recollect the redemption act, as it is called, of 1875, authority was given to the Secretary of the Treasury to issue bonds, the proceeds of which were to be applied to the purchase of bullion for the subsidiary coin, and those coins are now to be used under this act for the redemption of the fractional currency. The question I had in mind was whether this, taken in connection with that act, will not so operate that the sinking fund will be credited with the proceeds of the bonds issued by the Government, when the theory of the sinking fund is that it is to be created by the application of current revenues to the payment of a portion of the public debt. I apprehend that the two acts, considered together, will work that result; that is, we create a debt to redeem the outstanding fractional currency, and the amount of that debt is made a part of the sinking fund precisely as though the bullion for the subsidiary coin had been purchased from the current revenues of the Government. That ought not to happen, it seems to me. I fear it will.

Mr. SHERMAN. As I understand it, this operation is a very simple one. Instead of selling bonds, as the Secretary may do under the existing law, he may use a portion of the sinking fund, if necessary, to redeem this fractional currency and just charge it to the sinking fund. It is money that would otherwise be used to purchase bonds in the redemption of fractional notes.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Really what ought to happen is this: So much of the fractional currency as is redeemed by the use of subsidiary coin, the bullion for which was purchased out of moneys derived from current revenues, should be carried to the sinking fund; but fractional currency redeemed with coin, the bullion for which was purchased by the issue of bonds, should not be carried to the sinking fund. I fear that the amendment does not make that distinction.

Mr. SHERMAN. It seems to me that to the extent the sinking fund is used for the purpose of paying these fractional notes the fractional notes should be placed to the credit of the sinking fund. That is the way I understand it. If the Senator can express it in any other language I would be glad to have him do so.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I am not prepared to do it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it is clear enough now that this sinking fund is used to supply these fractional notes. As a matter of course the sinking fund should be credited with the amount so purchased.

Mr. BOUTWELL. But there is no sinking fund applicable. That is to say, the sinking fund is created by the use of current revenues in the purchase of bonds and the payment of interest on the capital of the sinking fund. There is no money in the sinking fund. The sinking fund is merely an account.

Mr. SHERMAN. They all mean the same thing. As I understand it, the actual accretion of the sinking fund is 1 per cent. of a certain amount with accumulated interest. That is a fund in the Treasury in gold, in coin, and it would be, and it may necessarily be, used in the absence of this law in the purchase of bonds, but it may also be used according to this provision in the retirement of fractional currency. That would diminish the fractional currency.

Mr. BOUTWELL. That should be done.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is what I want.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Very well.

Mr. SHERMAN. So that the Secretary need not necessarily sell new bonds, but may use this fund to buy fractional currency.

Mr. BOUTWELL. If that 1 per cent. is derived from current revenues and not from the sale of bonds for the purchase of bullion and the manufacture of subsidiary coin, that is all right.

Mr. SHERMAN. As I understand, they go together into the Treasury in the way of customs duties. I think there is no trouble about it.

Mr. EATON. As the sinking fund strikes me, I think this appropriation of the currency exceedingly improper. Is it not the best thing we can do when we redeem this fractional currency to cremate it?

Mr. SHERMAN. When we redeem the fractional currency we do cremate it. If we redeem a bond we cremate it, destroy it.

Mr. EATON. Very well; then do not put it into any sinking fund; destroy it, and let us have no question on the matter hereafter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN.]

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

It was ordered that the amendments be engrossed, and the bill be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. U. S. GRANT, jr., his Secretary, announced that the President had this day approved and signed the act (S. No. 682) to suspend the sale of the jail on Judiciary Square, and for other purposes; and the joint resolution (S. R. No. 12) declaring the 14th day of April, 1876, a holiday.

THOMAS N. POULLAIN, SR.

Mr. BAYARD. I desire to move a reconsideration of the vote by which on Wednesday last the Senate agreed to the adverse report submitted by the Committee on Claims on the petition of Thomas N. Poullain, sr., of Georgia, praying to be indemnified for the loss of cotton seized by the United States authorities in 1863 and 1864. I only desire to have the motion entered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion will be entered.

PRINTING OF A MEMORIAL.

Mr. SARGENT. I entered a motion this morning to reconsider an order made for printing a certain petition with the names. I wish to call up that motion and dispose of it. I moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate ordered the printing of the names in the petition of certain citizens of California, settlers upon certain railroad lands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California moves to reconsider the vote by which the Senate ordered the printing of names attached to a certain petition. The question is on the motion of the Senator from California.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT subsequently said: An order was made to reconsider a motion to print certain names and it was reconsidered, but I believe no final action was taken upon it. I ask unanimous consent that the petition be printed without the names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order will be made.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 3022) making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 169) giving the consent of the United States to the county of Dubuque, in the State of Iowa, to construct county buildings in Washington Square, in the city of Dubuque, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. No. 235) providing for the sale of part of the custom-house lot in Rockland, Maine.

DISTRICT CERTIFICATES OF INDEBTEDNESS.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, submitted the following resolution; which was considered, by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the commissioners of the District of Columbia be directed to communicate to the Senate the amount of certificates of indebtedness commonly called "greenbacks," issued by virtue of the acts of the Assembly of the District of Columbia and of Congress; also, the amount of assessments made in pursuance of said acts to secure the payment of said certificates of indebtedness; the amount of said assessments collected, and the amount outstanding unpaid, if any, and the reasons why the same have not been collected; and whether any further legislation in the premises is necessary.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GORDON. If there is nothing before the Senate, I move to take up Senate bill No. 177.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning hour having expired, the Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. No. 650) fixing the rate of postage on third-class mail matter, and for other purposes.

Mr. HAMLIN. I desire to say to the Senate that I am informed that the present occupant of the chair [Mr. INGALLS] desires to address the Senate on that question and would not like to do so at this late hour. I therefore ask to let the bill remain precisely as it is, the unfinished business, and then the Senator from Georgia can call up his bill, so that the postal bill will come up to-morrow morning in its regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, Senate bill No. 650, the unfinished business, will remain until to-morrow morning, and be then resumed as the unfinished business of to-day.

Mr. GORDON. I move to take up Senate bill No. 177, to authorize the Secretary of War to adjust and settle claims of the State of Georgia against the Government, on account of the Western and Atlantic Railroad. I will state for the information of the Clerk that the committee report a substitute for the original bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. WRIGHT. Let the bill be reported in full before the question is put.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be reported in full, subject to objection.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. GORDON. I ask that the report of the committee, which explains the whole bill, be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection the report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the report submitted by Mr. GORDON on April 3, from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to suggest to my honorable friend from Georgia that the question of the legal controversies between the Government and the railroads—there have been a good many of them at previous sessions of Congress—have been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and only, I think, two sessions ago we passed an act reported by the Judiciary Committee under a good many limitations that this bill does not contain, apparently, but which appeared to meet the general approval of the Senate, and even of the gentlemen who were interested in the railways, providing for a particular method of inquiry and of adjustment and of settlement. I see that this bill does not contain many of those limitations, and what I rose for was to ask the Senator from Georgia, in order to have a uniformity of consideration upon the subject, whether he would have any objection to this matter being referred to the same committee, in order that it might undergo consideration there as the other matters had done.

Mr. GORDON. I would state for the information of the Senator from Vermont, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, that this bill is very simple in its provisions, and that the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom it was referred, went very fully into all the facts. I want to state further, that one member of the committee, the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. BURNSIDE,] had had no inconsiderable labor to perform heretofore in looking after the very roads to get at a basis of the settlement such as is here sought; and that in referring it to the Military Committee it was thought by the Senator who introduced the bill that it would be more likely to find full investigation there than anywhere else, because of the fact that there was a member of that committee who had already been cognizant, by reason of his former connection with these roads, of the very details which were incorporated in this bill. I can hardly see, unless there is some legal question in the way, any reason for referring it to the Committee on the Judiciary. I would prefer, therefore, unless the Senator is very anxious that it should go there, that the bill take its regular course in the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not very anxious by any means that anything should go to the Judiciary Committee, because it has rather an overplus of work without working out of hours; but my anxiety is to have a uniformity of rule adopted in respect of re-adjusting railroad accounts with the United States, and that one railway shall not re-open settlements and accounts upon one set of principles and under one set of limitations, and another railway upon an entirely different one. This bill may perhaps contain great deal better provisions; I am not prepared, of course, to express any opinion upon that; but I see that it does not contain the provisions and limitations which the Judiciary Committee and the Senate were unanimously of the opinion it was desirable that bills of this character, if they were to pass at all, should contain.

That is my reason for making these inquiries and these observations. I am sure the Senator will not suppose for a moment that I have any criticism at all to pronounce upon the action of the Committee on Military Affairs. It may be perfectly correct in its essence, but it is not the course of legislation which in analogous instances coming from the Judiciary Committee, in all previous instances that I remember, certainly all the last ones, has been adopted; and that leads me to suppose that it would be wise in the general interest of legislation, in the protection of the Government, and in the administration of justice, to have certainly a uniformity, to the extent of a clear analogy at any rate, between the law that we applied to one railroad in Tennessee and to another in Georgia.

The last bill that we passed upon the subject embraced, I think, at least half a dozen different railways, and it underwent a great deal of consideration in the committee to which I refer; and we thought it necessary, I believe with entire unanimity, that several provisions in respect of limitations and securities in re-opening old accounts and settlements, should be incorporated to guard against events which, if we believe the public newspapers, have, in respect of some railways, transpired in a way that they ought not to have transpired; but of course I know nothing about that. That is my reason for making this suggestion, which I had hoped would meet with the approval of my distinguished friend from Georgia.

Mr. GORDON. There are one or two members of the Committee on Military Affairs who have gone into the investigation of this bill who are not now present in their seats; and if it is the pleasure of the Senate, I would prefer that this bill lie over until to-morrow, and I will call it up again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will lie over. At the request of the President pro tempore, the Chair will lay before the Senate some House bills for reference.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

A bill (H. R. No. 3022) making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes;

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 97) to return to the Treasury certain unexpended balances was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

JOHN M. ENGLISH.

Mr. HAMLIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MERRIMON. I ask the honorable Senator from Maine to yield to me a moment, to call up Senate bill No. 708 for the relief of John M. English, of North Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield for that purpose?

Mr. HAMLIN. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. MERRIMON. It will not detain the Senate ten minutes. I will ask the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. WRIGHT,] the charirman of the Committee on Claims, to make some explanation of the bill. I think there will be no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill which he has named.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 708) for the relief of John M. English, of North Carolina, was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It instructs the Secretary of the Interior to direct the pension agent at Raleigh, North Carolina, to issue a duplicate check, No. 8424, for $1,334 in favor of John M. English for one lost in the mail on May 18, 1875; but that the Secretary of the Interior is to be satisfied that it has not been paid, and said English is to first execute a bond with good and sufficient sureties, to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, to hold the United States harmless against the double payment of the check.

Mr. WRIGHT. I will just state that the Committee on Claims, in examining the matter, find that such check was issued; that it was never received by the invalid pensioner; that it has not been paid; and the Department is powerless to issue a duplicate check. We thought it right that a duplicate check should be issued, with the guard provided in the bill.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I will ask the Senator whether there is any evidence of the destruction of this check?

Mr. WRIGHT. There is no evidence of the destruction of the check. The evidence is that it was issued, has not been received, and has not been paid. The bill provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall be satisfied that it has not been paid; and he shall take a bond to indemnify the United States against double payment.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do not know that we can avoid doing it, although in the multitude of checks that are presented it would be a very easy thing for that check hereafter to be paid twice.

Mr. MERRIMON. Under the law, I believe they have no right to pay it now; and the Secretary of the Interior has no power to issue a duplicate as the law now stands.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE CONGRESSIONAL CEMETERY.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I ask unanimous consent to take up Senate bill No. 679.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine insist on his motion for an executive session?

Mr. HAMLIN. No, sir.

By unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 679) relating to interments in the Congressional Cemetery was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that hereafter whenever any deceased Senator or member of the House of Representatives shall be actually interred in the Congressional Cemetery, so called, it shall be the duty of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, in the case of a Senator, and of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives, in the case of a member of the House, to have the usual monument erected, with suitable inscriptions, and the cost of the same shall be a charge upon and paid out either from the contingent funds of the Senate or of the House of Representatives, to whichever the deceased may have belonged, and any existing omissions of monuments or inscriptions are authorized to be supplied in like manner.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. This cemetery originally belonged to the members of Christ church. In 1807 they obtained a subscription for $200, with which they bought square 1115. At a meeting of the vestrymen March 30, 1812, it was deeded to Washington Parish, now the name of Christ church, and it was designated as the Washington Parish Burial Grounds. It was subdivided into thirty-four ranges, each range containing one hundred and fifty-two sites, April 6, 1816. The vestry voted then to assign a hundred sites of the burial ground in the most eligible situation as a reservation for the interment of members of Congress, the said sites to be so located as to be as near each other as possible. Since that time it has generally been called the Congressional Cemetery. In compliance with a memorial of the vestry, Congress appropriated $2,000 to enable the parish to inclose the cemetery with a brick wall. At the same time the parish added three hundred sites, making a total of four hundred sites, to the use of Congress. April 25, in the words of the petition, Congress granted two additional squares, 1116 and 1117, which were taken and offered and disposed of in 1850. A few years later another addition was made, embracing squares 1104 and 1105, and made available for interments in 1855. A further addition was found convenient, and in 1867 square 1123 was added to those previously taken. Further exigencies in 1870 caused square 1106 to be added to build up the city of the dead.

This cemetery has been used for the burial of Senators and Representatives in Congress, and cenotaphs have been erected, whether the parties deceased were buried there or not. Since the introduction of railroads the remains of most of the deceased Senators and members of the House have been taken to their homes. There are several of those who are interred there with monuments having inscriptions unfinished. The monuments there are made of soft sandstone, and are rapidly decaying. Some of them are out of order, but it seemed to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds that it was an unnecessary expenditure of money to put up cenotaphs there for parties who were not absolutely buried there. They therefore report this bill providing for monuments to such as shall actually be buried in the cemetery, and also for completing the inscriptions of such as may be there without inscriptions or with imperfect inscriptions. There is one Senator, the late Senator from Virginia, [Mr. Bowden,] who has no monument erected on his grave. He died here in 1864 of the small-pox, and there is a spare monument there that could be used for the purpose.

It has seemed also proper that we should have some law on this subject. I have not been able to find anything in the statutes as to who shall have charge of burials in this cemetery. By the bill it is proposed to leave the subject in charge, where the case involves a deceased Senator, of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, and where a member of the House, of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House. I will also move as an amendment to the bill that these monuments when put up shall be made of granite, so that they need not require to be painted, and will be more durable. I move to strike out all after the word "have" in line 8 to the word "erected" in line 9, and to insert as follows:

A monument erected of granite in the form of the cenotaphs heretofore provided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I also move to add at the end of the bill the following:

And all laws upon the subject of monuments in the Congressional cemetery are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I will inquire of the Senator if there is any limitation as to the expense to be incurred for these monuments? They are to be made of granite, and at what expense?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. The matter is left entirely in charge of the Sergeant-at-Arms. The expense so far as anything now is involved will be a mere trifle. It is merely to perfect the inscriptions. For instance, there is a cenotaph there to Henry Clay and another to John C. Calhoun with the inscription imperfect, only partly put on; and it is so in relation to several others. In some cases there is a foundation of stone that requires a little adjustment and some of them require painting to prevent their destruction by the weather. I think that there is no new monument required, and there is ample ground that is already allotted and set apart for the use of Congress to last for the next half century.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. My understanding is that a large number of these cenotaphs or monuments are to Senators and members who were not buried there, and that the practice has been heretofore to provide these monuments in all instances where a member of Congress died while in office. I should hope that system would not be continued. It would cover a great deal of ground in the end.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. If the Senator from Maine will notice the provisions of the bill he will see that it provides for nothing more than those who may be actually buried there.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Has it any relation to the monuments that are already there?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Nothing, except to perfect the inscriptions.

Mr. SARGENT. I see there is a provision for erecting monuments upon those who are already buried there. I would like to inquire if the committee know how many of those monuments are to be erected?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. So far as I can ascertain there is but one, the Senator from Virginia, who died in 1864, and there is a monument there ready to be placed over him.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

On motion of Mr. MERRIMON, it was

FLUCTUATION IN VALUE OF UNITED STATES NOTES.

Mr. GARFIELD, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3123) to prevent the fluctuation in value of United States notes and to make them redeemable in gold coin at the option of the holders; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

ELISHA D. VAN KUREN.

Mr. BEEBE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3124) for the relief of Elisha D. Van Kuren, late a private in Company H, One hundred and twenty-fourth New York Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. The call of States and Territories is now complete.

SIGNAL SERVICE.

Mr. HOSKINS, by unanimous consent, presented resolutions of the New York Produce Exchange and the New York Cotton Exchange in relation to the weather bureau of the Signal Service; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

The resolutions are as follows:

NEW YORK COTTON EXCHANGE.

The following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted by the board of managers of the New York Cotton Exchange at a meeting held April 3, 1876:

Whereas the interests of commerce and agriculture in the United States demand the fullest consideration from the Government as forming the true basis of the country's wealth and greatness; and whereas the growth and exportation of cotton has contributed largely to the development of the resources of the Southern States and to the commercial prosperity of the North; and whereas every one who is engaged in the production or exportation of cotton has recognized the great importance and advantages of the reliable and timely meteorological information and weather news furnished by the weather bureau of the United States Signal Service, and by means of which shipments are almost entirely regulated, large losses prevented, and the trade surrounded with a safeguard which renders it steady and profitable: Therefore,

Resolved, That we, the board of managers of the Cotton Exchange of New York, recognizing the present value and efficiency of the weather bureau of the Signal Service to our trade, do most heartily recommend this public service to the favorable and special consideration of Congress, and that such steps be taken and such appropriations be made as will enable the service to be raised to the highest standard of efficiency for the benefit of commerce and agriculture.

Resolved, That Congress is hereby urged and requested to take favorable action on the bill now pending in the House of Representatives making a permanent organization of the weather bureau, as recommended by the Chief Signal Officer of the Army.

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be forwarded to each Senator and member of Congress from New York State.

HENRY HENTZ,
President.
EDWD. LEVERICH,
Secretary.

NEW YORK PRODUCE EXCHANGE,
New York City, New York, April 4, 1876.

At a meeting of the board of managers of the New York Produce Exchange, held this day, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas this exchange, recognizing the great benefit it has already derived from the Signal Service, the daily reports furnished bearing a very important part in the commercial transactions of the day, and being impressed with the importance and utility of the system and the future advantages which agriculture and the various departments of commercial industry may derive from its labors; and whereas a general and increasing confidence in the utility of the weather bureau is manifested by all classes because of the practical and immediate benefit derived from these weather reports; and whereas the future efficiency, not to say existence, of the bureau is to be secured only by a more permanent organization, whereby officers and men whose services have become invaluable by years of study and experience may be retained: Therefore,

Resolved, That to this end Congress is hereby earnestly requested to make such appropriations as shall be in its judgment necessary; and that we recommend and urge the passage of the bill now pending in the House of Representatives making the weather bureau a fixed organization, as recommended by the Chief Signal Officer of the Army.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to each member of Congress from New York State.

On behalf of the board:

B. W. FLOYD, President.
E. W. MASCORD, Secretary.

Attest:
S. H. GRANT,
Superintendent.

PORTSMOUTH, OHIO.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. I have here the memorial of the Board of Trade, the city council, and others, of Portsmouth, Ohio, praying that that place be declared a port of delivery. It is brief, and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce. The memorial is signed by the president of the board of trade, the president of the city council, and the importers and manufacturers generally of Portsmouth.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The memorial is as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Board of Trade, city council, importers, manufacturers, and wholesale merchants of the city of Portsmouth, Ohio, respectfully pray your honorable bodies to establish this city as a port of delivery for foreign goods imported into this country, fully believing the same will inure to the benefit of the Government and the great convenience and profit of our people.

The city of Portsmouth was early settled, and has steadily grown by the enterprise and industry of its people and the merit of its location, without any aid from the State or General Government, to a population of 13,731, with a wholesale trade of $7,069,185, of which over $2,000,000 are of foreign products, while her manufactures amount to $4,202,146 annually, and the whole business of the city exceeds $14,000,000.

The books of the collector of internal revenue show a revenue of over $750,000 annually paid into the Treasury of the United States from the city alone, and an aggregate of over eight millions since the tax was first levied.

The city is situated one hundred and fifteen miles above Cincinnati, and is the trade center of the best mineral region in the valley of the Mississippi, a region abounding in inexhaustible quantities of iron, coal, salt, fire-clay, stone, and timber. The Ohio River furnishes unobstructed navigation to the Mississippi and the Gulf. Six steamboats make this city their daily terminus, while as many more do a heavy business here. It is also the southern terminus of the Ohio Canal, connecting with Cleveland and the lakes. It is, in addition, the terminus of one railroad, and will be the terminus of another now being constructed down the Scioto Valley.

For further particulars we respectfully refer you to a more detailed statement in the hands of our member of Congress [Mr. VANCE] and our Senators, in printed form.

Trusting to your wise and discriminating judgment to grant our request, your memorialists will ever pray, &c.

REVENUE FRAUDS IN THE PACIFIC STATES.

Mr. SPRINGER, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, requested to transmit to this House, if not incompatible with the public interest, all reports and correspondence of David L. Phillips, an agent of the Treasury Department to investigate frauds on the revenue in the Pacific States, and also all reports and correspondence of others in relation thereto.

POTOMAC AQUEDUCT WATER.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee for the District of Columbia be instructed to inquire into the causes of the muddiness and impurity of the Potomac Aqueduct water, and to report as soon as practicable to this House.

ELECTION CONTEST—BASKIN VS. CANNON.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I am instructed by the Committee of Elections to request of this House an order for the printing of the papers in the contested-election case of Baskin vs. Cannon, from the Territory of Utah.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

CONTESTED ELECTION—LE MOYNE VS. FARWELL.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, from the Committee of Elections, submitted a report in writing in the contested-election case of Le Moyne vs. Farwell, from the third congressional district of Illinois, with accompanying resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That Charles B. Farwell was not elected and is not entitled to a seat in this House as a member of the Forty-fourth Congress from the third congressional district of Illinois.

Resolved, That John V. Le Moyne was elected and is entitled to a seat in this House as a member of the Forty-fourth Congress from the third congressional district of Illinois.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I move that the report be printed and laid upon the table, and I give notice that I will call it up at an early day.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN, of Kansas. The minority of the Committee of Elections desire to submit a report embracing their views upon this case, but it is not now prepared.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the views of the minority of the Committee of Elections, if presented within a reasonable time, will be printed with the majority report.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. HEREFORD. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to report back House bill No. 3022, making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works of rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, and to move that the rules be suspended and the bill now passed.

The Clerk began the reading of the bill; but before concluding,

Mr. HAMILTON, of New Jersey, said: Has not the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has, some time since.

Mr. HAMILTON, of New Jersey. Then I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. This is the regular order.

Mr. HAMILTON, of New Jersey. Then I call for the special order.

The SPEAKER. This is Monday, and after the morning hour it is in order to move a suspension of the rules; and that motion is now pending.

Mr. HAMILTON, of New Jersey. Is not the bill subject to a point of order that it contains an appropriation, and therefore must receive its first consideration as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. No points of order can be made against a bill when the motion is to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand that on Thursday last the bill in relation to the Hawaiian treaty was made a special order after the expiration of the morning hour. I submit that a motion to suspend the rules on Monday does not override an order made for that Monday by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. There are several special orders pending, either of which, if the Hawaiian-treaty order had not been made, would have equal privilege. Yet as to all of them the Chair holds that on this day motions to suspend the rules take precedence.

Mr. RANDALL. Then the assignment of the Hawaiian-treaty bill for to-day was of no use.

The SPEAKER. That often happens. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

The question was upon the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CANNON, of Illlnois. Is it in order to offer an amendment to or to debate this bill?

The SPEAKER. Neither is in order at this time. Nothing is in order but to vote upon the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. EDEN. Upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays; and upon a division there were—ayes 27, noes 139, not one-fifth voting in the affirmative.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. HOLMAN called for tellers upon ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. HEREFORD were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 42, noes 141.

So (one-fifth voting in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 171, nays 50, not voting 68; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Ainsworth, Atkins, Bagby, George A. Bagley, John H. Bagley, jr., William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Banning, Barnum, Blaine, Bradford, Bradley, Bright, William R. Brown, Buckner, Samuel D. Burchard, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Campbell, Candler, Cason, Cate, Caulfield, Chittenden, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Herr Smith, William E. Smith, Sparks, Stone, Stowell, Swann, Martin I. Townsend, Charles C. B. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walls, Ward, G. Wiley Wells, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, Wigginton, James D. Williams, Benjamin Wilson, and Alan Wood, jr.—68.

So (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill passed.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. NEW. I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana, is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. JAMES B. REILLY. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. ALAN WOOD, who is absent by leave of the House. I do not know how he would vote on this question if present, and therefore I prefer not to vote.

Mr. BOONE. My colleague, Mr. BROWN, of Kentucky, is absent by leave of the House on account of sickness.

Mr. WALKER, of Virginia. My colleague, Judge HARRIS, has retired to his room on account of illness.

Mr. TEESE. Two of my colleagues, Mr. HARDENBERGH and Mr. ROSS, of New Jersey, are absent on account of a death in Mr. ROSS's family. They would each vote "ay," if present.

Mr. CABELL. My colleagues, Mr. DOUGLAS and Mr. HUNTON, are absent by leave of the House. If they were here, I think they would vote "ay."

Mr. CANDLER. I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. BLOUNT, is absent on account of sickness of himself. If present, he would vote "ay."

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. On this question I am paired with Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi. If he were here, he would vote "ay" and I should vote "no."

Mr. HARTZELL. My colleague, Mr. SPARKS, is absent by leave of the House.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WOOD, of New York, obtained the floor, and said: I have sought the floor for the purpose of moving that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole to resume the consideration of the bill to carry into effect the Hawaiian treaty; but, before making that motion, I will yield to several gentlemen, first to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL.]

EVENING SESSIONS.

Mr. RANDALL submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the rules be suspended so as to enable the House to take a recess daily for three days of the present week, to wit, Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, at half past four o'clock p. m. until half past seven o'clock p. m., for the purpose of considering the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

CONVENTION WITH VENEZUELA.

Mr. LORD, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered and adopted:

Resolved, That the President of the United States, if not incompatible with the public interest, be requested to inform this House as to what measures have been adopted to enforce the provisions of the following bill:

An act to enforce the stipulations of the convention with Venezuela of April 25, 1866, and the payment of adjudicated claims.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the adjudication of claims by the convention with Venezuela of April 25, 1866, pursuant to the terms of the said convention, is hereby recognized as final and conclusive, and to be held as valid and subsisting against the republic of Venezuela.

Approved February 25, 1873.

RIGHT OF PETITION BY ARMY OFFICERS, ETC.

Mr. SEELYE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Whereas in the testimony taken before the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department it appears that an order was issued from the War Department dated March 15, 1873, which directed, first, that no officer, active or retired, shall, directly or indirectly, without being called upon by proper authority, solicit, suggest, or recommend action by members of Congress for or against military affairs; second, all petitions to Congress by officers relative to subjects of a military character will be forwarded through the General of the Army and Secretary of War for their action and transmittal: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and hereby are, directed to inquire and report to this House at any time, by bill or otherwise, if any additional legislation is necessary to define the relation of the Army to Congress, and to secure to officers of the Army and soldiers the rights of petition which belong to every citizen.

E. O'M. CONDON.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois, moved a suspension of the rules and the adoption of the following resolution; which (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) was agreed to:

Whereas it is alleged that E. O'M. Condon, a naturalized citizen of the United States, is held in imprisonment by the British government for a political offense: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Affairs be directed to inquire into the cause of the imprisonment of said E. O'M. Condon by the British government, and report to this House by bill or otherwise such steps, if any, which should be taken by the Federal Government in behalf of said E. O'M. Condon to secure his release from imprisonment and return to his adopted country.

HAWAIIAN TREATY.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to resume the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 612) in relation to the Hawaiian treaty.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SAYLER in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 612) to carry into effect a convention between the United States and His Majesty the King of the Hawaiian Islands, signed on the 30th day of January, 1875.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BANKS addressed the committee in favor of the bill. Before he had concluded, (his time having been twice extended,)

Mr. WOOD, of New York, said: As the hour for the recess is near at hand, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] yields to me to move that the committee rise, in order that the House may extend the session.

The motion of Mr. WOOD, of New York, that the committee rise was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. SPRINGER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SAYLER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 612) to carry into effect a convention between the United States of America and His Majesty the King of the Hawaiian Islands, signed on the 30th day of January, 1875, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the evening session of to-day be dispensed with, upon the understanding that this bill is to be disposed of to-night and that Thursday evening be substituted for to-night in the resolution which I offered to-day in regard to evening sessions.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. Do I understand that we now proceed to finish the bill before we adjourn?

Mr. KELLEY. If it is to be voted on to-night we may be obliged to have a call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] asks a modification of the order previously made to-day, so as to dispense with the recess to-day and substitute a session on Thursday night of this week for the session to-night, in order to enable the House to proceed at this time with the consideration of the bill to carry into effect the Hawaiian treaty. If there be no objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

During the remarks of Mr. BANKS,

The SPEAKER took the chair and said: The Chair desires to request unanimous consent that the committee now rise, in order that the Committee on Enrolled Bills may report and the Speaker sign two bills, one of which, relating to limitations in criminal cases, the public interest requires may become a law at the earliest possible moment.

There was no objection.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 1118) granting a pension to Mrs. Jane Dulaney; and

An act (H. R. No. 2655) to amend section 1044 of the Revised Statutes relating to limitations in criminal cases.

SUBSIDIARY SILVER COIN.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, a bill (H. R. No. 2450) to provide for a deficiency in the Printing and Engraving Bureau of the Treasury Department and for the issue of silver coin of the United States in place of fractional currency.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask unanimous consent that the bill just received from the Senate, with amendments, be taken from the Speaker's table, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

HAWAIIAN TREATY.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I now move that the House again resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, to resume the consideration of the bill to carry into effect the Hawaiian treaty.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. SAYLER in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 612) to carry into effect a convention between the United States of America and His Majesty the King of the Hawaiian Islands, signed on the 30th day of January, 1875.

[Mr. BANKS resumed and concluded his remarks, which are withheld for revision. [His speech in full will appear in the Appendix.]

Mr. TUCKER obtained the floor.

Mr. MORRISON. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose and Mr. SPRINGER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SAYLER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 612) to carry into effect a convention between the United States of America and His Majesty the King of the Hawaiian Islands, signed on the 30th day of January, 1875, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. KELLEY. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. ADAMS: The petition of John F. G. Lyons, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WELLS, of Missouri: Resolutions of the Cotton Exchange of Saint Louis, recognizing the Signal Service as an important branch of the Government service, to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. WHITING: The petition of publishers, stationers, and printers, of Peoria, Illinois, for the discontinuance of printing address-cards on envelopes, postal cards, and newspaper wrappers by the Government, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. WOODWORTH: The petition of W. H. Schmick and 108 other citizens, of Canfield, Ohio, for the repeal of the act of January 14, 1875, known as the act for the resumption of specie payments, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. YOUNG: The petition of William McK. Hall, for the reopening of the examination of a claim disallowed by the southern claims commission, to the Committee on War Claims.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, April 11, 1876.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, for the information of the Committee on Military Affairs, a report of Major Thomas M. Vincent, Assistant Adjutant-General, on Senate bill No. 637, to provide for the payment of bounties, &c., to colored soldiers and sailors and their heirs; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with the provisions of paragraph 10 of the fourth section of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1875, the report of Major C. B. Comstock, Corps of Engineers, showing the progress made by Mr. James B. Eads in the improvement of the South Pass of the Mississippi River since his report to the Senate of the 13th of December last up to February 7, 1876; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. DAVIS. I present the petition of Joseph Pitzell, of New Creek, West Virginia, praying for compensation for certain damages done during the war. The papers in this case are at the War Department; and the petition further prays that they may be withdrawn by the committee. I think the claim a meritorious one, and I commend it to the Committee on Claims, to whom I move its reference.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KERNAN presented resolutions of the Maritime Association of New York, in favor of legislative action fixing the permanency of the Signal Service, and in favor of the plan of organization approved by the Chief Signal Officer in his last annual report; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HOWE. I present a petition from a large number of printers, stationers, and lithographers of the State of Wisconsin, who say that the Government is doing their work and doing it for less than they can and for less than the Government can without loss; and they desire to be protected against the competition of the Government. I move its reference to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WADLEIGH presented the memorial of Nathan Mansur and other citizens of New Hampshire, remonstrating against any change in the law providing for the payment of pensions at specified localities throughout the country; which was referred to the Select Committee to Examine the Several Branches of the Civil Service.

Mr. BOGY presented a memorial of citizens of Saint Louis, Missouri, remonstrating against any change in the tariff laws; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, presented the petition of Moses B. Bliss and others, of Augusta, Maine, praying for the adoption of a new uniform decimal system of weights and measures throughout the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Maine, in favor of the repeal of all laws now in existence in relation to the French metric system of weights and measures; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HAMILTON presented two petitions of citizens of Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of a law to regulate commerce and prohibit unjust discriminations by common carriers; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. STEVENSON presented the memorial of tobacco manufacturers of Cincinnati, Ohio, and Covington, Kentucky, in favor of a reduction of the tax on tobacco to sixteen cents; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE OF PETITIONS.

Mr. INGALLS. On the 30th of March five petitions of citizens of Pennsylvania, praying that the tariff laws may remain undisturbed, were by some mistake or inadvertence referred to the Committee on Pensions. I move that that committee be discharged from their consideration, and that they be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the memorial of Burr S. Craft, of Norfolk, Virginia, praying the passage of a law authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to him the sum of $5,000, being the amount of a coin certificate alleged to have been stolen from him, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

Mr. MERRIMON, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1922) providing for the recording of deeds, mortgages, and other conveyances affecting real estate in the District of Columbia, reported it with amendments.

Mr. KERNAN, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1807) for the relief of Anthony Lawson, surviving partner of the firm of Lawson & Brewis, of Alexandria, Virginia, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2951) to provide for the separate entry of express packages contained in one importation, reported it with amendments.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Charles B. Phillips, praying to be allowed a share of the avails of the one-third part of the wharf-boat D. G. Fowler, forfeited under act of Congress of August 6, 1861, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. No. 720) for the relief of Charles B. Phillips.

The bill was read and passed to the second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2572) to protect witnesses who shall be required to testify in certain cases, have directed me to report the bill with a written report adverse to its passage. We recommend that the bill be indefinitely postponed, but do not ask action now; let it be placed upon the Calendar.

Mr. STEVENSON. I desire to present the views of the minority of the committee on the bill referred to by the chairman of the committee, to be printed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask that the majority and minority reports may be printed together for the use of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be printed with the views of the minority, under the rule.

FOREIGN GOODS AT THE CENTENNIAL.

Mr. COOPER. I am instructed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2934) to provide for the expenses of admission of foreign goods to the centennial exposition at Philadelphia, to report it without amendment, with the recommendation that it pass, and to ask for its present consideration.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it had better go over till to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont objects.

Mr. COOPER. I will suggest to the Senator from Vermont that the goods are now being received, and it is important if the bill passes at all that it should be passed now.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is nothing but an appropriation necessary for receiving the centennial goods.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that all? Nothing but an appropriation! I will hear it read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It appropriates $40,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, for the purpose of examination and appraisement and for the incidental expenses connected with the admission of foreign goods to the centennial exhibition at Philadelphia.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HOWE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 721) to provide for cheap transportion of freight between tide-water, on or near the Atlantic Ocean, and the Ohio and Mississippi Valleys; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. HOWE. I present this bill at the request of other parties. I have not examined it thoroughly. I am inclined to think there are some decided merits in the bill from the examination that I have given it. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Railroads.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 722) for the relief of Charles F. Chandler; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying petition, referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. WRIGHT (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 723) for the relief of Nannie Hall; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. INGALLS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 724) granting arrears and increase of pension to Francis A. Liebschutz, of Company K, Ninth Kansas Volunteer Cavalry; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 725) for the relief of settlers on the Osage ceded lands in Kansas; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DAVIS (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 726) to fix and determine the relative rank of officers in the several corps of the Navy; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ACCOUNTS OF SOUTHERN RAILROADS.

Mr. EDMUNDS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, directed to inform the Senate whether any, and if so what, action has been taken under the act approved February 27, 1875, entitled "An act to provide for settlement with certain railway companies," and that he report such action in detail.

And that he also inform the Senate of the circumstances under which the Western and Atlantic Railway of Georgia was taken possession of by the United States in the year 1864; what was its condition at that time; how long it was kept in the possession of the United States, and what was its condition when such possession ceased; the person or corporation to whom it was relinquished; the kind and value of rolling-stock and other property of the United States, if any, sold in connection with the relinquishment of said road; and whether such property was appraised, and if so, by what persons; and whether there is any, and if so what, evidence in the possession of the War Department tending to show that any such appraisal was excessive; whether any allowance was made to the United States, or compensation in any manner received by it for any improvements or repairs of said railway; and if any property was sold by the United States on the occasion aforesaid, whether the same has been fully paid for, and to what amount, and in what way. And that he further report any correspondence in possession of the Department on the subject.

GEORGETOWN RESERVOIR.

Mr. EDMUNDS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be instructed to inquire, and report as soon as may be, whether the distributing reservoir of the water-works near Georgetown is properly protected from the wash and drainage of the highway and grounds adjacent thereto; and that they report by bill or otherwise.

MUTUAL FIRE-INSURANCE COMPANY.

Mr. INGALLS. On the 4th of the present month, I believe, the Senate considered House bill No. 700 to incorporate the Mutual Protection Fire-Insurance Company of the District of Columbia; and upon the vote on its passage the bill was rejected. I ask unanimous consent that the action of the Senate on that bill may be reconsidered, and that the bill lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Being a House bill, it is not in the possession of the Senate. It has been sent to the House of Representatives, and it will be necessary to request that the bill be returned to the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. If that is necessary, I ask that a request may be sent to have the bill returned from the other House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas modifies his motion. Is there unanimous consent to have the vote reconsidered, a request made for the return of the bill, and that the bill lie on the table when returned? The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

REPAVEMENT OF PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE.

Mr. DORSEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 680.

Mr. ANTHONY. The last time the Calendar was up, a bill was reached which had been reported by me, and I was in hopes that we would proceed with the Calendar at the conclusion of the morning business to-day. Is the bill which the Senator from Arkansas wishes to call up one likely to lead to debate?

Mr. DORSEY. I think not. It is a bill authorizing the repavement of Pennsylvania avenue. Let it be read any way.

By unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 680) authorizing the repavement of Pennsylvania avenue was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The first section appoints Brigadier-General A. A. Humphreys, Chief of Engineers, General H. G. Wright, General Q. A. Gillmore, of the Engineer Corps of the United States Army, a commission to select and determine the best kind of pavement, other than wood or stone, to be used in paving Pennsylvania avenue, and to have that thoroughfare paved therewith from the northwest gate of the Capitol grounds to and including the crossing of Fifteenth street west, with such a pavement as they, or a majority of the commission, may agree upon.

The second section provides that within ten days after the passage of the act, or as soon thereafter as may be, the commission shall meet and organize by the election of a president and secretary from among their number, and shall proceed to perform the duties imposed upon them; and within ten days after they have determined upon the pavement to be used, shall contract for the paving of the Avenue between the points named on the lowest and most favorable terms possible. The pavement shall be of the best material, laid in the most substantial manner, and without unnecessary delay; and a good and sufficient bond, with sureties, to be approved by the commission, is to be exacted, guaranteeing that the terms of the contract shall be strictly and faithfully observed.

The third section directs the cost of laying down the pavement to be paid for in the following proportions and manner: The Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company shall bear all of the expense for that portion of the work lying between the tracks of their road and for a distance of two feet from the track on each side thereof, which shall be paved with square blocks of stone, to be approved by the commission; but the company may pave the space between their tracks as above set forth under the supervision of the commission; by the owners of private property lying and abutting on Pennsylvania avenue, in proportion to their frontage thereon, one-third of the expense, after deducting the amount paid by the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company; one-third to be paid by the United States out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; and the remaining one-third to be paid out of the general revenue of the District of Columbia from any funds in the hands of the commissioners or the treasury of the District.

Section 4 directs the assessments contemplated in the foregoing section to be made by the commission, and the sums so found due to be collected by the collector of the District of Columbia and paid into the Treasury of the United States, where it is to be held as a special fund for the specific purpose named; and such fund, together with such sum as shall be found to be due and payable from the United States for its proportion of the cost of said pavement, shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury to the contractors for the work authorized, on the warrant or order of the commission, in such amounts and at such times as they may deem safe and proper in view of the progress of the work.

By the fifth section it is provided that the cost of laying down the pavement, including the removal of the present pavement, grading the Avenue, and all other work and materials necessary to fully complete it for use, shall not exceed the sum of $4.60 per square yard. The commission is to have power to contract for the repair and maintenance of the pavement for a period not exceeding ten years, and at no greater cost than 3 per cent. of the original cost.

Section 6 provides that if the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company, or any private citizen or other corporation or person, shall neglect or refuse to pay the amount assessed for the paving herein authorized, (within thirty days after the notification of such assessment shall have been left at the property assessed,) in front of or adjoining their property, when the work so fronting or adjoining their property shall have been completed to the satisfaction of the commission and assessed by them, the commission shall issue certificates of indebtedness against the property, which certificates shall bear interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum until paid, and which, until they are paid, shall be a lien upon the property on or against which they are issued. If these certificates are not paid within one year, the commission shall, upon the application of the holder thereof, proceed to sell the property against which they are issued, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the tax, such sales to be first duly advertised, daily, for three successive weeks, in some newspaper published in the city of Washington, and to be made at public auction to the highest bidder; and a deed given by the commission is to be deemed and held to be a good and perfect title to any property bought at such sale; but the owner of the real estate shall have the right to redeem the property sold by paying the amount of purchase-money and 20 per cent. on the amount of the purchase within one year from the date of the sale.

Section 7 provides that the old pavement, to be removed as provided in the act, shall be delivered to the authorities of the District of Columbia, for such disposition as they see fit to make.

The bill was reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment was read, being in section 3, after the word "may," in line 9, to insert "select the material with which to pave their tracks, and may;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That the said railroad company may select the material with which to pave their tracks, and may pave the space between their tracks as above set forth under the supervision of said commission.

Mr. DORSEY. Before acting on that, I move that the word "square," in section 3, line 7, be stricken out and the word "rectangular" inserted, so as to read: "which shall be paved with rectangular blocks of stone."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DORSEY. In the same section, lines 9 and 10, I move to strike out the words in italics.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Those are words reported to be inserted by the committee. You want the amendment disagreed to.

Mr. DORSEY. Very well; let the amendment be disagreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment reported by the committee in the proviso is to insert after the word "may," in line 9 of section 3, the words "select the material with which to pave their tracks, and may."

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was after the word "District," at the end of section 3, to insert "upon the warrants or orders of said commission."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, it seems to me that there ought to be added to that the usual phrase for having these accounts audited in the Treasury Department, just as in the case of other disbursements by public officers. I have the greatest possible respect for this commission that is here named, and would trust those gentlemen as soon as anybody in the world that I know of; but I think that the regular form of having all disbursements finally subjected to the scrutiny of the Treasury Department is a very wise one; and I therefore move to add to this amendment these words: "when the same shall have been passed in the Treasury Department, as in case of the disbursement of public moneys," so as to put it into the regular form.

Mr. DORSEY. I have no objection to that.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The next amendment reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia was at the end of section 5 to insert the words "per annum;" so as to read:

And at no greater cost than 3 per cent. of the original cost per annum.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That term "per annum" I think ought to go in after the word "cent.," in line 9, so as to read "3 per cent. per annum of the original cost."

Mr. DORSEY. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The words will be so transposed, if there be no objection.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 7, after the word "such," in line 3, to insert the words "use or," so as to read "for such use or disposition as they see fit to make."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Arkansas whether this bill authorizes the pavement of the entire street, including the present sidewalk, or whether it is intended to confine it to the roadway? Because if it is intended to extend to the sidewalk as well, it would be necessary to change the authority to use stone,

Mr. DORSEY. It is simply to pave the street, the carriage-way.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it ought to be expressed, because the authority in this general language would extend to the full width of Pennsylvania avenue. It ought to be confined to the roadway of Pennsylvania avenue. I move to insert the word "roadway" in line 8 of section 1.

Mr. DORSEY. I suggest that the amendment read "between the curbs."

Mr. SHERMAN. Well, "between the curb-stones of Pennsylvania avenue." Any language that carries out the idea will satisfy me.

Mr. EDMUNDS. "Roadway" is a good word.

Mr. DAWES. The clearest form is "not including the sidewalks." That is more definite.

Mr. SHERMAN. "To be used in paving Pennsylvania avenue, not including the sidewalks."

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I would like to inquire of the Senator who has charge of this bill whether the bill provides for the expense of paving of the railroad-way, that part of the avenue occupied by the street railroad?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I will say to the Senator from Maine that I have just handed an amendment to the Senator from Arkansas, which he will present, providing for that.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will put my amendment in this form: In line 8, section 1, after the word "avenue" insert the words "not including the sidewalks."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator frem Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEST. I should like to call the attention of the Senator who has charge of this bill to the somewhat extraordinary provisions in section 2, commencing on line 6, which compel this commission to contract within ten days after they have determined upon the proper material to be used in paving this avenue. The section compels them to make a contract within ten days. They might determine upon some material to be used by some party who would have no notice of the contract or of the intention to give it out. Nor is there any provision made for giving public notice to bidders, or requiring this commission to advertise their intention to pave the avenue. It merely compels them to select the material, and then requires them to contract within ten days. I do not think that provision ought to meet the approbation of the Senate, unless there is a satisfactory explanation given in regard to it by the Senator having charge of the bill.

Mr. DORSEY. In presenting this section the committee on the District of Columbia have copied almost verbatim a section of the law under which the Avenue was paved once or twice before; and we assumed that before these commissioners determine the sort of pavement they want they would listen to nearly all those who have pavements, asphaltum, stone, or any other sort, and that they would determine, by actual examination of the different patents, which one should be selected. They would first ask for competition, ask to have the different sorts of pavements submitted to them. When that has been done, they will then determine whether they will accept any one of those proposed or not. But, to meet the objection of the Senator from Louisiana, I suggest that after the words "ten days" the words "or as soon thereafter as may be" be inserted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. "Or as soon as practicable."

Mr. DORSEY. Very well. I will move to insert those words, "or as soon as practicable," after the word "days."

Mr. WEST. That will do.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend in line 7 of section 1 by striking out the words "or stone." As the bill now stands there is excluded from the consideration of this commission wood pavement and stone pavement, and that leaves nothing but mother-earth and asphalt that we know of.

Mr. INGALLS. Macadam.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is stone. I think that these gentlemen ought to be authorized, inasmuch as we have had such misfortune with this street and its pavement hitherto under the contract system, to consider at least whether it will not be the wisest thing to put down a stone pavement of square blocks, such as in a great many cities is thought on the whole to be the best for permanent and heavy traffic. I do not know that it is the best. I am rather inclined myself to believe that a really good asphalt will on the whole be the best; but I do not think we ought to make the bill so that these gentlemen are confined practically to the consideration of nothing else than an asphalt pavement, and for that reason I move to strike out the words "or stone," so that there will be nothing excluded from their consideration except wood, which I am quite ready to condemn.

Mr. WHYTE. I hope that amendment will prevail. I rose a moment ago to make identically the same proposition, and it occurred to me from reading the very report of the committee in this case. I will ask the attention of the Senate to Lieutenant Hoxie's report on the subject, which is on the second page of the report made by the committee in this case, in which he says expressly:

> I should recommend, however, that proposals be invited for pavements of every kind except wood, and that bidders be required to make their proposals upon blank forms prepared in such a manner as to compel a complete description of the pavement and of its cost, so that a careful comparison can be made of their relative merits.

It struck me on reading the bill that there was no use in having such a commission as the bill provides for, composed of such prominent gentlemen, if they were to be left to but one kind of pavement. I hope therefore that the proposition of the Senator from Vermont will be adopted by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.]

Mr. INGALLS. I certainly hope this amendment will not be adopted. It was the purpose of the committee, as the Senator from Vermont has intimated, to exclude the material of wood and stone from the consideration of this commission, believing as the committee did that the experience of the different pavements used and employed in this city was such as to condemn the use either of wood or stone upon Pennsylvania avenue.

While it is true that it does in terms confine the material to be employed to concrete or asphalt alone, yet the Senate is undoubtedly aware that there are some twenty different kinds of asphalt or concrete pavement, under as many different patents. The committee were not able, of course, to give an exhaustive examination to this subject, but from the best information they could obtain, it was believed that stone in the form usually employed, that of the Belgian or square-block pavement, was specially adapted to heavy draught and commercial traffic; that in addition to its unnecessary expense, it being the most costly kind of pavement that can be employed, it was also a very noisy, and, in that respect, undesirable for that avenue. Of course, Pennsylvania avenue is not used generally for heavy traffic, or for commercial purposes; it is pre-eminently a driving thoroughfare; the great amount of business transacted on that street is retail, and the committee were not able to see that there was any necessity for the employment of stone, considering the objections that have been supposed to exist to its use. Concrete seemed to the committee to combine in an eminent degree all the requisites necessary for a pavement upon Pennsylvania avenue, and I trust that the Senate will see the propriety of confining the material that is to be considered by the commission to what is known as asphalt or concrete, inasmuch as when it is properly laid it is the least expensive and has been shown by experience in this city to be very serviceable and very durable.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I simply desire to suggest that it would be almost impossible to build any road that would be a proper road at all without having it partly composed of stone. I think it would be well to amend this bill in such a way as to exclude cobble-stones and square blocks of stone from consideration; but all good road-beds are made of stone. The road-beds of the roads in Central Park are made in that way, and among them are some of the best roads we have in our country. Even the concrete that the Senator from Kansas speaks upon is laid upon a stone road-bed. I think the amendment should be made to simply exclude cobble-stones or block stones. It is barely possible that this commission might find that a Macadam road was the best road; but as the bill stands now it confines them to asphalt, and even an asphalt road could not be made without stone, as I suggested before.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I am very willing to vote for this amendment for the reason which the Senator from Rhode Island has stated, if in fact his understanding of these words as they are be the understanding which they bear. If it is true that the bill as reported would prevent the commission from considering the propriety of a Macadam way, certainly I would vote for any change which would enable them to consider Macadam. If, however, the purpose of the amendment, or its effect would be to suggest seriously to the commission that Pennsylvania avenue ought to be paved with any kind of stone that I know of (and I know something about many kinds of stone used as pavement,) and especially if the effect were to be to suggest that square blocks ought to be laid down as a pavement on Pennsylvania avenue, for one I would never vote for that. There may be streets on this continent and elsewhere trampled by ponderous traffic which ought to be paved, in the latitude where they are, with square blocks, although those blocks come to be almost as glary as ice, and although whenever they are moist and the mercury is below the freezing point they are as insecure as ice, with unevenness beside which ice might not have, and although they become the constant theater of danger and of injury to the animals which travel them, which nobody can look on unmoved. I often stand in the streets of New York, where the best sort of square blocks that have yet been found have been put down as pavement, and you need not select even a rainy day or even a time when the pores of the stone are filled with congealed moisture to see horse after horse tumble down and to see the very great imperfection of such a pavement as compared with almost any other.

I should not be in favor of inducing any commission to pave Pennsylvania avenue with cobble-stones; and, for reasons perhaps not quite so strong but equally clear, I would vote for nothing leading to a block pavement, whether it be a Russ pavement, or a Belgian pavement, or a pavement made of square blocks of one size or another size. I think one remark made by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] disposes of the whole thing. This is not a street in which ponderous transportation is chiefly to take place, and therefore some way, be it MacAdam in its foundation, or asphalt, or something of the various other sorts which have been suggested and which are found desirable for such purposes, ought to be selected, and never, I believe, any wooden pavements that I know anything about. I do not forget that there are various stones, Medina sandstone for example—a very familiar stone in my own State—which has too much silex and grit to wear smooth, as lime-stone does, and many of the other kinds of stone used. That very fact makes it inevitable that a pavement made of these blocks becomes uneven at once, and, before it is much worn, almost as disagreeable to pass over with any rapidity as a corduroy road. There is no stone pavement that I know anything about—and I have looked with some care at all the kinds of stone pavement in the region in which I live—which is fit, in my opinion, to be adopted on this street, and none for which I would vote; and, therefore, if any turn is to be given to this language which is likely to induce the commission to select a stone pavement, for one I am against it, whatever kind the pavement may be.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not make this motion for any such purpose, and I think the Senator from New York will see on looking at the way the bill will read after striking out these words that no such construction can be put upon it. It merely leaves it to the judgment of the commission to cover the whole subject, except that they are excluded from putting in wood, to which I believe everybody agrees, because it will not last.

There is a great deal in what the Senator says; and I stated myself that, while I did not wish to exclude some form of stoneway, either of blocks or Macadam, or whatever it may be, I did wish to provide, so far as my present opinion goes, for an asphalt pavement; but I do not think that we have the time and the opportunity to determine finally and for once and all that it should be of asphalt. If you strike out these words Macadam may be considered; and it is used in the streets of some of the cities, a fine kind of Macadam, which seems to be admirable except in respect of the wash; it requires some trouble to keep it in order; but it is probably the finest sort of pavement in the world in any climate like this. Of course in a very cold climate it might be different, Striking out these words, they would be left then to consider Macadam, and to consider asphalt and everything else except wood.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I would suggest to the Senator, instead of striking out those words, to qualify the word "stone" by saying "of cobble or block stone."

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not want to hamper their judgment; they are three very eminent engineers, as we can see, and they will be quite as likely to do what shall be satisfactory to the average sense of the people who are to be affected and those who have judgment upon it as can be possible.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I hope this section will be amended so as to do away with the possibility of having a cobble or block-stone payment on the Avenue. These are eminent engineers, I know, but they may be favorable to block stone, though it is not likely that they would be favorable to cobble-stone. It would be easy to amend the bill by inserting in the seventh line the words "block or cobble" before "stone." I move to amend by inserting "block or cobble" before "stone."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.]

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I would be very unwilling that Pennsylvania avenue should be paved with any kind of stone, and for the reason that I believe that the prices of asphalt or concrete have gone down so low now as to be obtainable at much less price than heretofore. The ordinary concrete that has been used is not good enough; but the better qualities of concrete, such as the Neuchâtel, can now be obtained for about half what they could be formerly; and such concrete as is used in many of our streets can be had for less than half what was paid heretofore. Therefore there is no necessity of using anything except the very best kind of asphalt, which can be obtained at a much less rate than stone of any sort and would be far superior.

Mr. DORSEY. To meet the objections of the Senator from Vermont and other Senators, I move to amend in line 7 after the word "wood" by inserting "block or cobble."

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. That is the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. BURNSIDE.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.] These are separate amendments.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will withdraw my amendment so as to let the other be put.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont withdraws his amendment, and the question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. BURNSIDE,] which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed after the word "or," in line 7 of section 1, to insert "block or cobble;" so as to read:

To select and determine the best kind of pavement other than wood or block or cobble stone.

Mr. LOGAN. I have not taken any part in this matter, and do not desire to do so; but I should like to ask a question. If wood is to be excepted and stone is to be excepted——

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Only a particular kind of stone, block and cobble stone.

Mr. LOGAN. I thought from the reading that a particular character of pavement was to be put down.

Mr. WHYTE. I wish to inquire what sort of stone that would leave the commission to select. If block and cobble stone are to be excluded, what stone is left?

Mr. BURNSIDE. Broken stone as the road-bed.

Mr. WHYTE. That is so entirely out of fashion, that I do not think any intelligent man would use it now.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Some of the best roadways in the country have that foundation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. BURNSIDE.]

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now I move to strike out the words "or stone."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

The question being put; there were on a division—ayes 14, noes 17; no quorum voting.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a quorum present. The Chair will put the question again.

Mr. WITHERS. There is some misapprehension here as to what is the exact amendment pending.

Mr. WHYTE. There is a misunderstanding as to the effect of the amendment. Some gentlemen on this side of the Chamber seem to suppose that by voting against this amendment they are really leaving the question open to the commission; whereas those voting in the negative are taking that question away from the commission.

Mr. WITHERS. Let the amendment be reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 7 of section 1, after the word "wood," strike out the words "or stone;" so as to read:

To select and determine the best kind of pavement, other than wood, to be used in paving Pennsylvania avenue.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If I correctly understand the present attitude of the question, the Senate refused to agree to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island to insert "block or cobble."

Mr. CONKLING. I beg to say to the Senator although his statement is formally correct, it is true of me, for example, and of several Senators who sit around me, that we did not understand what the question was at the moment and we did not vote; and I am inclined to think that if the Senator from Rhode Island had asked for a division or for the yeas and nays, the Senate would not have done what the Senator from Vermont very truly says it did do.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know; I am merely stating the present attitude of the question, that we now propose by refusing to strike out these words to leave the exclusion of every kind of stone which would cover the Macadam pavement just as the bill stands, so that the commissioners would have no power to lay down a Macadam road if they should think best. Now I suggest that, if the Senate will agree to strike out these words "or stone," we can then, if the question was not well understood before when we voted upon the qualifying words, move to insert after the word "wood" the words "block or cobble stones" again as filling a blank.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I would suggest to the Senator from Vermont that if he will withdraw his amendment, I will make a motion that the section be amended by inserting before the word "stone" the words "cobble or block."

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is exactly the amendment the Senate has rejected.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. No, it was the other way. It was "block or cobble." [Laughter.]

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator may see the difference, but I do not. My perception is not sufficiently acute to see that. I think I will stand on this amendment for the time being, and take the sense of the Senate upon it. Then if the Senate choose to insert what the Senator from New Jersey suggests, it can be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.]

The amendment was agreed to; their being on a division—ayes 25, noes 14.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I move now to insert the words "or cobble or block stone" after "wood."

Mr. OGLESBY. I suppose the object of the Senate in making arrangements to pave Pennsylvania avenue is to leave this commission of three engineers who are named in the bill to decide upon what the pavement shall be. Then why exclude anything in this bill? Why exclude wood? Why exclude stone? Why exclude metal? Why exclude cobble-stone? For my own part, if I voted to exclude anything, I should exclude wood, mineral, cobble-stone, asphaltum, and everything but common dirt. I think that would be a first-rate highway for Pennsylvania avenue under the circumstances, [laughter,] good enough, plenty good enough for the people who have made it the way it is. For my part, I would not care much whether they had one or not. It is disgusting to look at it the way it is now; but I am glad that it is to be built, of whatever material, under a new management and by a different commission. I suppose the Government, if I read the bill right, is to pay one-third of the expense of this new pavement or more, certainly not less than that. It seems to be the opinion that there should be a new highway here or that the highway of the Avenue should be put in better condition. It is a failure as it is.

There is no more inconvenient or disagreeable highway in the United States to pass over to-day than Pennsylvania avenue. It is an exhibition to the human eye of the greatest fraud that has been perpetrated for a quarter of a century—in the very building of it. It is a disgusting spectacle in all its associations and sights. The burden comes back on the Government now to fix it up and build it over again. I do not know how much it will cost; but, if we are going to leave it to this commission, to these civil engineers, if Congress is going to make up its mind to leave it to them, why not leave it untrammeled as to material and all? Why exclude wood? Why exclude stone of any kind, or gravel, or asphalt, or any other material? Why should Congress undertake to partially define what the material shall be or what it shall not be? We are going to leave it to a commission of three competent engineers, I doubt not; and, so far as I have any opinion at all, I have one that it will be pretty tolerably, fairly, and honestly built this time. I think that probably will turn out to be true. But why should we undertake to put any limitations upon it? I do not like a cobble-stone highway. I think what the Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] said this morning on that subject was elegant and very much to the point. Horses are not the only animals that have fallen down in New York on slippery stones, [laughter,] and I would not like to see that sort of an avenue in this city. I do not like it. Neither do I know that the common asphaltum that is used now in the streets and highways will be sufficient. I am not sufficiently familiar with the subject to say. Unless I get to voting here merely for a preference for some man's material to be put down or on some new-fangled notion about a new pavement for a highway, I do not feel that I am a competent judge as to the material that should go down; and I do not like to vote to put any restriction in this bill on the discretion of the commission here named. Why not leave it without any restriction? Why not leave it to them? Is it not most likely that they will select the best material? Wood may turn out under all the circumstances to be better than anything else. Asphaltum may be better; gravel may be better; stone may be better. Here is a commission that must pass on the material. Why not let them pass on it without any restriction at all in the bill? I do not see that we ought to go into this subject of material. I would not put down a cobble-stone pavement, if I had it to build; but I would not rely on my own judgment; I would not ask the Senate to do it.

I believe these engineers, under the admonitions they have received and that the country generally has received from this body, together with the experience of the last few years about the best material for streets and avenues in this city, will be exceedingly careful about the material they put down on Pennsylvania avenue. It is the main artery of this city and destined to be. The city is not to grow very much for years to come; many of the lots here will remain unoccupied. The hard times that have settled down upon other portions of the country, now that we have ceased to make lavish expenditures in this city, will settle down here. Real-estate speculations will measurably die out. This great capital will come back on to a par with the feelings of other portions of the country. We have all got to travel the same road during these hard times; and we are not in a condition just now to build a magnificent avenue or an expensive one. A cheap and durable material, the cheapest material that is the most durable for this avenue, I doubt not, is what this commission will settle upon. All ideas of splendor and all ideas of magnificence are dying away here as elsewhere. We have got to come back to common soil; we have got to come down to the dirt road; and if it were not for the personal inconvenience it is to me to travel through the mud here I would be very glad if they had such roads here for a while and nothing else. [Laughter.]

It seems to me that we ought to leave this matter to the discretion of the commission. If we are going to the expense of building an avenue from the Capitol to the White House or from the Capitol to the Treasury, if we are going to reconstruct Pennsylvania avenue, and reclothe it, and re-adorn it, polish it up for the centennial year, and have it out with its Sunday clothes on, so that all the world may see what a pretty thing it is, we had better let it be under the control and discretion of this board of civil engineers. So it strikes me. Therefore I am inclined at present to vote against this amendment. I would vote even to strike out the exclusion of wood and stone here.

Mr. EDMUNDS. "Stone" is out.

Mr. OGLESBY. It is simply out in Committee of the Whole; not by the act of the Senate. The safer and better way, it strikes me, is to leave it without limitation at all, for the engineers to settle upon the material to build the highway.

Mr. ALLISON. I voted for the amendment of the Senator from Vermont because I did not wish to restrict the commission, and, on reflection, I think I shall vote against the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island. I have a distinct recollection of being a member of the other branch of Congress when Congress did undertake to regulate this District. The very pavement which my friend from Illinois has so utterly and absolutely condemned is a pavement authorized by act of Congress. Congress itself directed that this pavement should be made of wood, and directed the commission distinctly as to the character of the material, as I recollect the facts, which should be put down on this avenue; and whatever there is of defect in this pavement is to be charged directly to Congress. In addition to that fact, this pavement put down under the direction of Congress is, I believe, the most expensive pavement ever laid down in this city. It cost $3.90 per square yard.

I am opposed to the insertion of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island for another reason. The engineer of this District now has condemned practically the asphalt pavement. He has told us in his last report that of all the pavements laid down in this city, including wood and concrete, the only proper pavement is that called the Neuchâtel; so that if we restrict these commissioners we practically require them to adopt the Neuchâtel pavement, and no other. I have faith that these three eminent engineers will select carefully a proper pavement for this avenue, and I hope they will select the very best pavement that can be made, and notwithstanding our poverty I think the United States Government can afford to pay one-third of the expense of it. And here, while I am on this subject, I desire to say that I think it extremely hard on the property-holders of Pennsylvania avenue to be again assessed to pay one-third of the cost of this pavement. They paid two-thirds of the cost of paving the Avenue under the act which was passed before, and we put down absolutely a worthless pavement. Now at the end of five years we come in and say that the adjacent property-holders shall pay one-third of the cost of this new pavement and that the general property in this city shall pay another third. I do think that it is rather an extreme measure to the people who happen to own property on this wide avenue.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. May I ask the Senator from Iowa if the residents on this avenue have not petitioned for this very repaving?

Mr. ALLISON. This morning is the first knowledge I had of this bill. I merely mention this fact, which is perfectly well known to Senators, that the Avenue is absolutely unfit for travel at this time; it was paved under the supervision of Congress, and the pavement is worthless.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. May I ask the Senator from Iowa another question, as he has mentioned the price of the wood pavement formerly put down, whether he is not aware that the Neuchâtel pavement can be put down a ta less price than was paid for the wood pavement?

Mr. ALLISON. I have no doubt it can; and that is just what I was saying in reference to this matter, that, if we are to take the testimony of the engineer under this bill, as proposed, the only choice there is is the Neuchâtel pavement, because all the concrete pavements have been condemned by the District engineer. I have his report before me, in which he says:

> With the exception of the Neuchâtel pavement, all of the bituminous concretes put down by the board of public works are preparations of the bitumen of coal-tar, containing only a small proportion of mineral tar, varying principally in the quality and proportion of the ingredients and the method of manipulation, and all more or less perishable from the rapid loss of the volatile elements of the artificial bitumen.

So that he practically condemns every pavement in this city, concrete and wood, with the exception of the Neuchâtel. Now we say that this commission shall be confined to concrete pavement, which is virtually saying that if we take concrete we must take Neuchâtel. I am willing to give these eminent engineers a discretion to select the best pavement in their judgment, whether it be stone, wood, or concrete, or whatever.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President, I was somewhat at a loss to know what my friend from Illinois [Mr. OGLESBY] referred to when he spoke of the jobbery and corruption which had surrounded the paving of Pennsylvania avenue. I am not sure that he had an entirely distinct idea himself on that matter. My impression is that he did not know that that avenue was paved under the provisions of a law to be found on page 196 of the sixteenth volume of the Statutes at Large which provided for a commission consisting of the Secretary of the Interior, at that time I think Jacob D. Cox, of Ohio—and I am not aware that any suspicion of corruption ever attached to his name—Brevet Brigadier-General N. Michler, engineer in charge of the public buildings and grounds—and if any one has anything to say against General Michler it might be well to say it expressly; I am not aware that anybody ever charged him before with anything dishonorable—and the mayor of the city of Washington, whose name I do not now remember.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Emery.

Mr. SARGENT. Emery. Under the commission thus organized Pennsylvania avenue was paved prior to the era of scandal under which every decent man, and some indecent men of the country almost, have suffered. It was paved according to the requisitions of this act. The kind of pavement was not named in the act. I think it might be somewhat a matter of curiosity to ascertain why it is, when anything in connection with this District, remote or present, is mentioned, that it is the occasion of a tirade of arraignment of everybody who has ever had anything to do with the administration of its affairs.

Speaking not merely for myself, but for my constituents, I desire to say that we have no wish that Pennsylvania avenue shall be a mere dirt road; we have no desire that any of the roads in this city, any of these beautiful streets, shall be turned back to the condition of irreclaimable muddiness which they were in a few years ago. We have no desire to sell the Dome of this Capitol for old iron or to tear down the pictures and sell them for canvas. We have no wish to go into the nursery business by rooting up the little trees through the public parks and squares and selling them out to replenish the Treasury of the United States. We have some pride in this Capitol, some pride in this city. We desire that it may be beautified, that it may be worthy of a great people of forty millions, and certainly it cannot be said that the Congress of the United States have not taxed the people of this District enough to pay their proportion. Take Pennsylvania avenue, with its broad, vast extent, laid out for the convenience of the Government, the great connecting avenue between the principal Departments and the White House and the Capitol. What city requires accommodations like these for its ordinary business or purposes? And so with all these avenues, made so broad, upon the French system, that there might be certain centers of defense swept by cannon in order to prevent émeutes, a system I believe entirely unnecessary in a republic; but this was the original idea of the Government. It has been maintained down to the present time by keeping these broad avenues. How can the people who live along them keep them in order unless they revert simply to the condition of dirt roads?

I say, sir, speaking for the people of the Pacific coast, farther away from this capital than the people of Illinois, that we have a pride in the history of this spot, a desire for the prosperity of this city, that the Government may do its share, and liberally its share, toward maintaining it in good order, in beautifying it, in laying out walks and squares and streets. I do not believe that the people of the United States or of any State desire that it shall revert to the condition of dirt roads or fall in the contempt which is sometimes poured on the people of this District.

Mr. HAMLIN. I want to express my most hearty concurrence in the views and opinions which have been uttered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] in relation to this bill. I think it is little less than an absolute outrage to impose a tax upon the property-holders along the Avenue again at this time to repave it. It is an avenue for the nation; it is an avenue for the whole city; and I think that the property-holders along it ought not to have that onerous tax imposed upon them.

But I do not rise to discuss the bill or say one word about it. I have allowed it to go on for half an hour after the time had come for the regular order. If the Senate will vote upon it, however, I will not interpose any objection; but if discussion is to continue I must ask the Senate to proceed with the unfinished business, because I want to dispose of that matter to-day.

Mr. OGLESBY. Mr. President——

Mr. HAMLIN. If the Senator is going to talk I ask for the special order.

Mr. OGLESBY. I am not going to talk any length of time.

Mr. HAMLIN. O, well.

Mr. OGLESBY. I did not suppose that the remarks which I submitted this morning upon the bill or the amendments proposed to it would necessarily attract the attention of the Senator from California, [Mr. SARGENT.] I did not certainly desire to disturb his equanimity, nor did I suppose that, if any Senator upon the floor chose to make any remark about the District of Columbia, that Senator would be necessarily expected to rise to defend it. I am very glad to hear what I suppose is absolutely true, that the people of California take a just pride in the capital of the nation. I suppose I might venture to say that for the people of Illinois, though they are usually able to express their feelings about the pride they have in any subject for themselves. I take a pride in the capital of the nation, and I trust a commendable pride. I take such a pride in the capital of this nation as to wish to have the administration of those duties that pertain to it and the local affairs about the capital and in the District above suspicion. I wish that this capital and its administration, too, as a matter of national pride, might be in a condition to-day to escape the criticism and just indignation of every voter in the land. That is the pride that I have in the city, that it may have no blemish either upon its name or its administration. I may differ with the Senator from California in my estimate of its standing to-day. I may have different notions from him as to the idea prevalent in the public mind in regard to the character of the administration that has heretofore characterized the city, but, as a matter of opinion, I say it is most deplorable, if not absolutely detestable. In the remarks that I made this morning I alluded to the pride of our capital, the splendor of our capital. I said I hoped the time would come, and I believe it has come, when the people of this city will feel in common with the mass of the nation, now oppressed, now depressed, that it is high time to turn their thoughts to moderations in expenditures, toward modest deportment, toward common living.

I am a citizen of this Republic and for the time being reside in this city, but most of my life I have had to travel on a dirt road. What is good enough for me is good enough for the Senator from California, for I remember when he and I together slung dirt in the mines of California, and we ought neither of us to be particularly fastidious about the manner of pavements so long as they are comfortable. A large portion of my life was spent in traveling over corduroy bridges, bridges made by throwing fence-rails and poles in the mud; but I am glad we have passed beyond that era. I am glad we have arrived at an era of railroads and that we have highways of the most elegant character. I am glad that the Government has advanced from the old experiences; but because we can have better highways now, because we can have asphaltum pavements and Nicolson pavements and block-stone pavements, because we may be better accommodated now by the advance of civilization, is not any reason why those pavements, whether they be of corduroy or whether they be of cobble-stone or Nicolson or asphaltum, should not be laid in the most economical and honest manner. Nor do I believe from the volumes of testimony that have been thrown before the country by the investigations of this body and the other House, but especially of the Senate, that the management of the public interests of this city can expect to escape the just indignation of the people, or in this body fair and reasonable criticism. I have no feeling of ill-will or unkindness toward the capital of the Republic. I would wish to see the capital of the Republic, like the fame of the Republic, like the character of our institutions, without spot or blemish. I wish there had been no investigations that developed facts to show that a system of corruption had been carried on here absolutely disgusting. I wish there never had been any such investigations, or rather I wish there had been no provocation for such investigations, and I do not think it is untimely in me or unbecoming in me, as a citizen of the nation, to some extent bearing a reasonable proportion of its burdens, to occasionally file my protest in respectful if not in elegant language. I take a just pride in the nation and in its capital.

In regard to the bill I ventured to make the suggestion that we might with safety under the commission named in it leave it without conditions as to the material to be used for the pavement. If I were called upon to execute a duty of that kind I should be wholly unqualified. My opinion here is worth no more than it would be as a private citizen about the material to be put into a pavement, and I feel hesitation in putting amendments upon the bill providing the material to be used or limiting the discretion of the commission which is to select and use that material.

I shall probably vote for the bill. I suppose Pennsylvania avenue must be fixed up; it must be put in a passable condition. I suppose we have met one of those cases again where we must draw upon the Treasury. I suppose we shall have to do it. First it is one thing and then it is another. There is always some demand upon the Treasury. These demand are usually fortified by argument and generally find able defenders. Committees make reports in favor of them based upon evidence; and I must yield to reasonable argument and reasonable truth. Seeing the condition of the Avenue, I suppose it is our duty to put it in a passable state, and I must take the responsibility to vote for some bill, I suppose. I am very sorry indeed that the necessity is upon me to spend another dollar here; but I must meet the responsibility whenever it falls upon me.

Mr. HAMLIN. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine calls for the regular order.

Mr. INGALLS. Will not the Senator from Maine consent to allow the debate to proceed for a certain time, say thirty minutes? It is really very important. If any action is to be taken upon this bill it should be taken quickly. It will require some twenty days' preliminary inquiry before the work can be commenced, and at least ninety days more before the work can be completed. Every day now is very essential, and I wish the Senator from Maine—and I am sure I speak the wishes of the committee—would consent that the debate might continue not to exceed thirty minutes, when, I think, the vote can be taken.

Mr. LOGAN. I would like to ask a question. The Senator from Kansas says it is very important that this bill should pass at once. I would like to know why it is so important. The Avenue is not in such a condition that we cannot drive over it.

Mr. INGALLS. It is important because the avenue is in what is known in law as a founderous condition; and if it were fenced on either side, I think the passers by would be authorized to take down the fence and enter their neighbor's inclosure.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not see that that shows the importance of the immediate passage of the bill. The Avenue is not in such a condition that it is impassable. I travel over the Avenue as other people do, and I find its condition is such that it will certainly last for a few days anyhow. There is no danger of people getting their necks broken for a few days yet, I think. If there is, there are plenty of other streets over which they can pass. I do not see the importance of immediate action; and, if the Senator from Maine proposes to take up his bill, I suggest to him to do so now, for you will not pass this bill in thirty minutes.

Mr. HAMLIN. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine insists on the regular order, which is the unfinished business, Senate bill No. 650.

Mr. INGALLS. Will this bill resume its position as unfinished business after the conclusion of the postal bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will not.

Mr. INGALLS. Then I ask unanimous consent that it may be taken up as the unfinished business at the conclusion of the postal bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the bill pending before the unfinished business of to-day be resumed at the conclusion of the unfinished business. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 697) authorizing the sale of logs cut by the Indians of the Menomonee reservation in Wisconsin, under the direction of the Interior Department.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 417) for continuing the work of improving the Capitol grounds, with amendments; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 1400) authorizing the residents and property-owners of Neville Township, county of Allegheny, and State of Pennsylvania, to close the channel of the Ohio River on the south side of Neville Island by the construction of an embankment or causeway from the head of said island to the southern shore of said river; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 192) for the relief of Caroline M. Purviance and Francis Wyeth;

A bill (S. No. 309) for the relief of William L. Nance;

A bill (S. No. 326) for the relief of the widow of L. H. Rousseau, deceased, late brigadier-general and major-general of the United States Army; and

A bill (S. No. 431) granting a pension to Elizabeth B. Thomas, widow of General Lorenzo Thomas, late of the United States Army.

IMPROVEMENT OF CAPITOL GROUNDS.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. There is a bill just returned from the House of Representatives with amendments reducing the appropriation for the improvement of the Capitol grounds $5,000, and providing that the money shall be expended under the direction of the architect of the Capitol, as it would have been whether so provided or not. As the bill has been delayed ever since February 9, which has almost made it impossible that the object of the bill can be now attained, I ask that the Senate concur in the amendments proposed by the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. DAVIS in the chair.) The Chair will lay before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill.

The amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 417) for continuing the work of improving the Capitol grounds were read, being in line 5 to strike out the word "twenty-five" and in lieu thereof insert "twenty," and to add to the bill the following clause:

To be expended under the direction of the architect of the Capitol.

Mr. INGALLS. As the Senator from Vermont says it is too late now for this appropriation to be of any service, I would like to inquire what is the use of concurring in the amendments of the House?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. It will be of service; but I say it is too late. The bill ought to have been passed long ago. It was sent to the House over two months ago.

The amendments were concurred in.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. U. S. GRANT, jr., his Secretary, announced that the President had this day approved and signed the act (S. No. 252) donating the military road running from Astoria, Oregon, to Salem, in that State, to the several counties through which it passes.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 1400) authorizing the residents and property-owners of Neville Township, county of Allegheny, and State of Pennsylvania, to close the channel of the Ohio River on the south side of Neville Island by the construction of an embankment or causeway from the head of said island to the southern shore of said river, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

POSTAGE ON THIRD-CLASS MATTER.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 650) fixing the rate of postage on third-class mail matter, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. MERRIMON, which was to strike out after the word "scions," in section 1, line 13, the following words:

And all other matter which may be declared mailable by law, and all other articles not above the weight prescribed by law, which are not from their form or nature liable to destroy, deface, or otherwise injure the contents of the mail-bags, or the person of any one engaged in the postal service.

Mr. MERRIMON. Mr. President, my object in offering the amendment was to put as nearly as may be all mailable matter which may be termed merchandise in a fourth class, and to require such postage to be charged upon it as will pay for its transportation. At the same time I announced my desire to see the postal system confined to the purposes for which it was originally instituted. I believe that nothing ought to be transported in the mail other than letters and intelligence of one sort or another. I think the postal system is one of the great popular educators of this country. It is one of the essential means of enlightening the public mind; and although sometimes vicious information is communicated, still we cannot get the wheat without some chaff; and the minds of the people must be so enlightened as that they will be able to distinguish between the wheat and the chaff. It is one of the great means of educating the popular mind; and I am in favor of developing the system from time to time, and enlarging its means and avenues for such a purpose. I do not care to make it self-supporting. I do not believe that is wise. Still I think that whatever goes through the mails ought to pay something. Generally that is true. In that view I want to put the matter embraced in the third class in such a shape as that it will embrace only those things that communicate intelligence, information calculated to enlighten and educate the public mind. I desire to put the postage upon that class of matter at a very low rate, to place it back to what it was before the law was changed a year ago. Then if we are to pass merchandise through the mails, let us put upon it a higher rate of postage than the third-class matter has heretofore paid, to the end that whoever would avail himself of that convenience shall pay what it costs the Government.

I have not yet heard any advocate of sending merchandise through the mails give any reason, much less a substantial reason, why the postal system of the United States should become a means of cheap transportation. There is no more reason why the Government should carry through the mail for me a pair of boots, an ax, a hat, or any other article of merchandise singly in itself, than that they should carry a whole stock of goods. If the postal system is to be made a matter of convenience for the transportation of merchandise, why not make some other Department of the Government a matter of convenience for the people? Why not authorize the quartermasters to keep whole stocks of goods for the convenience of the people where they have business? Why not establish stores all over the West for the convenience of the pioneer settler? I see no more reason for the one than for the other. It is not within the legitimate purposes and powers of the Government to provide such conveniences. It is contemplated under our system that the people should do this work for themselves, and I repeat what I said the other day: that when the Government undertakes to carry merchandise through the mails for the convenience of the party selling and the party to whom it is sold, requiring the parties to pay less than the Government pays for such transportation, injustice is done to every citizen of the Republic other than the two or three parties interested in this particular transportation. It is wrong in theory; it is wrong in practice. It is unjust, and in my judgment Congress ought to proceed as promptly as possible to correct such a policy and such a practice.

In looking at the amendment that I offered the other day, which was drawn very hastily, I find that I did not have it in as good shape as I desire to put it now. I ask leave to withdraw that amendment in order to offer another which I have prepared. I propose to insert before the word "maps," in line 9 of section 1, the word "and," and then to strike out from the word "prints" down to the words "photographic representations," in line 12; and then also to strike out from the word "and," in line 13, down to the word "service," in line 18. If the Senate concur in that amendment, I shall then move to strike out, in line 7 of section 2, the word "ounce" and insert in place thereof the words "two ounces;" so as to make the law stand as it was before the amendment a year ago increasing the rate on third-class matter. If the Senate shall agree to this amendment, then I propose to offer an additional section in these words:

SEC. —. That prints, engravings, blanks, flexible patterns, samples, merchandise, sample cards, phonographic paper, letter envelopes, postal envelopes and wrappers, cards, plain and ornamental paper, photographic representations, and all other matter and articles not above the weight prescribed by law not provided for in the first, second, or third classes of mailable matter which may be made mailable by law shall make the fourth class of mailable matter. The postage on mail matter of the fourth class shall be at the following rates:

For all distances of one thousand miles or less, — cents for each ounce or fractional part thereof.

For all distances over one thousand miles, — cents for each ounce or fractional part thereof.

Every package of the fourth class of mail matter shall be post-marked, and may be marked in all respects as provided in case of third-class matter.

The object of that additional section is to create a fourth class, which is to embrace merchandise only. I leave the postage to be imposed on merchandise blank, for I confess my information is not sufficiently accurate to warrant me in suggesting the amount of postage that ought to be put on the ounce, but I think it ought to be such rate of postage as will reasonably pay the Government the expense it must undergo in transporting articles of that character.

That is all I care to say. I desire, however, to withdraw the first amendment as I submitted it, in order to offer the amendment that I now present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina withdraws his amendment and offers another.

Mr. MERRIMON. My present amendment is in line 9 of section 1, before the word "maps" to insert the word "and," and to strike out, beginning at the word "prints," in line 9, as follows:

Prints, engravings, blanks, flexible patterns, samples, merchandise, sample cards, phonographic paper, letter envelopes, postal envelopes and wrappers, cards, plain and ornamental paper, photographic representations.

And then passing over what follows to the word "and," in line 13 after "scions," I move to strike out down to the word "service" in line 18. This amendment is preparatory to the amendment providing for a fourth class, which I shall offer.

Mr. HAMLIN. Let me make an inquiry of the Senator. If I understand his amendment aright, he leaves cuttings, bulbs, scions, roots, and other matters in the third class. I suppose they convey intelligence; do they?

Mr. MERRIMON. No, they do not. I ought to have made a remark upon that subject. So far as I am concerned, I should be willing to strike those words out; but I know there is great anxiety among the people to get shrubbery, seeds, &c., from the Agricultural and Horticultural Departments of the Government here. The people are very anxious upon that point.

Mr. HAMLIN. They are not touched by this bill.

Mr. MERRIMON. Then, if the Senator is correct about that, I do not object to including them. I do not see why the nursery-man should send his merchandise more cheaply than anybody else. He is no better than anybody else. I will include, then, all in section 1 from the word "prints," in line 9, down to "service," in line 18.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina, as modified.

Mr. HAMLIN. I have not interrupted a single speaker who has spoken upon this bill, nor did I propose to do so until each Senator who spoke should have completed what he had to say. I have always believed that that was the appropriate method of conducting a debate in this Chamber; but on this amendment, as it is distinct from the general discussion which has obtained upon the bill, I will make a word or two of remark, coming at the same time within the limits which I think ought to govern debate in this body.

The Senator from North Carolina has said very much in which I concur. The postal service, as I attempted to show the other day, was organized for specific purposes, for the purpose of transmitting letters and intelligence. That was the limit. That being the limit, as I understand, the Senator is disposed to confine it to what it was originally designed to be. There is not, in my judgment, a single reason in the world why the articles which he has left to remain in the section as third class should not be transferred along with the rest to the proposed fourth class. Merchandise is of a variety of kinds. Merchandising in books is just as much merchandising as it is in bulbs or roots or dry goods. There is no difference whatever. It is true that there are classes of people in the world who may desire books and who may write to remote sections of the country for the purpose of obtaining those books; but my word for it they will get them not one mill cheaper whether they pay the full postage that it costs the Government to transmit the matter or get it at one-half that rate. But it is merchandising. It is not intelligence; it is knowledge. It ceases to come within the proper limit of that kind of articles that should be transmitted in the mail, just as much as your bulbs or your roots. One may desire the book most. The scholar desires it and knowledge desires it; but let me say to my friend that there is behind knowledge something of more importance perhaps than knowledge; at least there is something behind it absolutely more necessary. Before the scholar can store his brain with knowledge he must have raiment to wear and food to eat, without which he cannot exist. There is then to the man who is not a man of knowledge a vastly greater necessity perhaps for the subsistence of life, for transmitting food through your mails; and it can be sustained by as strong an argument and upon the consideration of comity and convenience that that should be required to go into the mail before books go. Knowledge ought to be willing to pay for the transmission of that which it receives. Knowledge ought to be willing to contribute to the Department that which it costs the Department, in my judgment. I think it more appropriate that knowledge shall contribute to the revenue of the Government rather than to wring it from the labor of your country; for it must come from your labor before it goes into your Treasury.

I insist that the Senator's theory is all wrong. The moment you depart from that which the Senator and I both agree is legitimate mail matter, that ought to go in it in accordance with the original design of the law, that very moment you can make no distinction except one of degree; and when you come to degrees, that thing which the Senator may think of least importance in degree becomes absolutely of the most importance to the man who is interested; and I have discovered that fact in a most eminent degree in the consideration of this question by the committee. Why, sir, we have had it illustrated over and over and over again in the numberless letters that have come to me. Each man has demonstrated that his own particular specialty should be provided for and was of more importance than everything else. All of them have illustrated that maxim of wisdom uttered by Artemus Ward that every one of them is willing to sacrifice all his wife's relations if he can be accommodated himself. That is the whole of it.

I wish that all this matter could be communicated through the mails at a less price than anybody has named. There is no man holding a seat in this Chamber who is more desirous that our community shall be accommodated with the very lowest possible rates of postage, and I am willing if I can get our compensation to let that go in the mail, which is only for an accommodation, and if we cannot get that then I think it ought not really to go in the mail at all.

I think, therefore, and I cannot but think that my friend from North Carolina, keen as he is, will see, that the distinction can be drawn only at the line of the current information of the day, which is embraced literally in letters and newspapers, although magazines do come very near communicating intelligence though they are rather the communicators of knowledge than of intelligence. I mean intelligence in that view of it for which your Department was instituted. When you depart from that rule, you are all afloat. There is not a single article specified in his amendment in which the particular party interested does not fairly believe and justly believe, from his own stand-point, that it is of more importance than anything else because it is of more importance to him.

I think, therefore, that a fourth classification is unwise, and is one that should not be made.

Mr. MERRIMON. I will say but a word or two further in support of the amendment which I have proposed.

My venerable friend from Maine and myself, it seems, do not disagree in principle. We differ about the proper classification of mailable matter. I believe that one of the essential features of our system of Government is to educate the popular mind. I believe that our institutions and system of Government depend upon the virtue and the intelligence of the people; and because of this important fact it is the duty as well as the interest of the Government to place that which is calculated to educate and develop the popular mind before the people in the cheapest and most speedy way possible. Nay, sir, I go so far as to say that, if the Government would send any matter that is calculated to effectuate such a purpose through the mail free, it would do not only a noble work, but it would do an essential and a good work; it would do a work in the interest of the Government, in the interest of the people collectively and severally. I therefore do not want to confine that matter which goes cheaply through the mails merely to newspapers. Newspapers are no more educators of the popular mind than books, whether they are bound or unbound. The truth is books are better calculated to educate the popular mind properly than newspapers, because they are written with more care, after more deliberation, investigation, and examination. The information they convey is of a more correct character; and there is this further to be said in connection with the subject of books: The great centers of books are the great commercial cities of the Union, and we know by practical observations that they do not go out into the remote parts of the country as rapidly and as promptly as they ought to do. The difficulty is to get the people to read enough. They are the more inclined to read, the more rapidly and the more frequently and the more cheaply they can get reading matter. If we could go into the statistics, it would appear that millions of dollars' worth of books are sent through the mails annually in small quantities, generally not in greater numbers than two or three volumes in a package, very often but one volume going hundreds, sometimes thousands of miles to the party who is to receive it, read it, and get information from it.

I have here a very interesting petition, which was presented yesterday, signed by numerous book merchants in New York, book houses of high character, great reliability, high respectability, of course looking after their own interests, but at the same time looking after the interests of their country. It is no doubt interesting to them; and that they should have the opportunity to send books through the mails, and send them through the mails cheaply, is to their advantage; but while it is to their advantage in the way of dollars and cents, it is to the advantage of the people who get the books in the way of enlightenment, and to the people of the nation collectively in the way of enlightenment.

Now, sir, taking up the several things that are to be embraced according to my amendment in third-class matter, let us see whether they are interesting with a view to communicate information. According to my amendment, what will third-class mailable matter embrace? First, pamphlets. We know that pamphlets generally contain matter that is to give the people prompt general information touching some particular subject—speeches or interesting articles written on some current subject in which the people are interested, political, moral, religious, or something else. Will any one say that that is not calculated to educated and inform the public mind? In the line of policy agreed upon between the Senator from Maine and myself, will not the Senator say that a man ought to get a pamphlet cheaper through the mails than he gets a hat or a coat or some other article of merchandise?

The same remark applies to "occasional publications" and to "regular publications devoted primarily to advertising purposes or for free circulation." They cost the people nothing and give them important information, generally as to the character of books. Next take the "prices-current." The whole people are interested in them. They contain practical information that everybody ought to have. The citizen in North Carolina, in Illinois, in Ohio, in Nebraska, everywhere, wants the prices-current in order that he may see how he can buy particular classes of merchandise in Baltimore, New York, or any place in the country, and because such a publication is calculated to convey intelligence, information, it ought to go promptly, and certainly it ought to go at a cheaper rate than ordinary articles of merchandise.

The same may be said of "catalogues." It is very important that the people should have catalogues, and have them at a cheap price; they are generally published at a nominal price, and very often published free; and yet the people are required, according to the policy of my friend from Maine, to pay as much for a catalogue giving the people information as to where they can get additional information and enlightenment as upon ordinary merchandise.

Then "annuals." I suppose that would embrace almanacs, which convey a sort of information that every family and every individual ought to have. They convey intelligence of a practical character that a man wants; he wants it every year; it is essential; the whole people ought to have it. And yet almanacs are to pay just as much as ordinary merchandise. The same may be said of "handbills, posters, unsealed circulars, prospectuses, books bound or unbound, book-manuscripts, proof-sheets, and maps." Every one of the items that I have enumerated is calculated to add to the volume of intelligence that the people ought to have, that it is to the interest of the country to force upon the people, if you may use that word. It ought to be forced upon them; the people ought to be forced to be enlightened, if they will not be voluntarily, and it is the true policy to adopt all means that will lead to that result.

It might be said, in the line of argument used by the Senator from Maine a moment ago, that the editor or proprietor of a newspaper makes the matter of printing his newspapers, and his newspapers after they are printed, articles of merchandise, and he realizes a profit. That can be said of any publication whatever. Whoever publishes any production, of whatever character, expects to realize a profit on what he does; but under the policy of the Government, inaugurated under the postal system, we do not have regard so much to what the proprietor of a newspaper shall realize, or the author of a book shall realize, as we have to the purpose of the Government in giving the whole people, everybody who will avail himself of such intelligence, the benefit of it. It is therefore that I insist that there ought to be a fourth class, and that fourth class ought to embrace what we understand as merchandise proper, and that class ought to pay, I repeat, such compensation to the Government for transporting it through the mail as will compensate the Government for doing so.

As to the other classes, the first, second, and third, for one I think it is not very material whether they pay the Government or not. If the Government carries letters, if it carries newspapers, if it carries anything whatsoever that is calculated to enlighten the mind, it does well to carry it at a nominal price; and I am not sure that it would not be as well to carry it free. If the whole collective people were to pay for transporting it through the mail, although we could not realize the advantage in dollars and cents, the addition to the popular stock of information I am sure in the course of time would show its effect upon the popular mind and in the administration of the Government.

I do not differ from the Senator from Maine as to principle; but we differ as to the classification. I say that books, and whatever else is calculated to educate and develop the mind, ought to go through the mails cheaper than merchandise; and such things it is legitimate to send through the mails and nothing else.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. CLAYTON in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. MERRIMON,] striking out certain words.

Mr. MERRIMON. My object in striking out is to offer another amendment, making a fourth class, comprising merchandise proper which is to pay.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 12, noes 16; no quorum voting.

Mr. HAMLIN. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 11, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bogy, Caperton, Davis, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton, Kelly, McCreery, Merrimon, Sargent, Wallace, and Withers—11.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Bayard, Boutwell, Bruce, Clayton, Conkling, Cooper, Cragin, Dawes, Dorsey, Eaton, English, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamlin, Harvey, Key, Logan, McMillan, Maxey, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Oglesby, Randolph, Sherman, Stevenson, Wadleigh, and Windom—29.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Booth, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Cockrell, Conover, Dennis, Edmunds, Ferry, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Kernan, McDonald, Morton, Norwood, Paddock, Patterson, Ransom, Robertson, Saulsbury, Sharon, Spencer, Thurman, West, Whyte, and Wright—33.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MERRIMON. In view of the disposition of that amendment it is unnecessary that I should offer the other, and I am now prepared to vote for the substitute. If I cannot get what I want, I will take the best I can get.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, the question now is, I believe, on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. HARVEY.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. HARVEY,] proposed as a substitute for the bill.

Mr. DAWES. That is a restoration of the law as it stood previous to the amendment of last year. On that I desire to say, simply for one, that I shall vote for the bill, because I believe the bill to be in the line of legislative duty. That duty I understand to be to secure the cheapest possible postage to every village and hamlet and home in the nation; and all legislation that will contribute to that end ought, it seems to me, to receive the support of the Senate; and I think the Senator from Kansas himself would assent to that as an abstract proposition. There is no other limitation to the duty of Congress to secure that cheap postage to everybody except the ability of the nation to carry it out. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. MERRIMON] has well said that the post-office is a great educator. I think nobody can overestimate its importance in that respect; and any legislation that limits or curtails it is that which must only be resorted to by reason of stern necessity.

The Senator from Kansas proposes to go back to a measure that has been once tried and with other features of the postal law left the revenue of the Post-Office Department short eight or nine millions of dollars, with the prospect before us of the deficit increasing to nine and a half or ten millions the present year, and with its continual increase in years to come. He proposes no remedy; he proposes to leave the legislation there. He is mistaken in one view of the subject when he states that the departure from the previous legislation by the act of last year has not been beneficial to the revenues of the Department. They have improved upon the expense of carrying this class of mail matter 60 per cent., which is a fact that the Senator seems entirely to have overlooked. The Senator could find no encouragement in voting for the present bill because the chairman of the committee was unable to tell him precisely how much it would improve the revenues of the Post-Office Department. But the Senator from Maine presented very strong reasons for believing that it would improve them and improve them largely. I think the Senator from Kansas did not present us any reasons to the contrary. But does the Senator from Kansas propose to leave legislation where his amendment would leave it? Does he propose to pervert the Post-Office Department from that for which it was originated, the transmission of intelligence, to the transmission of merchandise, and not stop to look at the effect it must inevitably have upon the original purpose for which the post-office was established?

It is not necessary for us, it seems to me, in determining what we ought to do as legislators upon this question, to consider whether the Post-Office should be self-sustaining or not. Long before we reach that point, it seems to me, we should settle the other, whether the Post-Office Department shall be turned into a common carrier of merchandise or whether it shall so far as is possible be kept at its original function and be made as little as possible a charge upon the Treasury in carrying out that purpose. Does not the Senator see that just so long as this deficit increases, this charge upon the Treasury increases, year after year, by millions of dollars, as it did under the law which the Senator proposes to restore, the inevitable effect of it must be a curtailment of mail facilities; that as the country increases in population and in extent and in territory, the attempt of the Post-Office to carry a cheap mail to every door in the land, which is its highest and first duty, must necessarily be crippled, be curtailed, be weakened by every new charge and burden that is imposed upon the Post-Office Department? Is it not self-evident that there must be some limitation upon the charge of the Post-Office Department, upon the amount of money which, consistently with carrying on all the branches of Government and consistently also with a reasonable and proper economy, is taken out of the Treasury for purposes even so important and so necessary as the Post-Office Department? Every dollar you expend through the Post-Office for anything else but its legitimate function is a dollar taken from its first and highest duty, to carry the mails the farthest possible at the cheapest possible rate. The two are inconsistent, incompatible, and warring upon each other, and the one must yield to the other in the very nature of things. That is the reason why I longed to hear the Senator from Kansas suggest, if it be best for us to go back to the previous rate of carrying merchandise through the mails and the old order of things, how the old hiatus between the receipts and the expenditures—growing wider and wider, deeper and deeper—is ever to be filled up or to be spanned. Does the Senator propose to abandon the idea of carrying into the new States and into the new Territories, and into the new cabins and hamlets and villages that are growing up every year in those new States and Territories, the mails on new routes to be opened, creating new draughts upon the Treasury? Certainly the Senator from Kansas does not want to throw himself across the idea of cheap, efficient, and rapid communication among all the people of the land, however remote they are. Every citizen of this great country has some sort of a claim and demand on the Government that the Government shall carry to him all that knowledge and intelligence which the functions of the mail were established to carry, and to carry them to him in the quickest possible and the cheapest possible and the safest possible manner; and if it clogs and weighs down the wheels of the carriage with other and extraneous matter it does injustice to that very class of our fellow-citizens to whom I should suppose the Senator from Kansas would be most solicitous that legislation should be directed.

Now, take the comparative receipts and expenditures of the Post-Office Department, classified by States, and it is full of instruction upon this point. The old States have all the mail facilities that they can have. There is no great opening in my State, for instance, or in New England generally, for any improvement in mail facilities, according to the present system of transmitting mails. Whatever of the revenue, if any there be, that comes from the mail system into the Treasury of the United States from these old States over and above their expenditures is rightly and properly devoted, consecrated to the higher work of carrying the mails to those States and to those sections yet undeveloped that cannot pay the current expenses, and that ought not to pay them, and that are entitled under our present system to have their letters, their intelligence, carried to them just as cheaply, though they live hundreds of miles beyond the voice of civilization it may be, as they are carried to my door or to that of my neighbor in a State as old as any in the Union. There are but six States that bring into the revenues of the Post-Office Department as much money as is taken out to carry the mails in those States. In all the rest of the States of the Union it costs more to carry the mails than all that is obtained in those States; and which are those States?

I do not speak of it in any other sense than to call to the attention of the Senator from Kansas, and to the attention of other Senators, that they have more interest in this effort of the Senator from Maine than any other section of the country, than the section from which that Senator himself comes; that the new States necessarily and largely, and in the present condition of things the whole southern country, are dependent upon this principle which lies at the very outset of this legislation, and ought to underlie all legislation on the subject, namely: that the first duty of the Government is to carry the mail everywhere that the flag floats, and to carry it just as cheaply as possible and just as rapidly and as safely as it can be. Of all the States there are only six where the Post-Office is self-sustaining, and they are Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania.

Mr. MERRIMON. Will my honorable friend allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. DAWES. Certainly.

Mr. MERRIMON. A great part of the postage paid in those States is paid upon merchandise, books, and such things that are sent to distant States, to North Carolina, all over the South, and all over the West, Kansas and everywhere; and the persons to whom they are sent, although the postage is paid in the post-office from which they are sent, have to pay the postage at last; it is added into the bill.

Mr. DAWES. I am quite ready to discuss that point with my friend; and I should not have forgotten it if he had not been kind enough to remind me of it. The State of Massachusetts is the second of all the States in the Union in this list. There is but one State, the great State of New York, which has the great post-office in the city of New York in it, that pays a few dollars more postage over and above its expenditures than the State of Massachusetts. I desire the Senator from North Carolina and the Senator from Kansas to look at the fact that the letter postage in the State of Massachusetts bears to all other postage the ratio of fifteen to thirty-one. That is to say, there is about twice as much postage paid in Massachusetts upon other matter than letters, other matter than the legitimate matter of the post-office, as there is upon letters; and so in different ratios it is characteristic of all these six States.

My friend from North Carolina says that a great deal of that is for the benefit of the people who live out of those States. Let us see how that is. If so, it is for States not so far from Massachusetts as North Carolina. North Carolina does not do a mercantile business with Massachusetts through the mail. Massachusetts, when she sends her mercantile traffic to North Carolina, sends it part way to a wholesale dealer, and the wholesale dealer sends it to the retail dealer, and the retail dealer, within a few miles of my friend from North Carolina, distributes single articles not exceeding four pounds in weight to his customers in the different States. The people engaged in this kind of specialty traffic largely in these six States, more than in any other States, avail themselves of the benefit which the mail furnishes them to distribute their specialties in small packages to their customers in a way that my friend in North Carolina and my friend in Kansas cannot avail themselves of. They never correspond with a producer of these articles in the distant States for a single article to be sent them by mail, but the producers of these articles that supply distant sections send them in gross, not by mail, to the wholesale dealer, and the wholesale dealer distributes samples, perhaps in the mail or otherwise, to the retail dealer, and it is the retail dealer who distributes through the mail his small packages. That is the practical application of it. And therefore it is that those most devoted to the specialties are those who derive the greatest benefit from this, because they get their specialties carried at mail rates, while other people are obliged, the consumer and everybody else, to pay freight rates.

Mr. MERRIMON. I beg to say to my friend from Massachusetts that while goods are generally sent in bulk to the West and to the South by the merchants in the commercial cities in the East, thousands and tens of thousands of dollars' worth are sent through the mails in small packages—as a silk dress, a pair of gloves. I know one or two houses in New York that send to my city annually tens of thousands of dollars' worth of goods that pass through the mails exclusively. It is true the New York merchant pays the postage upon those things at the post-office in New York when he mails them, but he never fails to charge the consumer with the postage which he pays there, so that the citizen in North Carolina virtually pays that postage; and the same may be said of every State in the West. I remember I was a member of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads last year; and it appeared before the committee from one witness that one stage from San Diego to some point in New Mexico, probably Santa Fé, carried over a thousand pounds of merchandise put up in four-pound packages, sent there from New York, thus transporting a stock of goods in that way.

Mr. DAWES. Does not my friend from North Carolina see that that cost the Government so much that the Government was not able to carry the letters all over Arizona to that extent that it would if it had the $4,000,000 that were taken out of the Treasury and expended in carrying merchandise? That is what I am trying to enforce on my friend from North Carolina, that money was taken out of the Treasury over and above what the merchant in New York paid for the privilege of carrying his merchandise in the mail to make up the difference between that and what he would have paid if he had paid the common freight charges upon it; and that this was so much taken from the ability of the Government to furnish facilities to which the citizens in Arizona were entitled under the Constitution.

Another thing is true, that the merchant in New York, for the sake of obtaining the trade of the customer in North Carolina away from the merchant of Raleigh and from other cities in his locality, is obliged to pay this charge in the mail, and he offers mail-free to deliver to the man in North Carolina cheaper than he can get that same article of his local trader; and therefore my friend not only deprives himself by this policy of the mail facilities he would otherwise have and is entitled to, but he makes war upon the local industry of his own State; he builds up the trader in New York; he makes the millionaire in New York who commands the mail facilities of this whole country to distribute goods from the New York center at the expense of the local interests all around him. He loses sight entirely of that fact. I know he gets his goods as cheap thereby and perhaps a little cheaper than he can of his Raleigh merchant; but, after he gets his goods so much less, he is obliged to pay in taxes to the Government to support the New York merchant every dollar that he gains by sending it through the mail.

I said, sir, that I should vote for this bill; not that this bill accomplishes everything in the line which it is intended to pursue, but that it accomplishes something, and leaves us much better off than we should be by adopting the proposition of the Senator from Kansas. I do think that perhaps we could improve upon this bill by providing that samples, for instance, might be sent through the mail in small quantities of eight, or ten, or twelve ounces at a much cheaper rate than ordinary merchandise; but I would contrive to extend mail facilities at the expense of mercantile facilities rather than mercantile facilities at the expense of mail facilities. The policy suggested by the Senator from Kansas is in the opposite direction. The Senator is apprehensive that the people of this country will not understand us; that they will confound this effort with the idea that it is increasing postage. He says that he believes the people of the country have condemned the effort of last session to undertake to extend mail facilities at the expense of the freight business of the Government. I do not agree with the Senator. I do not think that the people will fail to see ultimately that the outcry which comes from those engaged in these specialties, those engaged in the patent-medicine business and in the pattern business in the East, that crowd every workshop in that part of the country with the manufacture and production of such material as can be carried through the mail—I do not think the people will fail to understand in the end that if they have these facilities extended, if we go back to the old system, it is for the benefit of the few at the expense of the many.

There are many ways in which the great deficit in the receipts of the Post-Office Department has come about. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] the other day alluded to some of them. In all administrations and under all Postmasters-General, those most solicitous of administering the office upon economical principles, there has been waste, glaring waste. When it appears that a mail contractor can pay, as was disclosed the other day in some investigation at the other end of the Capitol, $200,000 in a brief space of time for outside purposes, outside of his legitimate contracts, no one can fail to see that he must necessarily obtain his contracts at an enormous amount beyond the actual cost of the service, or else he never would have either the ability or the desire to pay these large sums for outside and illegimate purposes. That is so now. That has always been so. I know of a mail contractor of the olden time, whose whole contract price for performing his mail service all told was $106,000, who received in the olden time $109,000 extra for performing that $106,000 mail service, and who has been knocking for the last ten years at the door of the Treasury for $450,000 additional, and whose counsel said the other day of his prospects that he had come within a squirrel's jump of his money once already. That was of the olden time, not differing from this time in that respect, nor likely to differ from the administration of the Department in all time to come this side of the millennium; but he who fails to put forth every energy in the drection of economy in the mail service, of curtailment of every extra dollar of expenditure, or the expenditure of any dollar for anything but its legitimate function, curtails so much of mail facilities and cheap postage to his constituents wherever they may live in this land.

There was a departure thirty years ago which has crippled the mail service, the Post-Office Department of this Government, more than any other, and which sooner or later must command the serious consideration of the Government. In 1845 and 1846, I think it was, or perhaps in 1846 and 1847, the Government put the telegraph under the control of the Post-Office Department, as an adjunct of that Department, as a part of it, as a new method of transmitting intelligence, as the stage-coach was a new method over the horseback method, and as the railroad was a new method over the coach. Nobody at that time supposed that it was possible to maintain it in this country otherwise than as an adjunct of the Post-Office Department. They tried it two years. At the end of the first year, against the protest of the Postmaster-General, and because the receipts in its infancy were only a little over $1,000 while its expenses were $3,000, lest it should become too much of a charge upon the Post-Office Department, they turned their back upon that, the most important instrumentality for the transmission of intelligence to every mortal in this land ever invented by the genius of man. In less than thirty years this competitor with the post-office for the transmission of intelligence has grown into so important and so extensive a business, that its yearly receipts are somewhere near $10,000,000, and it divides more than 8 per cent. upon a nominal capital of $40,000,000. It enters directly into competition with the Post-Office Department; it takes the cream of its business. It will continue year after year to increase in business at the expense of the Post-Office Department and its revenues. It is too large now for us to grapple with. We shrink from the attempt to recover what, against the protest of the Postmaster-General of that day, we voluntarily gave up because it was a charge of some two or three thousand dollars more upon the Treasury than were its receipts. To-day we pay something like $4,000,000 more than we receive to those who insist upon it that they shall have the right to carry merchandise through the mails at a cheaper rate than they can carry it in any other way, and that deficit is increasing year after year. Men recognize this fact more extensively in all kinds of business every year. They have come to devise methods by which almost every kind of industry can accommodate itself to the mail, as the ingenious Yankee in Boston did when he divided up his team-harnesses into pieces of four pounds weight and sent them all to Arizona through the mail at less than one-quarter what he would have been obliged to pay to the express or the freight agent. He chuckled over it; he broke down the mail in Arizona, and the poor inhabitant by the wayside is waiting now to hear from the Senator from Kansas, or from you or me, if we have any desire to communicate with him, until these harnesses that are distributed all along the mail-route are gathered up and carried off.

That is what this system and this policy, which the Senator from Kansas invites us to go back to, will bring the mails to and will bring the tax-payer to also; for these nine and a half millions this year and ten and a half or eleven millions next year (more than all the expenditures of the Government within my recollection) have got to be paid somehow, and other branches of the Government must be curtailed, other services must be crippled, other means of development must be foregone for the purpose of turning, perverting the mail back into a freighting machine, and that solely, and for no other purpose than because he who can avail himself of it by the subdivision of his material can do it with an advantage over his neighbor. Four or five years ago—I do not know how it is now; the Senator from Nevada [Mr. SHARON] can tell me—a large part of the treasure of California was transmitted East through the mail, because it could be done cheaper that way than it could be done by the express or in any other mode. A considerable part of it came in that way, and it was increasing when I was there more and more every month. I do not know how it may be at this hour, but why should it not be? Why should not the entire business of the coast that is capable of being divided into packages of not more than four pounds pack down the mail, so that instead of being what our fathers thought it was, an agency for the transmission of intelligence of such a peculiar character that it could not be trusted to private hands, it should become a grand express office?

Mr. President, having said that the people will see that the Senator from Maine is engaged in a warfare for cheap postage, and whatever blows and scars he may receive, he will receive also at their hands ultimately a pension for his service and the suffering he may endure, as the military men say, in the line of his duty, I propose to support him in this bill, though I do not agree that it is perfect by any means. I do not agree that this schedule of his is the best. I think something like what the Senator from North Carolina seems to have in his mind as to a fourth class might have improved the matter; but if the Senator from North Carolina had experience, and I do not know how that is, upon the Post-Office Committee last Congress, he will appreciate what I say, that there are many minds, eight or ten of them, in that committee, to say nothing about the seventy in this body, and it is difficult to bring them all to agree upon any one thing. In that line I support this bill.

Mr. HARVEY. Mr. President, I entertain for the Senator from Maine, the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and for every member of that committee, as high regard probably as any Senator here. I do not think it is inflicting or aiming to inflict upon either the chairman or the committee any scar when I offer as a substitute for this bill a proposition to simply go back to the law as it existed before it was changed on the 3d of March, 1875, by an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill, an amendment so hastily offered that it was not understood by the gentleman who moved it himself. That being the case, it can hardly be expected that other Senators understood what its effect was. If any Senator doubts that this was the fact as regards the way in which the amendment was offered, I refer him to the speech of the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. The portion of the speech I allude to was published on the fourth page of the RECORD of April 8. He states, speaking of another Senator:

> He went from my seat to the Senator from Minnesota—
> The Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. Ramsey,] by the way, was at that time the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and is not now a member of this body—> and immediately returned to me, and stated that it would be highly gratifying to the Senator from Minnesota if I would offer the amendment. I said that if that was the case, concurring in the amendment, as I understood it related only to merchandise, I would offer it. I went to the Senator from Minnesota and he said it would be agreeable to him if I would do so. I said: "Very well; I will offer it." Now, I committed one error. I did not turn to the statute to see what was embraced in the third class.

Senators, even the best of us may commit errors; and that error of the Senator from Maine led the Senate into the commission, as I think, of a great error; an error the effect of which has been, as I stated the other day, in my opinion, to render the people of this country dissatisfied with the postal law as it now exists and as it is proposed to be amended by the bill brought forward from the committee.

What is the ground on which this bill is brought forward? It is upon the assumption that the Post-Office Department must be made self-sustaining. According to the classification made by the law as it exists and the figures returned by the Post-Office Department, supposed to be correct by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, it is shown that on the carriage and handling of second-class matter the deficiency is in the neighborhood of $7,000,000, while by the figuring as regards third-class matter, the estimates for which I think can be shown to be erroneous, they only claim the deficiency to be $4,000,000. That being the case, why does the bill brought forward by the committee propose to make up this deficiency, not by levying additional rates upon the class which causes the bulk of the deficiency, but upon the third class, which even by the calculations that I have said I believe to be erroneous can only be shown to be deficient in the amount of $4,000,000? A proposition to remedy a deficiency caused in that way by such a bill as the one brought forward looks to me a good deal like the artifice of the man who proposed to lengthen his blanket by cutting off one end and sewing it on to the other. We made an attempt of that kind last spring on the 3d of March, when we increased the rates upon third-class matter, and we find the effect is that the deficiency is greater than ever. We cut off one end and sewed it on to the other, and find the blanket shorter than it was before.

Mr. DAWES. Where does the Senator get those figures?

Mr. HARVEY. It is admitted, I think.

Mr. DAWES. Where does he get the statement of the deficiency?

Mr. HARVEY. What was the deficiency last year?

Mr. DAWES. The statement of the Senator from Maine, the statement which I have just quoted from the Postmaster-General, is that what we did last spring, increased the revenues 60 per cent.

Mr. HARVEY. I can show that that is guess-work. In the letter from the Postmaster-General he says:

> These figures are subject to a variation of about 10 per cent., on account of increase of business since they were first compiled.
> The proportion of the revenue from third-class matter will increase while there will be a decrease in pounds sent, (about 15 per cent.,) &c.

Now, what is the basis of that calculation? It is simply experiments made in weighing mail matter, referred to and quoted in a former letter from that Department.

Mr. DAWES. I understood the Senator to say that it was admitted. If the Senator proposes to refute the statement, that is proper enough. No one can object to that. That is not what I complain of. I complain that the Senator says it is admitted.

Mr. HARVEY. Does the Senator from Massachusetts or the Senator from Maine claim that the deficiency in the Post-Office Department for this year will be less than it was when the former law was enforced?

Mr. DAWES. In this part of it it will be 60 per cent. less.

Mr. HARVEY. O, yes; that is another question. That is just what I was speaking about, cutting off at the place where the deficiency is not caused. The deficiency is caused, as these statistics show, by second-class matter. It is a deficiency of about $7,000,000; but we are met——

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator will allow me, and will turn to the tenth page of the pamphlet he has in his hand, he will see this:

> The only feature wherein the present workings would differ is in the revenue from each pound of third-class matter. The total matter of third class sent has decreased about 15 per cent., while the revenue has increased from eleven cents to between seventeen and eighteen cents per pound, an increase of about 60 per cent.

Mr. HARVEY. To show the fallacy of that kind of calculation, I call the attention of the Senator to this fact: The revenue of the Post-Office Department will be decreased from the fact that a large amount of third-class matter is now sent to Canada and mailed in post-offices just beyond the border, the Dominion of Canada charging one cent for four ounces, or one-fourth of the amount that we charge in this country under the present law. That revenue is all paid there, and if it is destined to go to post-offices anywhere in the United States, under our postal arrangement I believe the United States is bound to transport it without pay.

Mr. DAWES. I will state to the Senator that merchandise carried from Canada and remailed here cannot exceed more than eight ounces in a package; and it is to be patterns and samples of merchandise, and that is all.

Mr. HARVEY. Does the Senator doubt——

Mr. DAWES. I will state further that the post-offices in Canada have been forbidden to mail in Canada for the United States any matter that is brought into Canada from the United States for that purpose.

Mr. HARVEY. The Senator will certainly admit that matter may be shipped there as freight, the duties paid upon it, and then the agent or any one representing the shipper can post it. The authorities in Canada cannot determine where it comes from. It can be taken to any post-office and mailed at the rate of one cent for four ounces, one-fourth of what it costs here.

Mr. DAWES. It cannot be anything but patterns and samples of merchandise, including grains and seeds. That is the phraseology: "Patterns and samples of merchandise, including grains and seeds." It cannot be carried as freight into Canada, since a recent order, for the purpose of being remailed here; so that the Senator need have no anxiety about the diminishing of our revenue from that quarter.

Mr. HARVEY. I am satisfied of the way it has already operated. Packages are sent in that way, pamphlets, catalogues, &c.; and in this manner single firms have deprived the postal revenues of the United States by thousands of dollars.

I was going on to say when interrupted that this tabular statement in the letter of the Postmaster-General is compiled from the very same experimental weighing of the different classes of mail matter that was made before this new postal arrangement went into effect, and I quoted from the conclusions of the then superintendent of the general railway service in the speech I made the other day.

His conclusion was:

I have introduced these statements to show the fallacy of all arguments that have been produced to show that the deficiency of the Post-Office Department is attributable to the samples of merchandise, which form hardly a perceptible portion of the mails, or to matter of third class, which forms but 30 per cent., and yields about 24 per cent. of the revenue.

Mr. HAMLIN. That refers to single packages of merchandise—samples.

Mr. HARVEY. The same rule will apply so far as the cost of transportation is concerned, whether samples or articles of merchandise or transient publications. The question is about the weight. That is about the only way in which the transportation of third-class matter can affect the mails. I know that in this tabular statement the attempt was made to charge as part of the cost of third-class matter a large percentage of what they style the maintenance of the establishment, or, in other words, the cost proper of maintaining the Post-Office Department and the different post-offices, the clerks and others who handle the mails throughout the United States. It will be conceded that these expenses must be borne and will be borne by the people whether merchandise is excluded from the mails or not.

It is therefore a fallacy to urge that third-class matter costs anything like what is charged now for its transmission. The Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM,] the chairman of the special committee of the Senate on transportation, showed very plainly by calculations made by those competent to do it that, allowing to the railroad companies engaged in the transportation of mails 50 per cent. for profit, the people still, under existing laws, pay several times what is necessary to pay for the cost of transportation of mail matter.

As I have said before, the third-class matter cannot be properly charged with the cost of maintaining the Department or paying the officials engaged in handling the mails. Therefore the cost of transportation is the only additional cost that comes as a consequence from the transmission of third-class matter at reduced rates. The document I have just quoted from, the report of George S. Bangs, the late general superintendent of the railway mail service, states correctly:

Of the $16,000,000 paid for transportation, $9,000,000 would not be materially affected by doubling the mails; $3,000,000 only would increase directly with the weights, and $4,000,000 would increase indirectly with the weights.

So that the question, Senators, is simply this: Shall the people of the United States, being as we are bound to support the existing mail establishment, be compelled, either in one way or the other, to resort to certain corporations engaged in the transportation of small packages for profit, and endure the extortions that such corporations choose to inflict, or shall they be enabled by the use of their establishments, the cost of which they are paying, to send at a reasonable rate small packages to any part of the United States at a uniform and equitable rate? That is the whole question in a nutshell. The Postmaster-General, in the conclusion of his last letter on this subject, says:

While it is possible that second or third class matter might be doubled without proportionately increasing the expenses of the Department or entirely thrown out of the mail without materially reducing the expenses, this has not been considered, nor, in my opinion, should it be, especially as far as relates to that portion of matter admitted to the mails in the third class and not strictly belonging to the class of privileged mail matter. If such matter is admitted to the mails at all, it should not be as privileged matter, but should be made to pay its way.

So far as second-class matter, and also second-class matter sent at transient rates and now included in the third class, is concerned, it is for Congress to decide whether such should be admitted to the mails at a loss to the Department.

He says that the question whether the expenses of the Department would be increased or not by carrying third-class matter in the mails should not be considered. That is rather a heroic statement of the proposition. It is a good deal like that of the philosopher who, when told that certain theories of his did not accord with the facts, said, "So much the worse for the facts." I apprehend that when the people of the United States become satisfied, as they will upon a thorough examination of this matter, that the Post-Office Department can be properly and legitimately used to reduce the exorbitant cost of transportation of small packages where it is possible to transport them by express companies, and to transport them to other portions of the country where it is not possible to have express companies—when the people learn that these conveniences can be had without material additional cost, they will not be willing to throw away the facilities caused by the possession of all these means which must be maintained for other purposes independent of the question whether they transport mail matter of this kind or not. The service must be maintained for the transportation of first and second class mail matter. That will be admitted on all hands. No one proposes to abolish the Post-Office Department and the mail service, and throw everything in this country into the hands of corporations.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] discussed at some length the telegraph companies. Legislation of the kind proposed by this bill tends to throw into the hands of other corporations as much monopolies and as much disposed to profit by every advantage they can get as telegraph companies. This legislation tends to their benefit. I do not say that it is intended to do so. I do not believe that it is; but such corporations never quarrel with the motives of acts which benefit them. I assert my belief, and I think it is the belief of a majority of the people of this country, that no class, no interest, no people have been benefited by the legislation which we had last spring, or will be benefited by that proposed in the bill, except express companies.

Senators talk about people engaged in a special interest or employment being active to make the mail useful to their business. It is the characteristic of every kind of special interest to be active and to endeavor to influence, as far as possible, legislation in their behalf. Such has been the case with the express companies. The Senator from Maine stated the other day that the committee had before them the attorneys of the express companies, arguing in favor of the entire exclusion of this class of matter from the mails. I think myself it was something like carrying coals to Newcastle to go before the committee with any such arguments; for it seems to me that all the members of the committee, from their own motion, from their own convictions, are disposed to go far enough in that direction. The effect of the bill would be virtually to exclude from the mails small packages, the transmission of which would be of great benefit to a great many classes of people in the country. Farmers and planters all through the country take agricultural papers and publications of all kinds. Circulars are sent to them advertising improved kinds of scions and fruit-trees, bulbs, flowers, valuable seeds, and a great many things of that description. The crops of this country have been increased in value immensely by the very facilities which have been afforded for the transmission through the mails of packages of this kind.

As I said, many of these people live remote from the lines of express companies. These small packages cannot be transported as freight. They are too small to be handled in that way. They would be lost in transmission. The people depend upon the United States mails to bring these little packages; and, by the way, the statistics of the Post-Office Department show that they do not average above three and a half ounces to the package. These, I say, can be transported without any material cost to the Department. They are of great benefit to the people to whom they are sent. The publications which are sent out call the attention of the people to advertisements of many articles, and cause the writing of many letters in making these orders, thus increasing your revenues on the most profitable kind of mail matter, letters, money-orders, &c.

Mr. HOWE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HARVEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. I have not heard the whole of his remarks. I want to know whether he means to controvert or does controvert the statement of the Post-Office Department to the effect that the transportation of third-class matter does in fact cost the Government something like $4,000,000 more than the revenues derived from it?

Mr. HARVEY. I do.

Mr. HOWE. The Senator controverts that statement?

Mr. HARVEY. Yes, sir; and on this ground——

Mr. HOWE. I should like to hear the ground.

Mr. HARVEY. They charge to the transportation of that matter costs which legitimately do not belong to it. They charge a large percentage to it for the maintenance of the establishment, as the book-keeping term is, I believe, or as we would ordinarily speak of it, "for the necessary expenses of the Post-Office Department, and of the officials connected therewith," which we must pay whether this matter is transmitted or not. Therefore, as a practical question it is not properly and legitimately charged to the cost of the transportation of third-class matter. We may ignore it here, but it is a plain enough proposition; and if the Senator will examine the tabular statement, and all the deductions drawn from it, he will find that it is assumed all the time that it is legitimate to charge that additional cost and expense.

The true effect of this bill, if it should pass, would be to saddle the third-class mail matter with a large portion of the cost of transmitting a certain class of publications which some Senators class under the head of current intelligence. I mean by this certain trashy newspapers published at a regular office, and at regular periods, but containing nothing, or substantially nothing but trifling silly stories, novels. It would have the further effect of necessitating the publication by the Department, or through some contract with the Department, of a great number of lists and charts, by which postmasters and others could readily ascertain the difference in distance between different post-offices. Either something of that kind will be necessary, or else the rates of postage will have to be guessed at. However this may be determined, to reach any exact compliance with the law, it will require a great many calculations, a great many lists, a great many statements of difference in distance. Even then many mistakes will be made and many differences of opinion will occur between those sending mail matter and the different postmasters. The additional taxation imposed by this bill at different distance-rates would be levied in a hap-hazard manner, a manner that would be very disagreeable and offensive to the people of the country. For instance, from the city of Washington to a number of post-offices in the West or South or East it would be one thousand miles. From the city of Baltimore to some of those places it would be more than a thousand miles and to some of them less. An arbitrary difference would there arise. That would be felt in a like manner to a greater or less extent throughout the United States at every post-office where any mail matter of this class was sent or received.

Therefore, Mr. President, taking all things into consideration, the way in which the law as it now stands was made, the dissatisfaction felt and expressed toward it, and the feeling of opposition that exists to the proposed bill reported by the committee, the safest and surest way the Senate can take out of the difficulty is to return to the law which was in existence prior to the 3d of March of last year. That law was satisfactory, so far as I know, to every interest in the United States except the one special interest which has been referred to here; and probably it was not satisfactory to certain officials who entertain the opinion that has been uttered here that the Department must necessarily be made self-sustaining, and that this must be accomplished according to certain ideas which have been dignified or otherwise by styling them business principles. I like to see business principles. In commercial business I like to see the business regulated by commercial law and in official business in accordance with official laws and requirements.

The people of this country are not ready to indorse an idea which would have the effect to bring any Department of this Government to the position of placing any portion of the territory of the United States, as regards the benefits of any one of the Departments of this Government, in a provincial light; and that would be the effect of charging upon those residents of the country who live at a distance of more than a thousand miles beyond the trade centers or beyond the centers where these little packages, the transmission of which through the mails is such a great convenience, are dealt in. The same idea of business principles carried into the idea of free delivery in a city would be something like this: A man who lived in the next block to the post-office would receive his mail by the carrier and a penny or something like that, and he would have this given him as an advantage pertaining to him because of his proximity to the post-office; while a man a few blocks away or in the vicinity of the boundary of the city would have to be satisfied if he got his mail occasionally at some cost in addition. This might be the case if the delivery was not made absolutely free. The same idea is applied by them to the transmission of the mail throughout the country, and it would work with just as much justice in the one case as in the other. I hope the Senate will agree with me in these views and adopt the amendment which I have proposed.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. There are a few aspects of this general subject, Mr. President, which I should be surprised to see pass from the Senate without attracting a good deal of attention. The first is the financial aspect which is presented by the terms of the bill. I am sure that that will be felt to be all-important by every member of this body who has given to the subject of our general finances any consideration at all. The general sentiment in the country growing out of the operation of general causes, causes touching public and private affairs alike, is that both public and private economy, always a virtue, has now become the absolute necessity of the American people.

My colleague offers an opportunity in this direction. I propose to consider it first in the interest of public economy growing out of the present condition of things. I am perfectly aware how indifferent we have come to be in regard to all questions of appropriations. The truth is that we have been accustomed in the last ten or fifteen years to deal in such magnificent sums, that our notions have become entirely confused upon the whole question of appropriations out of the public Treasury. Ten millions of dollars of appropriations now would not startle the Senate as $10,000 would a few years ago. We are somehow insensible to the general fact that we are appropriating these immense sums of money. The expenditures for the coming fiscal year for which we are now appropriating are estimated to be $262,995,000, and the estimated receipts are to be $276,331,000.

I expect that before the session closes we shall have the hat carried around everywhere, as it is likely to be, to the clerks in the Treasury Department and in other Departments, to the twelve-hundred-dollar clerks, to contribute to the Government. I only refer to that as showing the sense of the condition of our finances in a general way. But we are not so badly off as that. I do not want to represent any such thing as that. The general finances of the country may be said to be in a reasonably prosperous condition from the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury tells us that the receipts this year will be equal to the entire obligations of the Government.

It cannot be denied by any one the least familiar with the public service that in the last fifteen years the expenditures of the Government in many directions have been largely extended and largely increased over what they previously had been. The truth about it is, that the American people had come to entertain larger and more enterprising ideas upon several branches of the public service than in former years, and the excessive expenditures of this country are attributable as much to that fact as to any other; and it cannot be denied that we have grown a little latitudinarian as to the subjects of appropriation. We have got very liberal in our interpretations of the powers of Congress to appropriate money. This year the estimates for internal improvements are $17,000,000. Tell me when such a thing as that happened before or until recently? I am not mentioning this fact to criticise it, but mentioning it as a fact which enters into the financial ecomony of the American people. That is precisely what we are doing—a proper thing to do in its way. I am not here to criticise it; but there stands the fact. Other branches of the public service have been or are being enlarged in the same way; and these facts lead us to criticise the public service, to look sharply at it. When we find the public service being enlarged and making these draughts upon the Treasury, it is our duty to look it square in the face, and see upon what ground it proceeds.

It is said, Mr. President, that this is one of the branches of the public service to which the principle ought not to be applied that it should be self-supporting. I happen to be one of those who do not entertain that opinion. Undoubtedly, in the beginning, those who framed the Constitution and those who were here in the early days to interpret it did not understand it to be one of those essential principles of the Government, one of those services which were in themselves essential elements of the Government, and which therefore must be provided for, whatever the expense was. They did not understand that it was like the Army and the Navy, essential to national existence, because the mail could be carried by private enterprise. Whoever is curious to see what the constitutional interpretation is, let him just look at the language of the Constitution itself, and it will be evident that it never was intended to be that.

Congress shall have power to establish post-offices and post-roads.

That is one thing.

Congress shall have power to raise and support armies, * * * to provide and maintain a navy.

Those are quite other and different things. But I am not going to enter into a constitutional argument on this subject. Suffice it to say that from the beginning for the first fifty years no other idea was ever applied to this system than that it was to be self-sustaining and self-supporting. In that respect it is precisely on the principle of that provision of the Constitution which provides for copyright and for the right of an inventor to have the benefit of his invention. Did it ever occur to anybody that he was to have that at our expense or that we should protect him in it? But look at the statute if you would know precisely what the idea was. He was to pay the bills, and whoever applies for a patent will find that the expense which the Government incurs in the protection of that right devolves on the patentee in every instance. So here. Congress has power to establish post-offices and post-roads. Was it ever intended, was it ever believed, that Congress might draw upon the Treasury of the United States for the support and maintenance of them? Clearly enough the fifty years of administration under this provision of the Constitution by the founders of the Government and those who succeeded them, who provided in all instances for the support of the system from the revenues imposed upon the service, ought to be conclusive upon that point. Standing here to-day, having departed from that principle, can any of us say that that was not the belief, the opinion, and sentiment of the founders of the Government?

Mr. President, there is no more authority for charging the Treasury of the United States for carrying the mail than there is in the case I have already put of patents or of any other service in the world which you may assume that Congress has a right to charge upon the public Treasury. This whole departure by which the Government of the United States is charged with a deficiency in this case is in my judgment utterly unauthorized.

Mr. MERRIMON. May I ask the honorable Senator a question at this point?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Yes, sir.

Mr. MERRIMON. Can he point to any clause or word in the Constitution which restricts the discretion of Congress in the matter of imposing or abstaining from imposing postage upon letters or anything else that we transport through the mail, or that prevents Congress, if in its wisdom it shall see fit, to allow the patentee to have his patent without cost to him?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. No, sir; but it is not what you cannot find prohibited; it is what you can find affirmatively stated in the Constitution of the United States that justifies the exercise of authority by Congress. That is the question.

Mr. MERRIMON. Or by reasonable implication.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Yes; reasonable implication. I accept that amendment. That is what I am talking about, that there is in this case no affirmative proposition and no reasonable implication; and the fifty years of policy under that clause, originating in the very foundation of the Constitution, silence us on that subject. If anything ever was settled or if anything ever can be settled, that question is settled, that this was expected to be a self-sustaining and self-supporting service, and not chargeable upon the public Treasury, and any departure from that is a departure from the sound interpretation of the Constitution, in my judgment; at any rate, it is a departure from a policy of fifty years' standing.

Mr. HAMLIN. Sixty-three years.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Half a century will do very well, but the longer the better, so that we regard it. This argument applies to carrying the mail proper, establishing post-offices and post-roads. What does that mean? When the convention put into the Constitution the declaration that Congress should have power to establish post-offices, what did it mean? The meaning was apparent. It had a historic character. It meant that we would do precisely what they were doing in England and in other countries. To establish a post-office and a post-road was to carry the mail. Carrying the mail was to do what? What was carrying the mail? That had a definite, fixed meaning, growing out of the practice on that subject. It was to carry letters, messages originally, and intelligence, newspapers, in other words. It was confined absolutely and unqualifiedly to that, so that when the Constitution provided that Congress should have power to establish post-offices and post-roads, it was to make provision for carrying the mail, to wit, letters, messages, newspapers. Suppose it had been proposed in the convention that formed the Constitution to add "and merchandise," does anybody suppose that would have been entertained? Is there a Senator here who supposes such a proposition as that would have been entertained in the convention? No, not one. Was it ever thought of? No. Is it deducible from anything here? No; nobody can say that. How comes it here, then? Answer that. How did merchandise get into the mail?

Mr. MERRIMON. Congress did exercise the power, though, to send matter through the mail free, and did it from a very early day. I do not remember exactly the day, but from a very early day members of Congress were allowed the franking privilege.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is not on the point; I am not talking about that.

Mr. MERRIMON. It proves that Congress exercised the discretion of imposing postage or abstaining from it at its pleasure.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is not the point I am on. I am talking about how merchandise got into the mail. That is the question. It got in in that insidious way that all encroachments come. The first thing that was done in regard to it was they said, "Let us put a sample in the mail, a sample of merchandise." See how seductive that was. What was a sample? A sample was something that you could put into the mail or send on a message or an errand to convey an idea that somebody had something to sell.

Mr. HAMLIN. If my colleague will allow me right there, I will make a suggestion to him. Samples in all time had gone through the mail, but had gone under letter postage.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Very well, you allowed a sample in the mail. If you could send a sample in the mail indicating that somebody had something to sell, the next proposition would be "why not send the thing itself?" If you encourage a man to look at the sample, why not allow him to send the thing itself? So the thing itself got into the mail, and by small degrees, one step after another, one little innovation after another, a little yielding by good nature every now and then, step by step, at last merchandise at large has got in. Now you have the whole body of merchandise in the mail. There is nothing I believe that is not absolutely dangerous to the mail which is not allowed. I appeal to the sense of the Senate whether there is a Senator here who believes there is the slightest authority on earth for any such thing in the mail? If this question could be raised before the Supreme Court of the United States, every particle of it would be inhibited in the mail, absolutely enjoined. There is not a shadow of foundation for it. It is an absolute usurpation in every sense. There is no justification for it. It not only is abhorrent to the sense of the Constitution, and in violation of sixty-three years of policy as my colleage says, but it is in contravention of and incongruous to the very subject of the mail. What is merchandise? It goes with the pace of the snail. What does the mail do? It goes by express. I know in these days of lightning expresses and lightning trains, which I may notice a little later, we carry a portion of the mail by lightning express to the exclusion of the rest.

Mr. President, the remedy for what we are complaining of, the remedy for the evil we are encountering, the remedy for this incongruity in the public service, is to strike it out. That is the only remedy you have. I know how difficult that is, how difficult it is going to be; but I appeal to Senators in this time of reform, in this time of retrenchment, in this time when it behooves us to criticise every branch of the public service and lop off all its excrescences, when it is our duty with manly fortitude to walk up to every branch of the public service and criticise it and prune it and bring it within the principles of the Constitution and the laws—I submit whether when four millions of deficiency come to this service from this one particular item, or class of items, we shall not cut it out, although it may be imbedded, as my honorable friend from Kansas says, in the public service in such a way that the people of the United States would be greatly disappointed if we should do it. The people of the United States are patriotic and intelligent, and the people of the United States would no more sustain a thing of this sort if they understood it than we would ourselves. The truth about it is that the people of the United States did not put it in and the people of the United States would not allow it to be kept in, in my judgment, in the interest of classes. That is what it is to a very great extent; it is in the interest of the trading classes. It is the spirit of traffic that makes these innovations on the laws, and that spirit grows stronger and stronger every day as the great trading, trafficking centers become potent and influential in the country.

I regret extremely that my honorable colleague and his committee have not found it worth while to strike directly at this burden on the public Treasury, at this incongruity in the public service; but it is better than nothing that it should be taxed if it must be in the mail. If it must go in the mail, make it pay. Now it does not pay. It ought to pay. It ought not to be in the mail for the reasons I have stated, because it is not there by authority and it is incongruous; but if it must stay in the mail, let it pay.

Let us look at another subject, Mr. President. In the speech, so full of facts, made by my colleague the other day, he gave us a table, which is printed and will be found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which discloses another feature of this same service, that is itself, as I submit to the Senate, a very great abuse—which discloses a very startling fact to my mind, a fact wherein the most important, the primary, and the essential idea of the mail is subordinated to the secondary consideration; a fact wherein letter postage yielding four or five millions of dollars to this branch of the service is entirely subordinated and that sum absorbed, and three millions in addition to that sunk in the carrying of newspapers well-nigh free. Now let us look at that fact. I believe that is not embraced in this bill; I am sorry it is not. That newspapers are legitimately in the mail, I do not deny. They are there properly; they ought to be carried, and they ought to have all the facilities of the mail; but that they ought to make a reasonable compensation for that service, I think every Senator will agree; that they ought to make a reasonable contribution, every Senator will agree; and never in the history of this country was the press of this country better able to do it than it is now. Look at the magnificent establishments in New York City, Boston, Chicago, and all the large cities and centers. They have become large establishments, wealthy establishments, having immense revenues and immense influence in the country. Now I ask is there any earthly reason why such establishments as those should not make a reasonable contribution for the privileges they ask, demand, and receive?

According to this table we carry through the mails 55,783,832 pounds of newspapers annually, which is about twenty-seven thousand tons, from Maine to California, the length and breadth of this country. For how much? The cost of that transportation is $7,969,240.97, according to the estimation and calculation of the Post-Office Department. What do they pay? They pay $976,217.06, leaving a deficiency to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States of $6,993,023.91. Can any Senator tell me on what ground that is allowable? Can any Senator tell me why the newspapers of this country should be carried through the mails at a loss of $7,000,000, a subsidy of $7,000,000, and we be forced to go about to these Departments and carry the hat for contributions from twelve-hundred-dollar and fourteen-hundred-dollar clerks? We are engaged in that business, and shall be until the close of this session, cutting down salaries, cutting in all directions, as if our case was one of desperation. We do not have either the public virtue or the manly independence or the patriotism to look this startling fact in the face and say to the press, "You must pay something for this service; you must pay something more, you must pay a reasonable contribution." It is not a case of charity at all.

How did this come about? Until 1850 the newspapers were always below the letters, but they were upon terms very nearly compensating, contributing a reasonable sum for the privilege. But in 1852 or 1853, I think, as it appears from the speech of my colleague, the rates were reduced some 50 or 60 per cent. That went along until 1861 or 1862 when the newspaper postage was further reduced, some 50 per cent. more of what was left, and in 1874 it was still further reduced. During all this period the public press was never more prosperous in the world. Was there any occasion for that? Was there any reason for it? Is there any other class of interests in this country so subsidized? If there is, I do not know it.

I ask Senators is there any justification for such a thing as that? Are you willing to vote $7,000,000 deficiency this year out of the Treasury of the United States and assess it on the people of this country to the end that the newspapers may be carried through the mail without charge? For, Senators, $976,000 out of nearly $8,000,000 expense is too small a matter to talk about as a compensation. It is a mere beggarly charge anyway. In these days of financial reform I submit whether the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads in the sense of this Senate have not proposed a most important reform, and I submit whether this branch of the public service has not gone in this direction as long as it ought to go; and, Senators, I submit to you that there are two abuses here which are really startling. The fact that the postage upon newspapers in the last twenty years has been reduced so that their contribution to-day is merely nominal, while from that branch of the service or from that item of the postal service there is a deficiency of $7,000,000, is a fact so startling that the Senate should never pause until it is corrected.

I know what is said about it, that it is the distribution of intelligence and news. I do not know that the newspapers themselves would like to put it upon that ground wholly. I hardly think that there is an intelligent editor or publisher in the whole country who would claim this exemption for himself. If we vote it, very well; if we choose to give a subsidy of $7,000,000 to the newspaper press of the country for any consideration, they will not reject it. If we can harmonize our views with an idea of public interest or the advancement of the public interest by taking $7,000,000 out of the public Treasury to float the press free, they are not the people to complain, and they are not to blame for that. But I submit, Mr. President, that upon every principle of economy, upon every principle of fair dealing, this interest ought to take its share in the public burdens with all other interests; and as high as I think of the distribution of intelligence and of knowledge among the people, and as liberal as I would be in all legitimate undertakings to accomplish that end, I do not put so high an estimate upon what we are doing as to believe that we are doing our full duty when this expenditure is put in our face and we know that while we are doing all we can to cut down the public service in all other directions, here is a deficiency so large that it cannot but challenge our consideration.

My honorable friend from Kansas seemed to have an idea that this service should be treated as a branch of the essential government itself. I want to show Senators how this has always been treated in matters of appropriation, what we have always thought of this branch of the service, so to speak. You will find that instead of appropriating money out of the Treasury of the United States for this service, the practice uniformly has been to appropriate it in this way: "The money appropriated for the postal service in each year shall be appropriated by law out of"—out of what? Out of the Treasury of the United States, as in the case of the Army and the Navy? No, sir; but "out of the revenues of the service." That is what the law is; that is the rule of action; that is the rule, I submit to my honorable friend, with the great respect I have for his character. He is here under the obligations of the law, and the obligations of the law from time immemorial require him to appropriate out of the revenues of the postal service and not out of the public Treasury; and whenever we put our hands into the public Treasury at the rate of $4,000,000 in the interest of cheap transportation, or of $7,000,000 in the interest of the press, we violate the Constitution or violate that policy which was established by the founders of the Government and continued uninterruptedly for over sixty years, to say nothing of our own notions in these times of public economy.

Mr. President, I greatly hope that, as a partial measure, the bill which has been reported by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, with such commendable industry in the consideration of it, will pass. Although I think it inadequate, it is one step toward getting back to a sound basis on this question. To make this third-class matter in the mail, merchandise in the mail, pay an adequate compensation for its carriage will do something toward in the end getting it out of the mail, I hope. At any rate, in the interests of economy it will enable us in this year to make such retrenchments as that we may not be compelled to unreasonably cripple other branches of the public service which cannot so well bear the burden.

Mr. WITHERS. Mr. President, I understand it is the desire of the chairman of the committee who reported the bill to have a vote this evening on the bill, and therefore I propose to devote a very few moments to what I shall say in reference thereto. I will premise by stating that I agree very much with what has been said by several Senators on the other side in reference to the impolicy of making the mails the medium for distributing merchandise, and I very cheerfully voted for the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina proposing to strike from the bill those provisions which apply to merchandise; but as we could not secure the adoption of that amendment, as it was resisted by the friends of the bill, we have now to do the best we can.

I am utterly and entirely opposed to the prohibition of the transportation of books or any other literary matter through the mails. I believe that a proper regard for the public interest for multiplying the facilities for acquiring knowledge and information demands that books should be carried through the mails whether they pay the cost of transportation or not.

But before I descend to a discussion of the details of the bill, I want to say one or two words in reference to my friend, the Senator from Maine, [Mr. MORRILL,] who has just discussed the constitutional features of the bill, who denies in toto that there exists any constitutional power to transport through the mails the matter to which he objects at a loss to the Government. Mr. President, I had been of the opinion that I was rather a straight-laced, strict constructionist of the Constitution, and I cannot say now that I am sorry to find that the Senator from Maine goes a bow-shot beyond me in requiring the most rigid adhesion to the principles of that great instrument. All that I ever claimed for it was that we had the right to do anything which the Constitution authorized or to pass any act which was necessary to carry out the plain provisions of the Constitution. I therefore argue that when the Constitution empowers us to establish post-offices and post-roads it is entirely within the province of Congress to decide for themselves and fix by appropriate legislation as to the character of the matter which shall be transported along those post-roads and shall be received in those post-offices. I think, so far from this being a violent interpretation of the Constitution, that we have before us indubitable evidence that such was the construction placed upon it by the framers of that instrument; and, so far from merchandise and books being excluded from the mails, the history of the legislation on the subject indicates that from the very earliest period of the formation of this Government and the establishment of the postal service both books and packages were transmitted through the mails by authority of law.

The Senator from Maine shakes his head. I propose to read from the statutes the law providing for the transportation of letters and packets through the mail, passed within less than five years after the Constitution was adopted; and I wish also, in the same connection, to state that Congress at that day exercised the discretion which I claim for it under the Constitution, by permitting mail matter to be transported through the mail at a dead loss to the Government, because the franking privilege was established in 1791 by authority of law. I ask now the attention of both the Senators from Maine to this provision in the statute, section 9 of an act passed by the Second Congress:

That from and after the 1st day of June next, the deputy postmaster and persons authorized by the Postmaster-General shall demand and receive, for the postage and conveyance of letters and packets, except such as are hereinafter excepted, according to the several rates and sums following.

Mr. HAMLIN. Perhaps I can save my friend some trouble if he will allow me to say that in the administration of the Department from then to now a packet has been a packet of letters, and nothing else.

Mr. WITHERS. Very good; but I will show the Senator that he is mistaken in his definition of the word "packet," and that it has not the signification which he gives to it, but it is used as a generic term. My friend from North Carolina is looking for the reference.

Mr. HAMLIN. It means packages of letters and dispatches.

Mr. WITHERS. "Letters" are one thing and "letters and packets" are another thing. I think I can substantiate my allegation by the quotation I referred to just now.

Mr. DAWES. In point of fact, I think the Senator is mistaken. Whether the language of the statute is broad enough to include merchandise or not, may be a question; but in practice I think the Senator will ascertain at the Post-Office Department that no such thing as merchandise ever went through the mail until 1851.

Mr. WITHERS. I am perfectly aware that merchandise as such is not provided for by the statute; but I say that during the years which immediately succeeded the adoption of the Constitution and the establishment of the postal service, provision was made by law for the transportation of other matters than those to which both the Senators from Maine assert that the postal service was restricted.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I think the Senator must misunderstand me, because the distinction I drew was between mail matter proper and merchandise. My proposition was that merchandise had been put upon the mails recently, and that there is no authority in the Constitution for that.

Mr. WITHERS. I understood that portion of the argument of the Senator from Maine who has just interrupted me. I thought, though, if I understood the argument, that it tended to establish two propositions: first, with regard to the unconstitutionality of providing for the transmission by mail of anything other than letters and intelligence, especially if it was done at a loss so as to require an appropriation of money from the Treasury to cover such transportation.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. No, sir; on that the Senator will allow me to state that I said that that was the policy of the Government and that that was in harmony with what I conceived to be the nature of the service itself on the ground that it was not an essential element of the Government. That is my ground. I did not say that it was otherwise than constitutional.

Mr. WITHERS. My understanding was that the constitutional argument was directed to that particular point by the Senator from Maine who has just taken his seat. If I was mistaken in it, of course I have nothing further to say upon that branch of the subject. I will read from an act of the Fifth Congress, passed in 1799:

And for every double letter, or one composed of two pieces of paper, double those rates; and for every triple letter, or one composed of three pieces of paper, triple those rates; and for every packet composed of four or more pieces of paper, or other thing—

I ask the especial attention of the Senators from Maine—

And for every packet composed of four or more pieces of paper or other thing, and weighing one ounce avoirdupois, quadruple those rates, and in that proportion for all greater weight: Provided, That no packet of letters conveyed by the water mails shall be charged with more than quadruple postage unless the same shall actually contain more than four distinct letters. No postmaster shall be obliged to receive to be conveyed by the mail any packet which shall weigh more than three pounds.

Now, if the provision "or other thing" is not broad enough to cover something more than the specific restriction which the senior Senator from Maine desires to apply to it, I am not competent to construe the English language. I therefore assert as susceptible of demonstration that the practice in the earlier years of this Government, when the Constitution had recently been adopted, when the men who framed that Constitution were yet living and acting in Congress as members thereof, and who must of course have known what they designed to provide for by the provisions of that Constitution, was that matter was carried through the mails at a dead loss to the Government and by operation of law, and that packets of other than letters were received and transmitted by mail. This being the case, I think the whole argument based upon the allegation as to the unconstitutionality of the proposed amendment, and also as to the impolicy and want of any precedent in the history of the Government for the transportation of matter other than letters and newspapers, falls to the ground.

I was very much struck with the very able argument made by the distinguished Senator from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] the other day in his opening speech on this bill; and I think he nearly, if not entirely, convinced me of the impolicy and impropriety, in the present straitened condition of our finances, of permitting merchandise, properly so called, to be carried by mail at a loss to the Government; but I dissent entirely from the position which he subsequently assumed by which he sought to establish the identity of books, bound or unbound, with merchandise. He believes that the publishers of books stand precisely on the same footing with any other merchants. I do not. I think they are entitled to greater consideration at the hands of the Government. I believe that greater encouragement should be given to them than to merchants who trade in clothing or other articles, simply because, by the dissemination of their wares through the country, as you increase the facilities for their distribution through the country you increase the intelligence of the country, you cultivate the intellect of the country, and the country gets paid back more than four times over for the expense which is thereby incurred.

The Senator's nice distinction between knowledge and intelligence, it seems to me, though philologically correct, was scarcely applicable to the bill under consideration; for if any reason exist why we should transmit intelligence to the people through the medium of the mail even at a loss to the Government, I think the reason exists a fortiori for the transmission of knowledge through the mail for the benefit of the public mind. Therefore I dissent entirely from the distinction he drew, especially as he applied the principle to discriminate against books as in favor of newspapers.

Now, that the revenues of the Government derived from the postal service fall far short of its expenditures is a fact about which there can be no question; but I think the assertion that this deficit has its origin in an immense loss on the transportation of second and third class mail matter may be received with many grains of allowance. I think the developments which have taken place recently here and elsewhere indicate that a portion of the deficit in that service, at least, may be attributable to other causes than the loss simply by the transportation of second and third class matter. I think that the frauds which are admitted now to have been perpetrated upon the Post-Office Department in the way of straw-bids for contracts, and other means whereby that Department has been wronged to the extent of thousands and hundreds of thousands and perhaps millions of dollars, go far toward accounting for a considerable portion of the alleged deficit.

But, sir, I do not care to pursue that branch of the subject further. I want to bring the mind of the Senate to the consideration of the question whether the bill as reported from the committee is preferable to the bill passed by the House of Representatives. Both have their defects, I admit. If I were individually consulted upon the subject I should provide a bill differing from both. But as we are reduced now to the alternative of selecting the one or the other, I have no hesitation in saying that I give the preference to the substitute offered by the Senator from Kansas, which is the House bill. I give it for the reason that I believe the public sentiment through the country generally demands a restoration of the old rates, especially as to books and matter of a similar character, and it is in this question of book distribution that I feel a special interest. And I hope I may be pardoned, in the absence of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BRUCE] and in the absence of the distinguished Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON,] who have in their special charge the interests of this special class of my constituents, and whom I profess myself to have some interest in, for saying a word or two in behalf of the colored people of the South, who are especially interested in this matter of cheap postage on books.

We are making an effort now, an honest and earnest effort, to educate the colored people of the South. They are as a general thing impecunious. It is an important matter to them that they should have the facilities for acquiring the necessary books for prosecuting their education at the lowest possible rates. If you restore the old law to what it was prior to the amendment which passed a year ago, you enable these people to get from the publishers at first cost, with the addition of postage and a very moderate percentage of profit, the school-books which they demand and require to enable them to prosecute their studies; and although the amount involved is a trivial one in each case, in the aggregate it amounts to a good deal. Although it is but a little matter to me whether I pay fifteen cents for a spelling-book or twenty-five cents at a country store, it is a very important matter to the darkey who wants to send his children to the public schools but has not the means to furnish the books for them. In the interest of these people, I ask that this matter of the transmission of books by mail may be placed at the least possible rate, to increase the facilities for the distribution of school-books among the common people of the country, and especially among the colored people of my State of Virginia and the South generally.

The senior Senator from Maine, while admitting that the distribution of knowledge and intelligence was a matter of great import, dived deeper into the philosophy of the question and attempted to demonstrate that there were other claims far superior to those which demanded intellectual food, and that if we looked at the question in that way alone we ought to provide for the transportation of flour, meal, and meat, as well as clothing, in the mails, inasmuch as food and clothing were matters of greater necessity and importance than intelligence. The argument would be a good one but for the fact that food, flour, corn, and meat are generally the products of the soil and they are raised in every agricultural community throughout the land, and they can be much more cheaply provided by the efforts of individuals at home than they can be purchased at a distance unless some providential cause interposes. But I do not hesitate to assert here that I regard it as the duty of the Government in case such a contingency should arise as to threaten with starvation or severe suffering any portion of the people of this country, and there were no other means of transportation, and none more cheap could be devised, to send them by mail or by any other means at their command.

There is one feature of the postal bill under consideration which has received no attention from any one in this discussion, so far as I have heard, and I would ask attention to it. It is this: the great difference between the rates of postage as provided under the bill reported by the committee and the rates established in foreign countries, palpably and particularly the Canadian rates. I have on my table a report in which some statistics are given showing the relative rates of transportation by mail as provided for under the existing bill and those under the Canadian postal law. A practice seems to have grown up in the face of the discrimination and inequality which here exist, by which the postal service of the United States annually loses a very large amount of money in consequence of the great difference between these rates. The postage on books, for example, being four cents per pound in Canada, and in the United States sixteen cents per pound for distances under a thousand miles, as provided for in this bill, what is the practice? A dealer desiring to distribute books through the United States puts up one hundred, or five hundred, or a thousand of them in packages in a box, and transmits them by express to a post-office in Canada just beyond the border where each package being previously marked, before they are boxed, with its destination, the name of the person, and the post-office where it is to be sent, the box is opened at the Canadian post-office, and four cents per pound postage is collected upon the packages and they are distributed throughout the United States to the post-offices to which they are directed, and the Canadian postal service realizes all the money on them.

It seems to me that a bill is manifestly defective which permits such a practice to grow up under it, and that it is inevitably necessary that the bill should at least be amended in this particular so that the postal service in this country can be placed on an equal footing with that of the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. President, I am not discussing, I am suggesting objects of thought and points in reference to this bill as I go along, because the limited time which I propose to occupy precludes any extended and systematic discussion of its various features. I throw out these suggestions for the consideration of the distinguished Senator from Maine, the chairman of the committee, if his attention has not already been drawn to them, as I presume it has. I would suppose that he could suggest some remedy for the evil which I have just mentioned.

Mr. HAMLIN. I want to understand the Senator. Do I understand him that books printed in Canada are thus sent to this country?

Mr. WITHERS. No, sir. Books may be printed in New York and Boston and can be shipped by express to Canada marked to the destination of individuals in a thousand post-offices in the United States and they are mailed for the first time in Canada under the operation of the Canadian postal law, which prescribes a rate of four cents per pound, and no more can then be collected at our offices; the payment being made in Canada, no postage is collected by the United States.

Mr. President, I thought I was as much in favor of an economical administration of the Government as any Senator on this floor; that I was disposed as much as any one to economize in all directions which would not result in manifest detriment to the public service; but there are considerations which outweigh dollars and cents with me, and this question of disseminating information, intelligence, and knowledge among the people is one of those things. I think it is of superior importance to the question of dollars and cents. I dissent entirely from the doctrine of the Senator from Maine who last addressed you, that it was the design of the Government that the Post-Office Department should be a self-sustaining institution. I do not think there is anything to indicate that such was really the design primarily of the Government. Certainly its history for many years shows that it did not carry out the intention of the originators, if such were the design of those who planned and organized this service.

But, sir, the second-class matter to which the Senator from Maine who sits nearest me [Mr. MORRILL] alluded so frequently, the distribution of newspapers through the post at a loss to the Government of about $8,000,000 or $9,000,000 per annum, which was the fruitful source of stricture and criticism with him, would appear at first blush to be startling to the public mind, and some might well question the fact whether the rates established on newspapers ought not to be revised and modified in order to correct the immense loss which grows out of their transportation. But I think even in this matter, if it be carefully analyzed and studied, the Senate of the United States will agree with me that, although a large loss is realized by the Government for the transportation of this matter, though it is carried through the country at an immense loss, and requires an appropria tion of $6,000,000 or $8,000,000 to make good the deficit, still this money also is well spent. I believe in a free press. I believe in the distribution far and wide throughout the country of this grand source of intelligence. I believe that it will be a bad day for the country when we have the press muzzled in any particular, by any legislation, directly or indirectly. I believe that it is essential for the preservation of our free institutions that the people everywhere throughout the length and breadth of the land, not only in the centers of civilization and intelligence, but in every hamlet and cross-road and cabin throughout the land, shall know and feel an interest in what is transpiring at their national and State capitals. I believe that there is no better safe-guard for public virtue than the dissemination of such intelligence among the people; and while I would not defend the profligacy of the press, which sometimes crops out in rather offensive prominence, and while I would say that this liberty of the press is occasionaly abused by the newspapers of the land or some of them, I still take them in the aggregate, and no pecuniary consideration upon earth could induce me by my voice to smother or in any way retard the distribution of the intelligence which they convey throughout the length and breadth of this land.

I should like, if time permitted, to have discussed this question more elaborately in several of its phases; but, warned by the progress of time and knowing and sympathizing full well with the desire of the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, who reports this bill, to come to a final vote this evening, I will close what I have to say on the subject.

Mr. SARGENT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. Before the doors are closed, I wish to present a compilation of the laws showing the changes in the domestic rates of postage and the various provisions of the franking privilege from 1789 to the year 1876; also a statement showing the amount of receipts and expenditures of certain post-offices of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875; which has been prepared at the Post-Office Department. I move that it be printed, so that we may have it before us in the further consideration of the bill of the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN.]

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seven minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened, and (at four o'clock and fifty-seven minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, April 11, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of yesterday was read.

CORRECTION.

Mr. WADDELL. I rise to make a correction of the Journal. I am recorded on the vote upon the river and harbor bill——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman refers to the vote as published in the RECORD.

Mr. WADDELL. It is the same in the Journal. I am recorded as absent and not voting I was present, and voted "ay."

The SPEAKER. The Journal will be corrected accordingly, and also the RECORD.

The Journal, as corrected, was approved.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 192) for the relief of Caroline M. Purviance and Francis Wyeth;

An act (S. No. 309) for the relief of William L. Nance;

An act (S. No. 326) for the relief of the widow of L. H. Rousseau, deceased, late brigadier-general and brevet major-general of the United States Army; and

An act (S. No. 431) granting a pension to Elizabeth B. Thomas, widow of General Lorenzo Thomas, late of the United States Army.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASES.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I gave notice that this morning, immediately after the reading of the Journal, I would call up the contested-election cases of Bromberg vs. Haralson and Finley vs. Walls. But the gentleman from New York, [Mr. TOWNSEND,] who was one of the subcommittee in one of the cases and who made a minority report, is absent on account of a severe affliction in his family. I think it would be discourteous to him to take up the case in his absence. Therefore I will not call it up this morning, but give notice that on Tuesday of next week, immediately after the reading of the Journal, I will call up those cases, and will follow them with the case of Le Moyne vs. Farwell.

OSAGE LANDS IN KANSAS.

Mr. GOODIN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3125) providing for the sale of the Osage ceded lands in Kansas to actual settlers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

SALE OF LOGS ON MENOMONEE RESERVATION.

Mr. TUFTS. I ask unanimous consent that a Senate bill, which has the unanimous recommendation of the Committee on Indian Affairs, be taken up and acted on at once.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 697) authorizing sale of logs cut by Indians on the Menomonee reservation in Wisconsin, under the direction of the Interior Department.

The bill was read. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to cause to be sold at public sale to the highest bidder, for cash, after due advertisement and in such lots or quantities as he may deem judicious, all pine timber cut upon the Menomonee Indian reservation in Wisconsin, under the direction of the United States Indian agent, J. C. Bridgman. The proceeds arising from the sale of such timber are to be applied, first, to the payment of any and all indebtedness incurred for labor, supplies, and other expenses incident to the cutting and sale of the timber; and the surplus, if any, is to be deposited in the nearest depository to the credit of the United States, for the benefit of the said Menomonee Indians.

Mr. TUFTS. I think there can be no objection to this bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TUFTS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ARCHIE THREET.

Mr. LUTTRELL, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, moved that committee be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Archie Threet for carrying mails in Alabama, and the same be referred to the Committee of Claims; which motion was agreed to.

THIRD-CLASS MAIL MATTER.

Mr. COX. I ask unanimous consent to present resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of New York, relative to the rates of postage on third-class mail matter, and to move its reference to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COX. The resolutions are very brief, not hardly a stickful, and I move by unanimous consent they be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The resolutions are as follows:

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK,
Instituted A. D. 1768.

Resolutions relative to the rates of postage on third-class mail matter.

At a meeting of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, held on the 6th day of April, 1876, Mr. George W. Lane, second vice-president, in the chair, the following preamble and resolutions, offered by Mr. Francis B. Thurber, were adopted:

Whereas during the closing hours of the last session of Congress changes were made in the rates of postage on third-class matter which have proved detrimental to the business interests of the country, and have been productive of general dissatisfaction; and whereas the present House of Representatives have passed an act restoring the old schedule of rates, but this act is now sought to be amended in the Senate in a manner that retains many of the objectionable features of the legislation of last session: Therefore,

Resolved, That in the opinion of this chamber the former rates have proved to be of great value to the public, and unless it can be plainly shown that some items which were carried under this schedule have proved unduly burdensome to the mails the former rates should be restored.

Resolved, That in the adjustment of rates a distinction should be made between merchandise and merchandise samples, the former being usually of large size and bulk, (limit four pounds,) while the latter are usually quite small and would generally come under the limit of twelve ounces.

SAM. D. BABCOCK, President.

A true copy. Attest:

GEORGE WILSON, Secretary.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE CAPITOL.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill No. 417 may be considered now and put upon its passage with an amendment recommended by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. In the first place, I ask the bill may be reported, and then I wish to say a word. It is a bill (S. No. 417) for continuing the work of improvement on the Capitol grounds.

The bill, which was read, provides that for continuing the work of the improvement on the Capitol ground during the present fiscal year the sum of $25,000 is thereby appropriated.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, the appropriations for the last fiscal year are $200,000 and $200,000 for the present fiscal year. The appropriation made for the present fiscal year is substantially exhausted, and, as the House is aware, one of the marble vases on the east front of the Capitol is still incomplete and certain grading and filling are necessary to be done north of the Capitol and south of it to put these grounds in reasonable condition. Twenty-five thousand dollars is required for that purpose by the architect of the Capitol, Mr. Clark. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds recommend the passage of this bill reducing the amount of the appropriation from $25,000 to $20,000, believing $20,000 would be sufficient to accomplish the purpose.

I wish to say to the House that the importance of early action on this bill is apparent. If these grounds are to be put in fair condition, such as is desirable, it must be done in the early spring. While I am not favorable to this kind of appropriations, I do not see how it can be avoided in this instance.

I move to amend the bill by reducing the appropriation from $25,000 to $20,000, as recommended by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and also to add the following words:

To be expended under the direction of the architect of the Capitol.

Mr. KASSON. Does that change the way in which the work is now being done?

Mr. HOLMAN. It is to be expended under the direction of the architect of the Capitol.

Mr. KASSON. But under whose charge is it to be expended?

Mr. HOLMAN. That is not defined in the bill.

Mr. KASSON. The improvements are going on under Mr. Olmstead.

Mr. HOLMAN. But the money itself is to be expended by the architect of the Capitol; he is the accounting officer.

Mr. KASSON. I have no objection if it does not interfere with the plans approved by the two committees of the House and Senate.

Mr. HOLMAN. It does not interfere with them.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON THE TERRITORIES.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Mr. Speaker, in consequence of the pressure of business before the Committee on the Territories I am directed by that committee to ask leave of the House for it to sit during the sessions of the House.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

BAKER CANFIELD.

Mr. BRADLEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3126) for the relief of Baker Canfield, of Saint Louis, Michigan; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN DEPARTMENT.

Mr. WILSHIRE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3127) to create an Indian department and provide for the government and civilization of the Indians; which was read a first and second time, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WILSHIRE. I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to be considered at the same time with the bill now in that committee providing for the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department.

Mr. CONGER. That is a most unusual request.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to the proposition of the gentleman from Arkansas. Let the bill be referred to the committee.

Mr. WILSHIRE. My object in introducing the bill is to have it printed.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to its being printed and referred to the Military Committee, which is the proper committee.

Mr. WILSHIRE. I desire that it shall be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. RANDALL. I understood the bill to relate to the War Department.

Mr. WILSHIRE. The object of the bill is to create an Indian department. It has nothing to do with the War Department.

The bill was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PAGE. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being demanded, the morning hour begins at twenty minutes to one o'clock; and the business of the morning hour is the calling of committees for reports of a public nature. The call rests with the Committee on Commerce.

FOG-SIGNAL ON POINT WILSON.

Mr. HEREFORD, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1553) for the purchase of a site and the erection of a fog-signal on Point Wilson, in Washington Territory, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and that the accompanying report be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

EMBANKMENT ON NEVILLE ISLAND.

Mr. HEREFORD also, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 1400) authorizing the residents and property-owners of Neville Township, county of Allegheny, and State of Pennsylvania, to close the channel of the Ohio River on the south side of Neville Island by the construction of an embankment or causeway from the head of said island to the southern shore of said river.

The bill was read. It authorizes and empowers the residents and property-owners of Neville Township, county of Allegheny and State of Pennsylvania, to close the channel of the Ohio River on the south side of Neville Island, in said township, by the construction of an embankment or causeway from the head of said island to the southern shore of said river; provided, however, that the Government of the United States shall not be liable for any expenses incurred in the performance of said work, or by reason thereof.

Mr. HEREFORD. Neville Island, or township, is in the county of Allegheny, in the State of Pennsylvania. It is cut off from the main shore by a branch of the Ohio River. There is a petition among the papers accompanying the bill from the residents of that island or township asking that that arm of the river may be closed. They represent in their petition that they are entirely cut off from the main land of their county and their State by this arm of the river, and they ask that it be closed up so that they may have a causeway by which they can communicate with their county and State.

There is a letter accompanying the report from the Chief Engineer to whom this matter was referred. He referred it to Colonel Merrill, the engineer in charge of that river. Colonel Merrill reported to him, and the Chief of Engineers reported to our committee that he saw no objection to the closing up of that arm of the river; that it did not in any way endanger the travel or commerce of the world, but, on the contrary, would perhaps be an aid to it. Therefore, the committee, being satisfied that it would be of very great advantage to these parties living upon this island, and of no disadvantage to the commerce or the travel upon the Ohio River, have directed me to report the bill favorably and to ask that it be placed upon its passage.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would inquire of the gentleman reporting this bill whether this work is recommended by the officers of the Engineer Corps of the Army having charge of that river?

Mr. HEREFORD. I stated that the matter was referred to the Chief of Engineers, General Humphreys, and he referred it to Colonel Merrill, who is in charge of the Ohio River, and they both concurred that this work would be of no disadvantage to the travel on the river or the commerce thereof. I may state also that the bill provides that it shall be done at the expense of the persons living on the island. It will involve no expense to the General Government at all.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is the Government not liable for damages?

Mr. HEREFORD. Not in any way.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HEREFORD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PROTECTION OF LIVES ON STEAMSHIPS, ETC.

Mr. REAGAN, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back, with an adverse recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1380) to protect life on steamships, steamboats, and sailing-vessels; and the same was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. REAGAN also, from the same committee, reported back, with an adverse recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 103) to revise, amend, and consolidate the laws relating to the security of life on board vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, and for other purposes; and the same was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

RECIPROCAL TRADE WITH CANADA.

Mr. HEREFORD. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to report adversely on the joint resolution (H. R. No. 14) authorizing the appointment of commissioners to ascertain on what terms a mutually beneficial treaty of commerce with Canada can be arranged, and to move that it be laid on the table. But I desire to say that, while the committee recommend that the resolution shall be laid upon the table, it entirely meets their consent that the minority of the committee shall present their views.

Mr. WARD. With the approbation of the committee and the consent of the House, I desire to present a minority report, and to ask that the report be printed, and that a day, some distant day, be assigned for the discussion of this question. I would suggest the third Tuesday in May.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WARD] if he excepts appropriation bills.

Mr. WARD. I am willing to agree to that. I believe there is no other order in the way on the day I have mentioned.

The SPEAKER. The first question is on the motion of the gentleman from West Virginia, who reports back the joint resolution, that it be laid on the table.

Mr. WARD. I call for a division. I think the question is too important to be thrust aside in this way. There is no matter of greater importance in the commercial relations of this country.

Mr. FORT. I rise to a point of order. The question is not debatable.

The SPEAKER. The motion to lay on the table is not debatable.

Mr. KASSON. I ask that the joint resolution may be reported.

The joint resolution was read. It authorizes the President of the United States to appoint three commissioners, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to confer with other commissioners duly authorized by the government of Great Britain, or whenever it shall appear to be the wish of that government to appoint such commissioners, and to investigate and ascertain on what basis a treaty of reciprocal trade, for the mutual benefit of the people of the United States and the Dominion of Canada, can be negotiated.

Mr. KASSON. Will the Chair now state the position of the question?

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Commerce reported the joint resolution adversely, and the chairman moves that it be laid upon the table. The gentleman from New York, [Mr. WARD,] representing the minority of the committee, desires that it shall remain before the House and be assigned for a day as a special order for consideration. The pending motion is to lay the joint resolution on the table.

Mr. KASSON. If that motion is not sustained, then I presume the motion of the gentleman from New York will be in order?

The SPEAKER. That motion will then be in order.

Mr. KASSON. I hope an opportunity will be given for the consideration of this joint resolution in the House.

Mr. FORT. I object to debate.

The question was taken on Mr. HEREFORD's motion to lay the joint resolution on the table; and on a division there were—ayes 83, noes 71.

Mr. WARD called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WARD and Mr. HEREFORD were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 64, noes 89.

So the House refused to lay the joint resolution on the table.

Mr. WARD. I now move that the joint resolution and the minority report be printed and made the special order for the third Tuesday in May, after the morning hour, and from day to day thereafter until disposed of.

Mr. RANDALL. Subject to appropriation bills.

Mr. WARD. Certainly.

Mr. WARD's motion was agreed to.

Mr. WARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER AT SIOUX CITY.

Mr. KEHR, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 2689) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Sioux City, Iowa.

Mr. KEHR. I would state to the House that this bill was read in the House on the first day of this month, and it will be found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the following day. I make that statement with the view of avoiding, if possible, the necessity of having the bill read again. I have been instructed by the committee to report it back with an amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the bill had better be read.

The bill was again read.

The amendment reported by the committee was as follows:

Add to the second section the following proviso:

And provided further, That any bridge built under the provisions of this act shall be at right angles to the current of the river.

Mr. KEHR. Mr. Speaker, shortly after the bill for which this is a substitute came into the hands of the Committee on Commerce the committee addressed a communication to the Secretary of War with a view to obtain the opinion of the Engineer Department of the Government upon the propriety of the bridge plan provided for in the bill, and in due time they received an answer informing them that the requirements designated in this bill were similar to those that are in vogue in reference to bridges already constructed over the Missouri River, and indicating a few slight amendments which were adopted by the committee and are incorporated in the substitute.

In addition to this the committee has also examined the bills authorizing the construction of bridges across the Missouri River at Saint Joseph, Booneville, Nebraska City, and Brownsville, and find that the requirements are the same, with the exception that this bill authorizes the Secretary of War, if in his opinion it will not interfere with the free navigation of the river, to authorize the company to construct a ponton or pile bridge.

The bill is very careful in its provision to the effect that the Secretary of War is invested with full control over the bridge, the object being to secure the free navigation of the Missouri River. The bill is the unanimous recommendation of the committee; and I ask that the amendment be agreed to, and the bill passed. I am willing, however, to answer any inquiries that gentlemen desire to make.

Mr. HOLMAN. I did not hear very distinctly the reading of the bill, and I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Missouri whether it provides that in case it is found necessary by the Engineer Corps that changes shall be made in the plan of the bridge, those changes shall be made at the expense of the bridge company?

Mr. KEHR. The bill provides that the bridge plan shall be submitted to the Secretary of War before the work is commenced under this charter, and if it is found at any time thereafter that changes are necessary with a view to secure the free navigation of the river, that the Secretary shall not only have the power to direct that those changes shall be made, but that they shall be made at the expense of the bridge-owners. Indeed, the authority is far more ample than that, for the bill authorizes the Secretary of War, in case he finds it necessary, even to direct the removal of the bridge at the expense of the owners.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the engineer fix the point of location?

Mr. KEHR. The point of location is designated by the bill itself. I can only repeat that before work is commenced on the bridge the plans are to be submitted to the Secretary of War, and his sanction is necessary before any steps whatever can be taken in the construction of the bridge.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Commerce was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KEHR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

STEAM FERRY-BOAT GENEVA.

Mr. DUNNELL, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 2479) granting American registry to the Canadian steam ferry-boat Geneva, and for other purposes.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to grant an American registry to the Canadian steam ferry-boat Geneva, now owned by B. W. Folger and M. H. Folger, citizens of the United States, and residing at Cape Vincent, New York, upon their payment into the United States Treasury the duties legally chargeable upon said vessel.

Mr. DUNNELL. There is a report accompanying this bill, but it is somewhat lengthy, and I can state in a few words the substance of it. This ferry-boat, which is used simply for pleasure purposes, to carry pleasure parties among the islands between Cape Vincent and Kingston, was built by two young men at Kingston, at a cost of $8,750; the machinery was all bought in the State of New York. The boat runs largely in American waters; and the Committee on Commerce were unanimously in favor of giving an American register to this pleasure boat. The result of so doing will be to make the boat subject to taxation in our own country. The owners of the boat purchase their supplies in American ports. The committee could see no reason why under the circumstances there should not be an American register granted to this boat.

Mr. COX. I would like to inquire of the honorable gentleman what duties are payable to the United States on a vessel brought in under our registry laws?

Mr. DUNNELL. There are no duties payable to the United States, but the boat will be subject to taxation within the jurisdiction of the United States. There is now paid to the Canadian government some $270 taxation on this boat, which of course might be saved to our own citizens, for our own citizens own the boat, run it, and supply it in American ports. The boat was built of timber which at the time was at Kingston, but all the machinery was bought in the State of New York. It is the unanimous report of the committee, and I trust there will be no objection to the passage of this bill.

Mr. KELLEY. In the absence of the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER,] who has given much attention to this subject, I desire to state one or two objections to this bill. One objection is that all such granting of registers to foreign-built vessels vitiates our statistics. There is nothing more interesting to us at this time than to know the progress, especially the relative progress of ship-building, of steam tonnage constructed in this and other countries. All these admissions of foreign-built vessels to registry, as I have said, vitiate our statistics.

Again, it is a method of evading the tariff laws of this country. The wood hewn into shapes that was put into this vessel had it been brought from Canada into this country would have paid duties; and so with regard to all the materials in this vessel. But if you advance those materials from the simple forms to the perfect steam-vessel and then grant it an American register, you admit all that material free of duty.

Again, this is often made a means of committing frauds on the traveling public, especially the change of name, which is a very insidious form of bill, often introduced into this House. A steamer has run down and deteriorated; has lost reputation; has encountered accidents. A bill is introduced here to change the name of that steamer; she is put upon some other river or body of water; and because of the action taken by Congress upon false or imperfect information a cargo of valuable goods, perhaps a number of lives, are lost from being intrusted to a worn-out vessel under a new name. This granting of American registers to foreign vessels is a better form of perpetrating the same injury to the public.

Considering that this is a matter of only some two or three hundred dollars a year in the way of taxes and revenue, (if that be all that we would get,) I think it would be a most inadequate compensation for a change that may be inflicting a wrong upon our own people and no compensation at all for the duties we would have derived had these patriotic young gentlemen brought their timber from Canada and constructed their steamboat in some American ship-yard.

Mr. DUNNELL. Permit me to say that this vessel was built last year, in 1875, therefore there can be no such danger as the one referred to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] speaking for the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER.] If there shall be any objection to the passage of this bill I will call for the reading of the report. I did not do so at first, hoping that the Committee on Commerce might have an opportunity during this morning hour to report the few bills remaining in their hands.

Mr. KELLEY. I would ask the gentleman if he wanted to know how many steam-vessels we had constructed within any given period of years, and what their tonnage was, how would he get that information except by going to the office of registry of vessels? If our steamers are to be built in foreign countries and admitted by act of Congress to American registry, we will have no means of knowing the progress or the decline of one of the most important branches of our industry. If it were for that reason alone, I would resist the making of a precedent of this kind. There is nothing that should be more reliable than the Government statistics of the increase or decrease of tonnage, whether steam or sail, ocean or inland, lake or river. This is a precedent for vitiating all these statistics, and I hope the House will resist it.

Mr. COX. This bill is a very curious commentary on our tariff system. I agree with my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] if anything is to be done with reference to the tariff, or the bringing in of foreign materials, it ought to be done in a proper legal manner. Now, if I understand this bill, it is for the purpose of giving a register to a foreign-built vessel. I believe that if we cannot have ships built abroad to come in free, it might be wise policy to make a tariff per ton ad valorem on all vessels built abroad. Everybody can see the animus of my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] in opposing this bill.

Mr. KELLEY. My animus is the vindication of the statistics of the Government.

Mr. COX. I do not care so much about the vitiated character of our statistics as I do about increasing our tonnage and our shipping in a fair way; in other words, I would cheapen transportation by cheapening our steam and sail tonnage.

Mr. KELLEY. And I would maintain the accuracy of the facts by which the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] and all others can from year to year learn whether our tonnage is increasing or decreasing, whether we are building more or fewer vessels; and I see here an attempted inroad upon the only line of information that will enable us to do that.

Mr. COX. Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not care much about the statistics as to a dozen or so of these vessels, averaging perhaps less than one hundred tons each; but I do object to this class of special legislation. We may as well enter our protest at once against it. Here we have bill after bill brought in by the Committee on Commerce for special vessels. Why does not that intelligent committee get up some general law? Never in any Congress since I have been here have I seen so many bills of this kind emanate from any committee unchallenged. There is only one remedy for this; cut down your tariff, or fix a rate per ton on foreign vessels, or let them come in free. This mere subterfuge—I use the word with all respect—by which the tariff is dodged is not the highest kind of legislative politics.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, this bill is but another effort to transfer to foreign ship-yards the building of our ships. It is the commencement of a system which would transfer to Canada or to the ship-building establishments of Europe the building of such vessels as are now built at Philadelphia, Chester, Wilmington, New London, and other ship-yards in the United States. It would allow the building of steamboats in Mexico for the navigation of the Mississippi River. It would destroy entirely the industry of this country now employed in that branch of our navigation in order to give to the subjects of other countries advantages which we ought to hold and maintain for our own citizens. The ship-building of this country has dwindled very rapidly since the war. Before the war our tonnage employed in the foreign trade amounted to two-thirds of all that was so engaged; to-day it amounts to only one-third. The passage of bills of this kind tends to transfer the whole of that tonnage to foreign vessels. I trust that every gentleman on this floor who desires to keep the industry of this country in the hands of our own people will vote against this insidious attempt to transfer the ship-building of the nation into foreign hands.

Mr. DUNNELL. I am certainly surprised at the very great effort which is being made by certain gentlemen to defeat the change of the register of a little pleasure-yacht costing $8,750, which has been built at Kingston by Americans, a majority of all that went into the vessel (including the machinery, which came from New York) having been the product of this country. Circumstances favored the building of the hull in part by American mechanics at Kingston.

Now gentlemen speak a great deal about shipping. This is simply a pleasuring yacht for going among a few islands in that vicinity. These are American young men, who started poor boys and have built themselves up. This yacht is their property. It runs almost wholly in American waters, touching at Kingston. This is their business and their only business.

Mr. KELLEY rose.

Mr. DUNNELL. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] always drags in matter of this kind upon the most trivial occasion. I can see no reason why the question of American shipping should be brought in necessarily by either of the gentlemen from Pennsylvania or by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.]

Mr. KELLEY. As I said, I spoke in the absence of my friend from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER,] who I see is now here. I want merely to say in this connection that Kingston is not very far from Detroit, and that American mechanics at Detroit build very good steamers; and I have no doubt that, if these patriotic young men had not discovered that they could have their work done more cheaply with Lower Canadian wages at Kingston than at Detroit, they would have been as willing to build on one bank of the river as on the other.

Mr. DUNNELL. Let me say one word further in this connection. This change of registry is recommended by the United States consul at Kingston, by the collector of the port at Cape Vincent, and by all the Federal officers in that vicinity. I am satisfied that if the report were read (which I wished to avoid so as not to delay other bills in the hands of the committee) there would be no objection.

Mr. KELLEY. As this is a pleasure-boat, I have no doubt the consul and the collector will enjoy many a pleasant excursion on it.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] who has very enlarged ideas about statistics, is not very much acquainted with the geography of the lakes. Kingston is only seven hundred or eight hundred miles from Detroit. It is at the foot of Lake Ontario, and between it and Detroit are Lake Erie, Lake Ontario, and the Niagara River.

Mr. KELLEY. I confounded Windsor with Kingston.

Mr. CONGER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I believe I have been as strict and continuous in my opposition to the registry of foreign vessels, when it interfered with our own ship-building, as perhaps any member of the House. I find, however, that this is a pleasure-yacht for running among the islands of the Saint Lawrence. But, more than that, any objection which I might have to the bill is obviated by the provision that this boat shall pay duty as any other property coming into the United States. Therefore, if vessels thus registered are required to pay duty on their value as other property, I have no objection. I have myself introduced a bill for registry of an old ferry-boat, which is to be rebuilt, upon paying duty. It is to be repaired in an American ship-yard, and pay duty on all new material, and the repairs are to be done by American labor. When duty is to be paid there is no objection, but the general rule is not to change foreign registers to American registers without the payment of any duty whatever, affording no protection whatever to our own ship-yards and ship-builders. I do not oppose this particular boat, for it comes in paying duty on its whole value, and therefore our ship-builders are fully protected by it.

Mr. DUNNELL. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered, and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DUNNELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PORT OF LA CROSSE.

Mr. DUNNELL also, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 2403) to extend to the port of La Crosse, in the State of Wisconsin, the privileges of sections 2990 to 2997, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill, which was read, provides that the privileges of sections 2990 to 2997, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes be, and they are thereby, extended to the port of La Crosse, in the State of Wisconsin.

Mr. DUNNELL. I ask for the reading of the report accompanying the bill, as it contains a statement of all the facts.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Commerce have had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 2403) and would respectfully report:

The committee find that a like bill was passed by the last Congress through the House of Representatives, and that the Secretary of the Treasury furnished the following letter in relation thereto:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., January 5, 1875.

SIR: I inclose herewith a bill for the amendment of section 2997 of the Revised Statutes, and for reasons hereinafter mentioned respectfully recommend the passage thereof.

The object of the bill is to add to the list of ports entitled to the privilege of immediate transportation in bond to an interior port without appraisement at the port of original importation the ports of La Crosse, in the State of Wisconsin, and Detroit, in the State of Michigan.

It is represented that the business of La Crosse is rapidly increasing, and that it is for the interests of the revenue to extend to that port the same facilities as have been given to other western ports.

By the fifteenth section of the deficiency appropriation act of April 20, 1871, (17 Statutes at Large, page 10,) Detroit was added to the ports previously entitled to the privilege in question, but is omitted in the revision. This omission has not been regarded by this Department as affecting the status of Detroit in this respect, although there is room for question whether, under the operation of the repeal provisions, that port is or is not excluded from said privilege. To set the question at rest, therefore, I deem it advisable to reinstate said port by name among those entitled thereto.

Very respectfully,

B. H. BRISTOW,
Secretary.

Hon. JAMES G. BLAINE,
Speaker House of Representatives.

Mr. HOLMAN. If this was a port of delivery before the Revised Statutes were enacted, I do not object.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DUNNELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report a bill (H. R. No. 3128) to make appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for prior years, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to give notice that I reserve all points of order on this bill.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. I wish to give notice that I will to-morrow after the morning hour move to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of taking up and considering this bill.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SAYLER demanded the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired, and the regular order of business is the consideration of the special order relating to commerce and navigation.

Mr. REAGAN. I am willing to yield, if there be no objection, to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PIERCE] to submit a report.

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded, and the gentleman must proceed.

COMMERCE AND NAVIGATION.

Mr. REAGAN. I now call up the special order for this day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair.) The special order for to-day is the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2799) to amend certain sections of titles 48 and 52 of the Revised Statutes of the United States concerning commerce and navigation and the regulation of steam-vessels, reported from the Committee on Commerce by the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN.] This comes over from Saturday, April 1, and is made the special order for this day after the morning hour. The House had proceeded as in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule as far as the ninth section, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That section 4418 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall be so amended as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4418. The local inspectors shall also inspect the boilers of all steam-vessels before the same shall be used, and once at least in every year thereafter. They shall subject all boilers to the hydrostatic pressure, and shall satisfy themselves by thorough examination that the boilers are well made, of good and suitable material; that the openings for the passage of water and steam, respectively, and all pipes and tubes exposed to heat, are of proper dimensions and free from obstruction; that the spaces between and around the flues are sufficient; that the flues are circular in form; that the fire-line of the furnace is at least two inches below the prescribed minimum water-line of the boilers; that the arrangement for delivering the feed-water is such that the boilers cannot be injured thereby; and that such boilers and machinery and the appurtenances may be safely employed in the service proposed in the written application, without peril to life. They shall also satisfy themselves that the safety-valves are of suitable dimensions, sufficient in number, and well arranged, and that the weights of the safety-valves are properly adjusted, so as to allow no greater pressure in the boilers than the amount prescribed by the inspection certificate; that there is a sufficient number of gauge-cocks properly inserted, and, to indicate the pressure of steam, reliable and approved steam-gauges, one of which is to be placed in each fire-room and one in the engine-room, and which shall at all times be free to the inspection of passengers; and that there are reliable low-water gauges and a suitable steam-whistle; and that, when required by the inspectors, the fusible metals are properly inserted, so as to fuse by the heat of the furnace whenever the water in the boilers falls below its prescribed limits; and that adequate and certain provision is made for an ample supply of water to feed the boilers at all times, whether such vessel is in motion or not, so that in high-pressure boilers the water shall not be less than four inches above the top of the flues; and that means for blowing out are provided, so as to, so far as practicable, thoroughly remove the mud and sediment from all parts of the boilers when they are under the pressure of steam. In subjecting to the hydrostatic tests boilers usually designated and known as high-pressure boilers, the inspectors shall assume one hundred and ten pounds to the square inch as the maximum pressure allowable as a working power for a new boiler of forty-two inches in diameter, made in the best manner, of inspected iron plates one-fourth of an inch thick and of a quality required by law, and shall rate the working power of all high-pressure boilers, whether old or new, according to their strength compared with this standard; and in all cases the test applied shall exceed the working power allowed in the ratio of one hundred and sixty-five to one hundred and ten. In subjecting to the hydrostatic tests boilers usually designated and known as low-pressure boilers, the inspectors shall allow as a working power for each new boiler a pressure of only three-fourths the number of pounds to the square inch to which it has been subjected by the hydrostatic test, and for which it has been found to be sufficient. Should the inspectors be of the opinion that any boiler, by reason of its construction or material, will not safely allow so high a working pressure as is above described, they may, for reasons to be stated specially in their certificate, fix the working pressure of such boiler at less than three-fourths of the test-pressure. All boilers used on steam-vessels, and constructed of iron or steel plates inspected under the provisions of section 4430, shall be subjected to a hydrostatic test in the ratio of one hundred and fifty pounds to the square inch to one hundred pounds to the square inch of the working steam-power allowed. No boiler or pipe, nor any of the connections therewith, shall be approved which is made, in whole or in part, of bad material, or is unsafe in its form, or dangerous from defective workmanship, age, use, or other cause."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The pending amendment is one moved by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE] to amend the section just read, in line 25, after the words "gauge-cocks properly inserted," by inserting the words, "and the lowest gauge-cock shall not be inserted less than four inches above the top of the flues."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House divided on that amendment and no quorum appeared. The tellers were Mr. ODELL and Mr. REAGAN, and they will now resume their places.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 32, noes 112.

So the amendment was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed, without amendment, the bill of the House (H. R. No. 2934) to provide for the expenses of the admission of foreign goods to the centennial exhibition at Philadelphia.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 679) relative to interments in the Congressional Cemetery; and

A bill (S. No. 708) for the relief of John M. English, of North Carolina.

The message also requested the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. No. 700) to incorporate the Mutual Protection Fire-Insurance Company of the District of Columbia.

COMMERCE AND NAVIGATION.

The House resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2799) to amend certain sections of titles 48 and 52 of the Revised Statutes of the United States concerning commerce and navigation and the regulation of steam-vessels.

The Clerk read the following section:

SEC. 12. That section 4427 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4427. The hull and boiler of every tug-boat, towing-boat, and freight-boat shall be inspected under the provisions of this title; and the inspectors shall see that the boilers, machinery, and appurtenances of such vessel are not dangerous in form or workmanship, and that the safety-valves, gauge-cocks, low-water gauges, steam-gauges, steam-whistle, and fusible plugs are all attached in conformity to law; and the officers navigating such vessels shall be licensed in conformity with the provisions of this title, and shall be subject to the same provisions of law as officers navigating passenger-steamers."

Mr. COCHRANE. I offer the following amendment:

Amend section 4427 of the Revised Statutes, under section 12 of the bill, by adding to the end thereof and after the word "steamers" the following words:

"Provided, That nothing in this section shall in any way affect the provisions of section 4420 of the Revised Statutes, or any other act of Congress relating to the limitation of steam-pressure of vessels used exclusively for towing and carrying freights on the Mississippi River and its tributaries."

I understand that there is no objection on the part of the committee to this amendment. I would like the chairman of the committee to state whether I am correct.

Mr. REAGAN. Though I have not the authority of the committee to accept the amendment, I see no objection to it; and perhaps it is safest that it should go into the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following section:

SEC. 18. That section 4436 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall be so amended as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4436. Every boiler shall be provided with a good, well constructed safety-valve or valves, of such number, dimensions, and arrangements as shall be prescribed by the board of supervising inspectors, and shall also be provided with a sufficient number of gauge-cocks and a reliable low-water gauge; and in addition thereto there shall be inserted, in a suitable manner, in the flues, crown-sheet, or other parts of the boiler most exposed to the heat of the furnace when the water falls below its prescribed limits, a plug of good Banca tin."

Mr. REAGAN. I am instructed by the committee to offer the following amendment:

Amend section 18 by inserting after the word "thereto," in line 9, the words "when required by the inspectors."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following section:

SEC. 20. That section 4458 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall be so amended as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4458. Before issuing any license to any steamer, the collector or other chief officer of customs for the port or district shall demand and receive from the owners thereof, as a compensation for the inspection and examinations made for the year, the following sums in addition to the fees for issuing enrollments and licenses now allowed by law according to the tonnage of the vessel: For each steam-vessel of one hundred tons or under, $25; and, in addition thereto, for each and every ton in excess of one hundred tons, five cents.

"Each master, chief engineer, and first-class pilot, licensed as herein provided, shall pay, for every certificate granted by any inspector or inspectors, the sum of $8; and every chief mate, engineer, and pilot of an inferior grade shall pay, for every certificate so granted, the sum of $4.

"Such fees shall be paid over to the chief officer of customs in such manner and under such regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. CONGER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Texas whether the amounts prescribed in this section would be sufficient to make this branch of the service self-sustaining?

Mr. REAGAN. I will state that the receipts last year from inspections and licenses were $260,944.75; the expenditures of the same year were $212,392.02, leaving a surplus last year of $48,552.73. And upon this statement of the account the inspector-general of steam-vessels and the board of inspection are of opinion that we could reduce the fees of both classes of officers 20 per cent. and still leave the service self-sustaining.

Mr. COCHRANE. I offer the following amendment:

On page 16, line 16, strike out the word "eight," and insert in lieu thereof the word "seven;" and on page 16, line 18, strike out the word "four," and insert in lieu thereof the word "three."

As I am informed, the feeling prevails among the pilots and engineers of the country that the fees which they pay for their certificates are too large. The committee have very wisely and very properly, in my judgment, made a reduction. The amount paid in one case heretofore was $10; in the other $5. This section of the present bill proposes to reduce the amount to be paid in the one case to $8, and in the other to $4. But I am still of opinion that there might be a further reduction; and I therefore offer this amendment to make it $7 in the one case, and $3 in the other. I think those figures would be entirely acceptable to the engineers and the pilots.

Mr. REAGAN. This service, the inspecting of steamboats and the licensing of pilots and engineers and other officers, is made by the law self-sustaining. The fees for the inspections and the fees for licensing officers furnish the fund out of which the expenses of this service are to be paid.

As I have just explained in answer to the interrogatory propounded by the gentleman from Michigan the committee felt that they would be authorized to reduce somewhat the fees for the licensing of officers. At that time, and under the law as it now is, one class of these officers pay a license fee of $10 a year; and another class pay a license fee of $5 a year. Upon conference with those who are in charge of this branch of the service, the committee have come to the conclusion that they can reduce the fees for the first class from $10 to $8, and in the second class from $5 to $4, making a reduction of 20 per cent. on these fees.

While it is possible the service might be self-sustaining, if the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COCHRANE] should be adopted, it has not been thought safe by the committee to make the reduction go so far. They think it safest for the present to adhere to the rates provided by the bill in its present form.

Mr. CONGER. The reduction should not be such as to leave this branch of the public service, in its fees and charges, below the self-sustaining point. The object was to make such charges and such fees as would pay for the service, and since the present law came into force there has been, among the owners of the steamboats, no complaint. The answer of the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN,] that the rates fixed in this bill will leave the service self-sustaining, is satisfactory to me. I am inclined to think that a further reduction at this time would be unwise. Let it be tried a year or two longer at these rates. In case there should be an excessive revenue from the different fees prescribed, Congress can again reduce them after further knowledge. I think that they had better not be reduced further now, for there is no appropriation to pay these expenses excepting the money covered into the Treasury from the fees imposed.

Mr. COCHRANE. In view of the statements made by the gentleman having charge of the bill and other gentlemen on the floor, I will withdraw my amendment.

The Clerk read the twenty-second section of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 22. That section 4472 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall be so amended as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4472. Except on ferry-boats, no loose hay, loose cotton, or loose hemp, camphene, naphtha, benzine, benzole, crude petroleum, or other like explosive burning-fluids shall be carried as freight or used as stores on any steamer carrying passengers.

"Baled cotton shall not be carried on such steamers unless the bales are compactly pressed and covered with bagging or other similar fabric, in good merchantable shipping order, and secured with good rope or iron bands; nor shall baled hemp be carried on the deck or guards thereof, unless the bales are compactly pressed and securely covered with bagging or a similar fabric; nor shall gunpowder be carried on any such vessel, except in case of special license granted by inspectors; nor shall oil of vitriol, nitric acid, or other dangerous chemicals be carried on such steamers, except on the decks or guards thereof.

"Refined petroleum, when in good hermetically-sealed metallic cases, securely packed in boxes or casks, or when in iron-bound barrels, and plainly marked with the manufacturer's name, the name of the article, the temperature at which it will ignite, which shall not be less than 150° of Fahrenheit if put up in iron-bound barrels, nor lower than 110° of Fahrenheit if put up in good hermetically-sealed metallic cases; oil or spirits of turpentine, mastic or other varnishes, when in good metallic cases, or in casks or barrels well and securely bound with iron; friction-matches when securely packed in strong tight chests or boxes, the covers of which shall be well secured by locks, screws, or other reliable fastenings, may be carried on the decks, guards, or forecastle of any such steamer, as the local inspector shall designate in writing, and under a special certificate from the local inspector, stating the particular location in which the same shall be carried, the precautions adopted for safety, and any special conditions, if there be such, respecting the storage thereof. No products of petroleum shall be used on any steam-vessel for illuminating-purposes that will ignite at a lower temperature than 150° Fahrenheit: Provided, however, That it shall not be lawful to transport, carry, or convey, ship, deliver on board, or cause to be delivered on board, the substance known or designated as nitro-glycerine, or glyoin oil, or nitrated oil, or powder mixed with such oil, or fiber saturated with any such article or substance, or other similar explosive compound or mixture, upon or in any vessel employed in the transportation of passengers on any waters of the United States. For the willful violation of this provision, the penalty shall be a fine of not exceeding $5,000 or imprisonment not exceeding three years, or both, one-half of the fine for the use of the informer."

Mr. REAGAN. I am instructed unanimously by the Committee on Commerce to offer the following amendment to that section:

Amend by striking out all of section 22 from the end of line 19 down to the word "thereof," in line 38, as follows:

Refined petroleum, when in good hermetically-sealed metallic cases, securely packed in boxes or casks, or when in iron-bound barrels, and plainly marked with the manufacturer's name, the name of the article, the temperature at which it will ignite, which shall not be less than 150° of Fahrenheit if put up in iron-bound barrels, nor lower than 110° of Fahrenheit if put up in good hermetically-sealed metallic cases; oil or spirits of turpentine, mastic or other varnishes, when in good metallic cases, or in casks or barrels well and securely bound with iron; friction-matches when securely packed in strong tight chests or boxes, the covers of which shall be well secured by locks, screws, or other reliable fastenings, may be carried on the decks, guards, or forecastle of any such steamer, as the local inspector shall designate in writing, and under a special certificate from the local inspector, stating the particular location in which the same shall be carried, the precautions adopted for safety, and any special conditions, if there be such, respecting the storage thereof.

And insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Refined petroleum, when in good hermetically-sealed metallic cases securely packed in boxes or casks, or when in iron-bound barrels, and such cases, boxes, casks, or barrels plainly marked with the manufacturer's name, the name of the article, and the temperature at which it will ignite, which shall not be lower than 150° of Fahrenheit if put up in iron-bound barrels, nor lower than 110° of Fahrenheit if put up in good hermetically-sealed metallic cases, may be carried in such parts of any such steamer as the local inspector shall designate in writing by special certificates, stating the particular location in which the same shall be carried, the precautions adopted for safety, and any special conditions, if there be such, respecting the stowage thereof; oil or spirits of turpentine, mastic or other varnishes, when in good metallic cases, or in casks or barrels well and securely bound with iron; friction-matches, when securely packed in strong tight chests or boxes, the covers of which shall be well secured by locks, screws, or other reliable fastenings, may be carried on such steamers when stowed in a safe part of the vessel, at a secure distance from any fire or heat."

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I move to amend by striking out "150°" where it is inserted in the clause relating to petroleum put up in iron-bound barrels, and insert in lieu thereof "140°;" and I desire to call the attention of the committee to the law as it now exists. It permits petroleum at a temperature of not more than 110° to be carried in iron-bound barrels when it is not found practicable to carry it by other routes. This provision increases the limit from 110° to 150°. It will be a practical prohibition in some localities of the supply of cities and towns with petroleum by any ordinary route. On our rivers there are some towns that have no means of transportation excepting by river steamboats. If it were absolutely necessary that this extreme limit should be placed I would not offer the amendment. Perhaps the committee have considered the question, but my attention has been directed to a report made by Major Elliot, of the Corps of Engineers, in which he refers to the English light-house system, the Scotch light-house system, and the French light-house system, and the lowest limit of prohibition in either of those light-house systems as to the use of petroleum is 140°. On page 89 of his report I find the test of the English light-house engineers:

If the oil be petroleum it must have a specific gravity not less than .785 nor greater than .790 at 60° Fahrenheit; its flashing point not lower than 125° to 130° Fahrenheit.

On page 178 of the report I find the test of the Scotch light-house engineers:

The tanks have tight-fitting covers, and the oil is tested in the presence of the keepers to ascertain that the flashing point is not below 120° Fahrenheit.

Then on page 188 I find the test of the French light-house engineers:

It is considered that an oil is unsafe for illuminating purposes if it gives out inflammable vapors below 50° centigrade, (122° Fahrenheit,) and the contracts require that the oil actually used shall not have a flashing point lower than 60° centigrade, (140° Fahrenheit.)

Now, if that is sufficient for the safety of light-houses I think it is in the interest of commerce and for the convenience of the supply of some of the towns on the rivers with petroleum that the limit should be lowered to 140°.

Mr. SAYLER. Mr. Speaker, I hope that the modification of this section will not be made as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BURCHARD.] The section itself, so far as this part is concerned, was prepared under the supervision of the Treasury Department and the board of inspectors. This has been a matter of contention between different parties for some time. Under the old law passenger-steamers were prohibited entirely from carrying this oil except where there was no other practicable route, and then they were permitted to carry it at a temperature of 110°. This arrangement seems to be satisfactory to all parties in interest; and if this is once adjusted and fixed upon between the carrying parties and the Treasury Department, we will have no further contention about it, and the parties engaged in the business of shipping these oils will be enabled to conduct their business without any further restraint; and certainly there can be no good reason why a less degree of safety that would be occasioned by putting the rate at 140° should be made when the parties interested agree to 150°. I hope therefore the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] will not be adopted.

Mr. CONGER. I think that the amendment which the committee have proposed is in the line of safety and a very good one. It makes more definite the restriction on carrying these inflammable matters; and it requires greater security in marking and in other respects, which I think is an improvement.

The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BURCHARD,] or any amendment diminishing at all the number of degrees Fahrenheit at which this very inflammable oil will ignite, is, I think, a dangerous one. Congress has heretofore refused to permit the carrying of refined or crude petroleum at all upon passenger-boats generally, and permitted it only upon such passenger-boats as were upon routes where no other mode of transportation, no other class of boats, like sail-vessels or freight-boats merely, were passing, and then under very careful restrictions. There has never been any permission in any law for this purpose. In the present law passenger-boats are prohibited from carrying either refined or crude petroleum, and they are prohibited from using either as illuminating stores.

To my mind the proposition of the committee, even with its restrictions, is somewhat dangerous. But inasmuch as the committee have limited the point of inflammability to 150°, and required it to be carried in securely iron-bound barrels, and to be stowed in a place specified and permitted by the inspectors, I shall make no objection to that innovation upon the law. I must oppose, however, the making it one degree less in wooden vessels, however iron-bound, than 150° Fahrenheit. And if in the bill the limit was fixed at any considerable number of degrees less, I should oppose the whole bill until that was remedied.

Now one word in regard to the use of this oil in light-houses. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] forgets to state that Elliot, in his report upon English light-houses, gives the specific gravity as well as the number of degrees at which the oil will inflame. That covers very materially the question of its safety. In this bill, however, there is no provision in regard to the specific gravity of the oil, and therefore it has one less of the essential limitations which obtain in England. More than that, the oil there is simply for light-house use, where no person can be endangered except the people in the light-house.

We are here legislating for all the vast channels of communication where passengers by the million go every year. It is the duty of this Congress to see that no more such disasters shall occur as have occurred upon our lakes and rivers, where hundreds of our citizens have been destroyed at a time in years gone by, in consequence of fires caused by the use of petroleum oil. Gentlemen living on the Mississippi will recollect that but a few years since many lives were lost, caused by the accidental breaking of a lamp in which petroleum oil was used. It is but a few years since that some seven or eight or ten large steamers were burned at the levee at Saint Louis, in consequence of the accidental breaking of a kerosene lamp among the stores of kerosene on one of the steamers. As regards the loss of property, the owners of that property must judge somewhat for themselves. I consider, however, that Congress is the guardian of the lives of the passengers upon these boats.

I have heretofore opposed the use of refined petroleum for stores on the boats, or to its being carried at all upon passenger-boats except with the restrictions provided. I consent to this only because I believe with the inflammable point fixed at 150°, and requiring it to be carried in good barrels securely bound with iron, or with the inflammable point fixed at 110° when carried in metallic cases, there will be no probable danger of injury to the passengers who frequent these boats; therefore I assent to the proposition of the committee. But I oppose any further reduction than to 150°, even of a single degree.

Mr. REAGAN. The provisions of this bill in reference to the rules for security in carrying inflammable and combustible materials of various kinds have occupied a great deal of the attention of the committee. One of the great objects of this bill is to give additional security to life and property by the adoption of such rules as would attain that end. At the same time this bill liberalizes the law in relation to the interests of the steamboat-owners themselves and those engaged in the oil business.

As has been stated by gentlemen who have preceded me, under the law as it now stands refined and crude petroleum cannot be carried upon steamboats unless, as stated by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER,] there is no other mode of conveyance on their route. The fact was brought to the attention of the committee that this provision in the law allowing these articles to be carried on steamboats where there was no other mode of conveyance, was equivalent to allowing them to be carried by all steamers because there was no sufficient tribunal or mode pointed out in the law as to who should determine whether there were other modes of conveyance or how that question should be determined.

In relation to the temperature of the oil itself, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] has called attention to the degree of temperature of the oil authorized to be used in the light-houses in other countries, and mentioned that in France the oil used in the light-houses was required to be of 140° Fahrenheit for what is termed its flashing point; that is, the point at which it gives off explosive exhalations. Gentlemen should remember, however, that when the standard is at 140° for the flashing point it takes fifteen degrees above that to reach the explosive point, which brings it about to the point at which we have put it in this bill.

It was stated to the committee that under the regulations we have made as to the places where this refined or crude petroleum should be carried on a vessel, and requiring it to be in hermetically sealed cases or securely put up in iron-bound barrels, passenger-steamers could carry it without danger at 110°. We permit that to be done by this bill, which is an enlargement upon the provisions of the existing law. But it was stated by those familiar with the subject, both steamboat men, inspectors, merchants trading in oil, and others interested, that refined petroleum put up in barrels would give off these explosive exhalations from the barrels at a point near what we have indicated, 150°. All parties interested—not only steam-vessel owners, but merchants and manufacturers of oils, have agreed before the committee in recommending for oil in barrels for transportation on passenger-steamships, the requirement of 150°. I state this so that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] may know that all the delegations, deputations, and individuals who have been before us on this subject from nearly all parts of the country, and who represent all the interests concerned, concur without exception in the propriety of the recommendation we have made as to the degree of temperature for oil carried in barrels. There has been no dissent upon that point whatever. The object in view is the security of vessels, their cargoes, and passengers; and no material hardship is imposed upon the dealers in these oils. I trust that the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois will not be adopted.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I am not calling attention to this question in the interest of any company engaged in the manufacture of oil or any transportation company. I am speaking in the interest of portions of the country that might be deprived of the opportunity of procuring these oils through the ordinary methods and by the ordinary routes by which the supply must be furnished.

Mr. CONGER. One hundred and fifty degrees is the point which State inspectors and State laws, so far as there has been legislation on this subject, have fixed.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. That I understand is higher than some States have fixed.

Mr. CONGER. That is considered to be the safe point.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. One hundred and ten degrees has been the law up to the present time.

Mr. REAGAN. I will state to my friend from Illinois that not only his own State but Iowa, and perhaps Michigan, have by law required oils to be at 150° before their transportation is allowed.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. So far as the lakes are concerned, I think the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] is right in the view that these oils ought not to be permitted to be carried on steam-vessels, because they can be carried on sailing-vessels. I would go with him in support of a prohibition of the transportation of oils in that way. But there are river routes that cannot be supplied by sailing-vessels. All the authorities thus far presented (and I believe the committee agree in this statement) place 140° as the extreme limit; and in some places 120° is considered safe. The gentleman having this bill in charge says that the limit fixed by the committee is 150°, which, as I understand him, is intended to be the point of explosion. Practically, as I understand, the point of ignition, which is the flashing point, would be 15° lower.

Mr. REAGAN. There are two tests, the flashing test and the igniting test. The latter is intended to be put at 150°. The flashing point is estimated at 15° below that.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. If it is the understanding of the committee that the explosive limit is 150° and the flashing point is 15° below that, (which would be 135°,) I am satisfied that the limit fixed by the committee is not too high.

The amendment of Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois, to the amendment of the committee was not agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 23. That section 4475 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall be so amended as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4475. All gunpowder, nitro-glycerine, camphene, naphtha, benzine, benzole, coal-oil, crude or refined petroleum, oil of vitriol, nitric or other dangerous chemical acids, oil or spirits of turpentine, friction-matches, and all other articles of like character, when shipped or offered for shipment, or when packed or put up for shipment, shall be securely packed and put up separately from each other and from all other articles; and the package, box, cask, or other vessel containing the same shall be distinctly marked on the outside with the name or description of the article contained therein.

"And no refined petroleum shall be put up or packed for shipment on any passenger-steamer that will ignite at a lower temperature than 150° of Fahrenheit if put up in iron-bound barrels, nor lower than 110° of Fahrenheit if put up in good hermetically-sealed metallic cases, which temperature shall be plainly marked on the packages."

Mr. REAGAN. I move to amend the section just read by inserting after the word "shipment," near the beginning of the third paragraph, the words "or shipped or offered for shipment."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 31. That section 4493 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall be so amended as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4493. Whenever damage is sustained by any passenger to himself or to his baggage, or by any person or persons to any freight shipped on any vessel used to navigate the rivers, great northern lakes, or other inland waters of the United States, from explosion, fire, collision, embezzlement, loss, destruction, or other cause, through the willful misconduct or neglect of duty of any master, mate, engineer, pilot, or other officer or employé, or of any owner or owners, of such vessel, or through any neglect or failure to comply with the provisions of this title, every such master, mate, engineer, pilot, officer, employé, or owner or owners, guilty of such willful misconduct, neglect of duty, or failure to comply with the provisions of this title, shall be liable to the person or persons so injured to the full amount of the damage so incurred; or if such damage shall result from known defects or imperfections in such vessel, her machinery or equipments, the master, or any other officer or officers, employé or employés, whose duty it shall be to know of such defects or imperfections, and the owner or owners of such vessel, and the vessel, shall be liable to the person or persons so injured to the full amount of the damage so incurred; and in all other cases in which a carrier would at common law be liable for damages, the owner or owners of such vessel shall be liable to the person or persons so injured, individually, equally, and ratably, and not one for another, to an amount equal to the value of his interest in such vessel and the freight then pending; and any person or persons sustaining loss or injury through the carelessness, negligence, or willful misconduct of any master, mate, engineer, pilot, or other officer or employé of such vessel, or through his or their neglect or refusal to obey the laws governing the navigation of such vessel, may sue such master, mate, engineer, pilot, or other officer or employé, and recover damages for any such loss or injury so caused by any master, mate, engineer, or pilot, or by any other officer or officers, employé or employés; and such master, mate, engineer, or pilot, or other officer or officers, or employé or employés, may also be imprisoned for any term not exceeding three years."

Mr. HOPKINS. I move to amend by adding to the section just read the following:

And in case of the loss of life of any passenger by reason of the negligence, misconduct, defects, or imperfections aforesaid, the legal representative of the person so killed shall have the same right of action as hereinbefore provided.

The bill as reported by the committee gives a right of action in case of injury to person or property. The amendment which I offer provides that in case of greater calamity—the loss of life—the same right of action shall accrue to the legal representative.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to offer a substitute for the pending section, but before action is taken upon that substitute I wish to move some amendments to the section as reported by the committee. I ask that my substitute be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of section 4493 as given in the printed bill insert the following:

"Whenever damage is sustained by any passenger or his baggage, from explosion, fire, collision, or other cause, the master and the owner of such vessel, or either of them, and the vessel, shall be liable to each and every person so injured, to the full amount of damage, if it happens through any neglect or failure to comply with the provisions of this title, or through known defects or imperfections of the steaming apparatus or of the hull; and the total liability of such owner or owners shall in no case exceed the amount or value of his or their interest in such vessel and freight then pending; and any person sustaining loss or injury through the carelessness, negligence, or willful misconduct of any master, mate, engineer, or pilot, or his neglect or refusal to obey the laws governing the navigation of such steamers, may sue such master, mate, engineer, or pilot, and recover damages for any such injury caused by any such master, mate, engineer, or pilot; and such officer may also be imprisoned not exceeding three years."

Mr. CONGER. Now, Mr. Speaker, if the House shall see fit to adopt that amendment, which is substantially the present law, with a change in it making the liability correspond to the admiralty liability of the United States in other cases, in other laws of the United States, I think it will be better than the present section. There is very little change; the last part follows the amendment of the committee, but lest the committee might not adopt that substitute for this section—and I believe it is not opposed particularly by it; however, they will speak for themselves in that matter—I desire to amend the present section in two or three particulars, which I will state. I move to strike out in line 5 of this section, and I ask the attention of the gentlemen to it, on page 24, after the word "baggage" the words "or by any person or persons to any freight shipped." That is an innovation upon the present law, and the object of this section is to provide for loss or injury to the individual, the person; and I may say to the gentleman who offers the proviso to this section I am willing to have that appended to the substitute which I have offered if it should be adopted.

Now, right in the midst of a section providing for damage to the person or his baggage, which is in the present law, the committee have gone further and placed a provision which covers the whole cargo. It conflicts with the rules of admiralty and the laws of every civilized nation in the world to allow a person to recover for full cargoes for freight shipped by him as he might for personal damages.

I think the committee could not have understood the effect of that simple provision of ten words or they would not have inserted it. The section reads:

That whenever damage is sustained by any passenger to himself or baggage.

That is the present law; but the committee then adds, "or by any person or persons to any freight shipped" anywhere and everywhere. The law of all commercial nations is that the owner of a vessel is liable to the extent of his interest in the vessel and in the freight. That is the law of England and every maritime nation in the world. It is the law of the United States, adopted in 1851 and continued up to this time. It is in force now in the laws of the United States that general liability for damage to freight, or damage to cargo, or damage to other vessels—but I cannot see why in a bill, the principal object of which is the security of life, the security of the person, and when we have already heretofore included full damage for the particular personal baggage accompanying him—I say I cannot see why we should extend the common law of nations, I might say the liability of the common law of nations, the maritime law, to freight and cargoes. It certainly overturns the whole theory of liabilities, and, I may say, no person will engage in the owning and running of steamboats who have any property to be reached by law, who have any personal responsibility, if they are to be made liable for the loss of all cargoes when a vessel collides with another, and sinks or destroys it, or for any of the accidents which occur. I ask the consent of the committee that these words, "whenever damage is sustained by any person or persons to any freight shipped," shall be stricken from the bill. If they desire to change the general law in regard to the general liability of ship-owners, let it be done in another section, where we are not making a law specially for the security of life.

There is another amendment I will offer when this is disposed of; but I will not detain the House further at this time.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, no section of this bill elicited so much investigation as the one now under consideration, and the effect of the section is to ameliorate the law as it now stands, and to ameliorate it exactly in the point to which the gentleman from Michigan refers. Under the law as it stands to-day the owners of boats upon inland waters of the United States are liable as common carriers for all the damage done to freights shipped upon their boats. Each individual boat-owner, if he owns two thousand dollars' worth of stock in a fifty-thousand-dollar or a one-hundred-thousand-dollar boat, is liable to any shipper of goods on that boat for the whole loss. This section, as it will be seen, limits that liability as to cases of willful misconduct or neglect of duty of any master, mate, engineer, pilot, officer, or employé, or owner or owners of such vessel guilty of such willful misconduct, neglect of duty, or failure to comply with the provisions of this act. It was intended to fix that liability only upon officers and owners who were guilty of willful misconduct and of no neglect of duty. Certainly they could not ask more of amelioration than this.

Then to guard against the general liability as common carrier of each owner of the vessel, we inserted after having made the provision for the cases of willful misconduct or neglect of duty the following: "And in all other cases in which a carrier would at common law be liable for damages, the owner or owners of such vessel shall be liable to the person or persons so injured, individually, equally, and ratably, and not one for another, to an amount equal to the value of his interest in such vessel and the freight then pending." So this limits the liability to the owners of the vessel on our inland waters, as it is by the existing law limited in reference to vessels navigating the seas and the northern lakes, making the rule uniform both upon inland and lake waters, and bringing it in harmony with similar rules now in existence in Great Britain and Continental Europe.

Why, sir, should not those guilty of such willful misconduct as leads to the destruction of property not be held as amenable as they would be for injury to the person. The great object of the laws on this subject is to give security both to life and to property, and to throw every safeguard around both life and property on the dangerous element of water. Any law that falls short of that would be cruelly unjust and inhuman, and not in accordance with the spirit of our enlightened and Christian age.

But while we hold them responsible for full damages in case of willful misconduct or willful neglect, as to the owners of vessels who are not guilty of willful misconduct, but only happen to be owners where the destruction or injury occurs, they are to be only held liable to the amount of their interest in the vessel and pending freight, and they are not held liable as they are under the law as it now stands as common carriers for all the damages sustained. I trust, therefore, that the substitute offered by the gentleman from Michigan, or the amendment suggested by him, may not be adopted. For, if it is, the attempt of the committee to cure these evils, by this section which they have prepared with great labor, would be defeated.

Mr. CONGER. The argument of the gentleman from Texas is not directly to the point I have raised, but covers considerably more than that. I agree with the gentleman that the rule of law should be the same on our inland waters as on the ocean and the lakes as to the liability of the owners of the steamboats, but this particular clause says that for any loss of freight—

From explosion, fire, collision, embezzlement, loss, destruction, or other cause, through the willful misconduct or neglect of duty of any master, mate, engineer, pilot, or other officer or employé, or of any owner or owners of such vessel—such officers or owners shall be liable to the full amount of the damage incurred. Now, then, the neglect of an officer of the vessel in any respect will make the owners, though not upon the vessel at all or having any personal knowledge of the matter, liable for all embezzlement, for all loss of cargo. I submit that this is a thing which no shippers or vessel-owners can stand.

Mr. REAGAN. If the gentleman will look further on in the section, he will find a clause that expressly saves the liability of the owners in the case he supposes.

Mr. CONGER. The section reads just as I have stated it.

Whenever damage is sustained by any passenger to himself or to his baggage—

I do not object to that—or by any person or persons to any freight shipped—

To that I do object—

on any vessel used to navigate the rivers, great northern lakes, or other inland waters of the United States, from explosion, fire, collision, embezzlement, loss, destruction, or other cause, through the willful misconduct or neglect of duty of any master, mate, engineer, pilot, or other officer or employé, or of any owner or owners, of such vessel, or through any neglect or failure to comply with the provisions of this title.

Any neglect or failure to comply with any of the provisions of this long title, as amended by this bill.

Mr. REAGAN. If the gentleman will look at line 35 and what follows he will see that the liability of the owner is expressly excepted.

Mr. CONGER. I know that there are some other provisions in the section. The liability is for any neglect or failure even to comply with the provisions of this title, this whole bill of many sections and many requirements.

Every such master, mate, engineer, pilot, officer, or employé, or owner or owners, guilty of such willful misconduct, neglect of duty, or failure to comply with the provisions of this title, shall be liable to the person or persons so injured to the full amount of the damages so incurred.

Now, no one objects to their liability for the damage to the person, including with that as the immediate personal accompaniment of the passenger the damage to his or her baggage, but the committee have extended it beyond the law of any maritime country in the world, to freight, to cargo, and make that liability even for a failure to comply with the raising of a light, or the turning to the right hand or to the left, or a failure to comply with any of the provisions, the thousand provisions, in this long bill. That ought not to be. No responsible man under such a law will dare to own vessels or run them, or be a master, or mate, or officer upon them, if he is to be liable for all the damage to the cargo which might arise from the neglect of some subordinate, the swinging of a light at the proper time, or showing the torch on the right side of the vessel, or turning to the right or to the left, or giving the signals at intervals half a minute too little.

Mr. REAGAN. If the gentleman will allow me, let me call his attention——

Mr. CONGER. I am coming to the other part of the section presently. At line 25 it says:

> In all other cases in which a carrier would, at common law, be liable for damages, the owner or owners of such vessel shall be liable to the person or persons so injured, individually, equally, and ratably, and not one for another, to an amount equal to the value of his interest in such vessel and the freight then pending.

That is embraced in the substitute I have sent to the desk. That is the proper rule. It ought to be the rule on all boats. It is the rule in England and France and Germany and all maritime nations, that the owners shall be liable for their interest in the vessel and the freight pending. But what does this committee do? They make the owner and all the officers liable for all the cargo to the full amount of the damage.

Mr. REAGAN. If the gentleman will examine the section carefully he will find that only the owner that is guilty of willful misconduct or willful neglect is liable.

Mr. CONGER. The owners and employés are made liable for willful misconduct, neglect, or failure to comply with any one provision of this long title, which embraces over one hundred sections.

Mr. REAGAN. The liability only applies to those who are guilty of willful misconduct or neglect, and to no others.

Mr. CONGER. It applies to all owners for a failure to comply with the provisions of this title. Now I know that this would be a burdensome provision, because I know it from shipping-men themselves in many conversations with them during the last six years, and I speak from a good deal of knowledge, for I think I have had charge of all the bills on this subject from 1871 until this winter which have been passed, including the present law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired under the rules.

Mr. CONGER. Very well; I ask for a vote on my amendment to strike out the words "to any freight-ship."

Mr. SAYLER. I would ask if there is not a substitute for the section now pending before the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would state that the substitute is not now before the House, but the amendment offered by gentleman from Michigan for the purpose of perfecting the original section.

Mr. CONGER. I offered a substitute and it is now pending, but I understand that under the rules it is first in order to perfect the part proposed to be stricken out.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan is correct; amendments to the original text for the perfection of the section are first in order.

The question was taken on the amendment; and on a division there were—ayes 41, noes 40; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. REAGAN and Mr. CONGER were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 76, noes not counted.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. I have one further amendment to offer to this section. I move to strike out in line 7 the words "great northern lakes." By the law as it now stands the admiralty jurisdiction of the United States is extended over the great northern lakes as over the ocean. All the decisions of the courts and all the laws in regard to liability on these lakes are by the present laws of the United States the same as upon the ocean. An attempt is made here to bring the northern lakes within the same jurisdiction as the inland rivers, narrow rivers, easily accessible to the shore. I think the law should remain as it now is, and I move that these words be stricken out.

Mr. REAGAN. I suggest to the gentleman from Michigan that while he is correct in his statement, it is only made so by the decision of the Supreme Court, but not by law, and it is to obviate that difficulty that we propose to put it in the law.

Mr. CONGER. The present law of the United States extends admiralty jurisdiction over these lakes the same as over the ocean, and makes the liability then just as the gentleman has it in the last part of the section. The first part of this section is inconsistent with the last part of it.

Mr. REAGAN. If the gentleman is right, then the admiralty jurisdiction extends over the Mississippi, the Hudson, and other rivers.

Mr. CONGER. There are abundant decisions that the liabilities on these northern lakes are the same as those upon the ocean. These northern lakes are in common with another country; they are a part of British waters.

Mr. REAGAN. So, I suggest, is the Rio Grande River a part of Mexican waters, and as the admiralty jurisdiction over the lakes has depended heretofore upon the decisions of the Supreme Court, we have put it in the law.

Mr. CONGER. I do not know any man on the northern lakes, either a ship-owner or a resident in one of the lake ports, who does not protest against this. It is an innovation on the present law.

Mr. REAGAN. What is the precise amendment?

Mr. CONGER. It is to strike out the words "great northern lakes," so as to leave it as this bill in the latter portion of this section and the law now leave it. It is an attempt to make the northern lakes, which are oceans in themselves, like these little rivers. There have been numerous decisions of the Supreme Court that the laws of the ocean apply to the great inland lakes.

Mr. REAGAN. And the object of this is to place the matter by law where the decision of the Supreme Court places it. The gentleman is actually operating against the object he himself desires to attain.

Mr. CONGER. I am not often mistaken in what I seriously undertake to attain here. I cannot possibly be mistaken in regard to this matter, and the gentleman, in the last part of this section says, beginning in line 25:

> And in all other cases in which a carrier would, at common law, be liable for damages, the owner or owners of such vessel shall be liable to the person or persons so injured, individually, equally, and ratably, and not one for another, to an amount equal to the value of his interest in such vessel and the freight then pending.

Now that is inconsistent with this provision. The gentleman might as well say that a part of the ocean lying within certain parallels of latitude should be subject to the laws which control inland rivers.

Mr. REAGAN. This provision would also apply to ocean steamers as well as to lake steamers.

Mr. CONGER. Then why did not the gentleman say ocean? Why confine it to inland rivers and to the great northern lakes where the laws of the ocean rule?

Mr. REAGAN. I do not think the gentleman understands the bill. The courts may have made the decisions he states, but that is not in the statute, and we are endeavoring to provide that the statutes shall say what the courts say.

Mr. CONGER. The laws of the United States do make the inland lakes subject to the same laws as the ocean.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SAYLER. I think the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] is mistaken. I certainly think that, for the sake of the interests of navigation on the northern lakes, these words should be stricken from this section.

Mr. REAGAN. I understand there is a substitute for this section.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The pending question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] to strike out of line 7 the words "the great northern lakes." It is in order first to perfect the section before the question is taken upon the substitute for the section.

Mr. SAYLER. The trouble about this section is precisely this: it does impose responsibilities in addition to those imposed by the act of 1851 in direct terms on ocean steamers, and which act was subsequently held by the Supreme Court of the United States to apply to vessels navigating the northern lakes, on the ground that those lakes were high seas. The responsibilities imposed by the act of 1851 are precisely the responsibilities which have existed among the maritime nations of Southern Europe, and indeed the nations of Central and Northern Europe, for more than a hundred years. They are precisely the liabilities and limitations fixed by the British government three-quarters of a century ago. To the shame and disgrace of our country, and to the injury of our commerce for many years, we retained the common-law liability, which made the liability of the ship-owner co-extensive with his whole fortune in responsibility for any injury or damage which occurred. We nearly drove our ships from the ocean, as we are to-day driving our steamboats from our inland and internal rivers, by making it impossible for any man to own a small interest in a steamboat because some terrible accident might occur any day without his knowledge or fault, and sweep from him every dollar of his fortune.

We compel men who desire to own interests in steamboats on our western rivers to do so under false pretenses. A gentleman in Boston, however wealthy, does not dare to invest $10,000 in a steamboat navigating the Mississippi River, although she may be worth $100,000, because the liability imposed upon him for his interest of only $10,000 might any day sweep from him a fortune of $1,000,000.

This section does not bring back the responsibilities imposed by the act of 1851, to which our Government was finally driven, and under which the ocean navigation and the navigation of the great lakes have since been conducted. It would be a great wrong to the navigating interests of the northern lakes to impose upon them the additional responsibilities of this bill even if we are going to compel the owners of steamboats on our western rivers to suffer these wrongful liabilities. Those of us who live along those rivers are not disposed to injure other people simply because we cannot help ourselves.

What I contend for is simply this: that the whole of this section should be stricken out, and the substitute offered by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER,] which embodies the liabilities of the act of 1851, should be inserted in its stead. Those liabilities, stated in legal terms, are exactly these: that in all matters ex delicto the liability of the owners of the vessel shall be co-extensive with the interest of each owner in the vessel. That is the law of every maritime nation in the world, and ought to be a law as applicable to the great rivers that float the mighty commerce of the West and South as to the northern lakes and the ocean. I never could understand why, when this act of 1851 was passed, which liberalized the commerce of the ocean and of the lakes, there should have been appended to it the provision that its terms should not be applicable to vessels navigating our internal streams, when the navigating interests on those streams have grown to be vastly greater than even the commercial interests of the ocean and of the lakes.

I want to say another thing: I am utterly opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. HOPKINS,] in the loose terms in which it is worded, (I would be opposed to it in any terms,) that all ship-owners shall be held liable for loss of life; that is, that the heirs or legal representatives may bring suits for loss of life. That would drive every steamer and ship from the lakes and rivers. We have something of that kind in our States I know, but it is under very close limitations; it is carefully guarded. The heirs of a man must prove what his life is worth; it may not be worth anything. The representatives of a great many men have found in the courts that the lives of those men were not worth anything, because they were not of any value to anybody. In addition to that there is an express limitation in the State laws that in no case shall the damages recovered exceed $5,000. But here is a loose provision, under which no man could afford to be an owner of an interest in any of these vessels.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I hope that these amendments may be adopted, and that finally we may vote down this section and impose merely the liability which was fixed by the act of 1851.

Mr. REAGAN. I must express my surprise at the argument of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SAYLER.] He argues against the law as it now exists, which we are amending—not against the pending section of the bill, which obviates the very difficulties of which he complains as to the extent of liability. I trust the House will not be misled by any argument of this description, an argument directed to the evils of the existing law which the section under consideration proposes to remedy. That is not the proper way to argue a question like this.

One word further. I desire to call attention to the fact—and I beg that gentlemen will understand it before they vote on this question—that there are two classes of interests affected by this important bill. One class embraces the interests of the owners and officers of vessels, the other the interests of the whole people of this country. This bill was not framed expressly in the interest of vessel-owners. While it takes away the harsh common-law liability, while it makes them liable only where they are guilty of willful misconduct, to the amount of their interest in the vessel and the current freight, it does hold them and is intended to hold them liable for good faith; it is designed to impose upon them a proper accountability and responsibility to the vast mass of people whose interests are different from those of the vessel-owners. If this House in acting upon this section proceeds upon the idea that no one but the vessel-owners are interested in it, they will disappoint the expectations and the hopes of the people and defeat the ends of justice. While the measure of liability of vessel-owners ought to be reasonable and just, as it is fixed in this bill, we ought not to deny to people who may be injured by the willful misconduct or fault of the officers or owners a remedy for the wrongs which may be done to them by such willful misconduct.

One word in relation to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HOPKINS] to which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAYLER] objects. It may be that that amendment requires additional limitation; but, while it was not recommended by the committee, the principle of it, that liability shall extend to the destruction of life as well as injury to person or property, is correct. Perhaps some such limitation as the gentleman from Ohio speaks of, as to the amount for which judgment may be rendered in such cases, would be right; but the principle that liability should exist and that those guilty of willful fault, willful misconduct, willful wrong should be liable for this damage admits, I think, of no doubt. In passing this bill we are to consider the millions of lives and the hundreds of millions of dollars of capital intrusted to the good faith, the discretion, and the honesty of steamboat-owners and officers.

Mr. HOAR. Before the gentleman sits down I wish to ask him how far the liability to imprisonment imposed by section 31 on the master, mate, engineer, pilot, or other officer or employé extends. In half a dozen instances throughout the section, the misconduct or neglect of the master, mate, engineer, or other officer is spoken of, including the case of injury to property by carelessness or accident. Then at the close, without specifying what they are to be imprisoned for, it adds as a general sentence:

> And such master, mate, engineer, or pilot, or other officer or officers, or employé or employés may also be imprisoned for any term not exceeding three years.

Now, for what are they to be imprisoned?

Mr. REAGAN. They are to be imprisoned for a violation of this law, for willful misconduct, for willful neglect of duty, for disobedience of the law in failing to comply with these requisitions which are intended to give security to property, person, and life.

Mr. HOAR. Then for any carelessness of a sailor which causes any injury to property, however slight, he is liable under this bill to imprisonment for three years.

Mr. REAGAN. Not at all. I beg to answer the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] as I did the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER.] If he will read from line 25 down, he will find that there is an express limitation of the liability of owners not guilty of misconduct; and if he will analyze the whole section he will see that the penalties apply to the willful wrong-doer, but that the owners and those guilty of no fault cannot be mulcted in damages to an amount exceeding their interest in the vessel and the pending freight.

Mr. HOAR. Then the gentleman's answer to my first question is in conflict with his answer to my second. The section provides that if any damage shall be sustained by any passenger to himself or his baggage through the willful misconduct or neglect of duty of anybody on the boat, or through any neglect (whether willful or otherwise) or failure to comply with the provisions of this title, then the person so negligent shall be liable to the full amount of damage so incurred. Then in all other cases in which a carrier would at common law be liable for damages, any person or persons sustaining loss or injury through the carelessness of any of these parties may sue. Then comes this further provision:

> And such master, mate, engineer, or pilot, or other officer or officers, or employé or employés may also be imprisoned for any term not exceeding three years.

Mr. REAGAN. If the gentleman will take the trouble to analyze the section he will see that the liability applies to the person guilty of the neglect or misconduct; not to anybody else connected with the boat.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. Speaker, that is precisely the point. The statute imposes the severe penalty of imprisonment for not exceeding three years on any sailor or other person employed on board a boat who is guilty of any neglect or failure of duty, whether willful or accidental, by which any injury is done to baggage or other property, or to the person, however slight. I do not understand the person not guilty of a neglect is liable to imprisonment. My point is that it is altogether too severe and harsh a punishment that, for the slightest neglect from which property, including baggage, or the person suffers, the negligent person shall be punished by imprisonment not exceeding three years.

Mr. REAGAN. That is a subject upon which opinions may differ; but I wish to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts and to the House that the committee have considered this whole question very carefully.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is exhausted on the pending amendment.

The question recurred on Mr. CONGER'S amendment.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 53, noes 43.

The SPEAKER peo tempore. No quorum has voted, and if no further count be asked for the Chair will decide the amendment as carried.

No further count was demanded.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have one more amendment to offer. On the same page, line 18, after the word "incurred," I move to strike out these words:

> Or if such damage shall result from known defects or imperfections in such vessel, her machinery, or equipments, the master or any other officer or officers, employé or employés, whose duty it shall be to know of such defects or imperfections and the owner or owners of such vessel, and the vessel, shall be liable to the person or persons so injured to the full amount of the damage so incurred.

Now, there is a proposition that, if in all of this law there are defects known to anybody, known to the master or other officers of the boat, and loss result from such defects, the owner or owners shall be liable for all damage to the full extent of the damage. Now, that is a question of liability which never yet in any civilized country was imposed upon any class of carriers anywhere.

It is added to all the other penalties of this law. All that is proper has been provided for in other parts of the bill. If there be a defect, if in point of fact a rivet has been inserted in a hole drilled unfairly, and somebody on board that boat knows such a defect exists at the time of making the boiler and damage is incurred, the master, owner, or owners are made liable to the full extent of the injury. There is no limitation whatever. How that could have crept into this bill I am unable to perceive.

One word in answer to the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN.] He would intimate that the amendments I propose are in favor of steamboat-owners and against the life and security of the innumerable passengers upon these boats. Sir, my whole effort for the last six years against steamboat-owners, in contradiction to their desires, has been to perfect a steamboat law for the security of life which would hold the steamboat-owners to proper legal liability, and provide for all means of security, even in all of the details if possible, to give greater security to life and passengers on board of vessels upon all these great thoroughfares of our country. I would not sacrifice the life or security of one of these passengers for the value of all the steamboats on all these waters by any known effort of mine in that direction. But I believe, while we give security to life and to travel as we have done within the last few years, reducing at the rate of almost 78 per cent. the casualties upon our waters within the last six years, much of it by means of such bills as these—while I would do much to promote the security of passengers, I would not lay such burdens upon the steamboat-owners that we would not have any vessels upon which our people might travel.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan expresses astonishment at the incorporation of this principle in the pending bill. Now, he has been chairman of the Committee on Commerce as he told us since 1871, and he has been engaged on a number of bills for this purpose. He has been, he has told us, the author of some, and aided to pass one last winter. I wish to call his attention to the law as it stands to-day, and which he has had all the time before him, and with all his experience ought to be familiar with every one of its provisions:

SEC. 4493. Whenever damage is sustained by any passenger, or his baggage, from explosion, fire, collision, or other cause, the master and the owner of such vessel, or either of them, and the vessel, shall be liable to each and every person so injured to the full amount of damage if it happens through any neglect or failure to comply with the provisions of this title, or through known defects or imperfections of the steaming apparatus, or of the hull; and any person sustaining loss or injury through the carelessness, negligence, or willful misconduct of any master, mate, engineer, or pilot, or his neglect or refusal to obey the laws governing the navigation of such steamers, may sue such master, mate, engineer, or pilot, and recover damages for any such injury caused by any such master, mate, engineer, or pilot.

Why, sir, we have the whole principle in the law with which the gentleman has been familar all the time, and he expresses his profound astonishment that we have placed it in this bill, and he moves to strike it out.

Now, the only difference is this; that we have extended it not only to the passenger and his baggage, but to the freight. That is all the difference between the bill and the section of the law as it stands now. And I submit here that the man who has $10,000 or $50,000 freight on a vessel has as good a title for damages to that as a man who has a trunk worth $25. The principle is just and cannot be combated with propriety, and to oppose it is only to save the vessel-owners from their just liability to those who ship property on their boats and trust to their fidelity and integrity and obedience to the laws as a protection for life and property.

Mr. CONGER. I do not want that there shall be any misunderstanding in regard to this. The law as it stands now reads thus: "The master and owner of such vessel shall be liable." What does the gentleman from Texas do? He extends the liability to every employé of the boat.

Mr. REAGAN. If the employé has been guilty of willful misconduct or willful neglect.

Mr. CONGER. Or failure to comply with the provisions of this title. If it means the same thing, why change the law in all these particulars? But the committee have made it apply to all of the employés of the boat for their failure to know these things.

The law as it stands at present makes this distinction: it allows anybody to sue the employés of the boat for an injury caused by them personally; it holds the master and owner of the boat liable for injuries caused by their misconduct or their negligence. That is the common-law rule; but the committee have included in it all the employés of the boat; whereas the present law——

Mr. REAGAN. The last clause in the section covers precisely what the gentleman from Michigan is aiming at.

Mr. CONGER. It is not at all the same. The present law makes the employés liable for what injury they personally do, and not for what others do; but this bill makes anybody liable that is employed on that boat—the cook and everybody.

The question being taken on Mr. CONGER'S amendment, it was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. The amendments apply only to a portion of this bill. In the substitute which I have offered are embodied substantially the amendments which have been adopted; and also this, which is the main thing in the substitute: It equalizes the liability of vessel-owners and employés on vessels on all our waters alike; on the Mississippi as well as the ocean; on the Ohio as well as the great lakes. I agree with the gentleman from Ohio in his remarks that there is and can be no valid, cogent reason why the liability on our great inland rivers should be different on our lakes, on our great bays and gulfs around the coast, and on the ocean itself. The substitute I have offered provides for this liability on the inland waters as on the ocean and as on the lakes; and, as has been remarked by several gentlemen, makes it the same as it is in all civilized maritime nations of the earth.

I have long thought that there should be no distinction in the law of liability between our inland waters and the oceans, bays, and lakes. Why, sir, as the law is now, the same vessel having one liability on the ocean coming into the Mississippi meets another liability. The master or owner of the vessel does not know where the one ends or the other begins. He does not know where the imaginary line between the gulf and the river is drawn. Again, a vessel coming up the Hudson passes, somewhere between the outer harbor and the inner harbor, no man can tell where, a point where the liability ceases under one law and commences under another. There is nothing to mark where the liability becomes greater in one place than in another. And there is no reason in the world for this except the following, out of the old common-law definition of England, that tide-waters alone were subject to maritime jurisdiction.

On our great rivers there should be the same law as there is for the lakes. And I ask the adoption of this substitute, which embraces whatever provisions there are in this section which it is desirable to adopt for the security of life, and at the same time makes the liability of vessels on our rivers and all our waters alike; so that no master of a vessel need be searching for an imaginary line where his liability under one law is left behind him and his liability under another law commences with his onward progress.

I will not take up the time of the House further than to say that the distinction which my substitute seeks to do away with it has always appeared to me was wrong. It is owing to that distinction that to-day almost the entire ownership of vessels on our inland waters is in the hands of men of straw, as is known to everybody. There are men who own their own vessels who have all their property in the world on them, and therefore there is no more liability than in their property in those vessels. But very many of the vessels on our inland waters are owned nominally by men who assume the ownership of them, because the real owners, the men of wealth who really own them, will not be liable for them because of this law which subjects their whole property to liability for damages, contrary to the rule of every civilized nation.

The question being taken on Mr. CONGER'S substitute for the thirty-first section, it was adopted.

The Clerk read the following section:

SEC. 32. That every steamer shall be provided with good and sufficient anchors and chain cables, suitable in size, weight, and number to the size of the steamer and to the trade in which she may be employed; and on all steamers hereafter built, all swinging doors shall be hung on parliament hinges, so that they may be readily removed and used as life-preservers.

Mr. REAGAN. I offer the following amendment at the suggestion of the committee:

Amend section 32 by inserting the word "length" after the word "size" in the second line of the section.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REAGAN. I offer the following as an additional section, to come in immediately before section 33 of the bill:

SEC. 33. That the fifth clause of section 4414 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be so amended as to read as follows: "In the districts of Mobile, Memphis, Cleveland, and Galveston, to a salary of $1,500 each;" and that the word "Galveston" be stricken out of the sixth clause of said section.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would inquire what is the effect of that amendment?

Mr. REAGAN. The effect of the amendment is to increase the compensation of the inspectors at Galveston from $1,200 to $1,500 and place them upon the same footing with the inspectors in other collection districts of the same grade, but which all together have not so much commerce as this single port at present. It really should be placed in a higher grade, but it is put there because it puts these inspectors on something like an equality with other inspectors.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 51, noes 16; no quorum voting.

Mr. CONGER. If the gentleman from Indiana will allow me to say a word in explanation I think he will not insist upon a further count.

Mr. HOLMAN. I must insist on a quorum upon any proposition to raise salaries; but I am willing to hear the explanation of the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER.]

Mr. CONGER. I wish to make a very brief explanation. When these inspectors were classified in 1871 they were classified as to their salaries in reference to the amount of business at the different ports and in the districts. Since that time, as every one knows, the port of Galveston has very largely increased in its shipping and commerce, so much so that under the rule then adopted the pay of these inspectors should really go to a higher class than the one proposed by the gentleman from Texas. The shipping inspectors there have $1,200 a year, and have a greater amount of business now than they had when they were classified. I have examined the matter and I see no reason why they should not be placed in the class above the one they are now in, at $1,500. This service is self-sustaining, and these officers are paid for by the ship-owners themselves; it is not a tax on the Government, and we ought to have good and efficient men in these places.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the classification now of the salaries for inspectors?

Mr. CONGER. The classification is for two or three of the largest ports $2,200, then $2,000, then $1,500, and then $1,200. It is proposed to raise the pay of the inspectors of the Galveston district from $1,200 to $1,500.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will not call for a further division, although I think that these salaries should not be increased.

The amendment offered by Mr. REAGAN was agreed to.

Mr. SAYLER. I understand that this amendment was offered as a substitute for section 33.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Texas, under the directions of the committee, offered the amendment to be inserted as section 33; but the number of section 33 now in the bill will of course be changed.

Mr. HARRISON. I offer the following as an additional section, to come in after the one just adopted:

That pilots and engineers of all steam-vessels, who shall be licensed as such, are hereby declared officers of said vessels, and are hereby declared subject to the same obligations and entitled to the same privileges as other licensed officers of steam-vessels, and that none but American citizens shall be licensed as pilots and engineers.

Mr. Speaker, the law now is supposed to be that none but American citizens, or those who have taken steps to become citizens, can become officers. It was supposed that pilots and engineers were considered officers; but on the western lakes it is frequently the case that they are not so considered, and persons coming from ports in Canada act as pilots and engineers to the great detriment of the skilled engineers and pilots of the lake ports.

This is a section declaring positively that pilots and engineers are officers. It simply takes the vagueness out of the law as it at present stands. I think there can be no objection to the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. CONGER. That is the construction put upon the present law.

Mr. KEHR. As the law now is that officers of vessels of the United States shall in all cases be citizens of the United States, the gist and pith of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARRISON] must be looked for in that clause of it which provides that none but American citizens shall be licensed as pilots and engineers. The amendment can have no other object except to discriminate against pilots and engineers who, though skilled in their calling, have not added to their fitness and qualification for the service the political attribute of citizenship. Sir, does the shipmaster, bent upon employing a skillful and faithful pilot or engineer; does the passenger, whose personal safety is for the time being confided to the keeping of the officer of the vessel upon which he is about to embark; does the shipper, the safe delivery of whose freight depends upon the efficiency with which the vessel is officered—does either of these inquire as to the nativity or citizenship of the engineer or pilot? Is not the inquiry limited to the question whether or not the officers and servants of the vessel are skillful and whether or not they are diligent and faithful? Can there be any other test than fitness for the service and diligence and fidelity in the performance of its duties? This being the sole test, it is necessarily utterly immaterial whether the applicant for the service or the person performing the service is a full-fledged citizen or an alien resident among us. I for one am not willing to countenance any discrimination between them in this regard, and I trust that this House will not, but that it will unhesitatingly vote down the amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. Just one word. The law at present emphatically states that American citizens alone shall be officers. All through this bill the phrase "pilots, engineers, masters, and other officers" shows that it is the assumption that pilots and engineers are officers. But the language as existing in the law now enforced has been overridden in the maritime courts, and for that reason we have here to-day memorials from pilots and engineers of our lake ports asking for the passage of a provision of this kind.

Mr. REAGAN. I now call the previous question on the bill as amended and the pending amendment.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The question was then taken upon the amendment offered by Mr. HARRISON; and upon a division there were—ayes 53, noes 45.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. KEHR called for the yeas and nays upon the amendment.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays; and upon a division there were 10 in the affirmative.

So (the affirmative not being one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. KEHR. I call for tellers upon the amendment.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I ask for a division of the House upon ordering tellers.

The question was taken upon ordering tellers; and upon a division there were 25 in the affirmative.

So (the affirmative not being one-fifth of a quorum) tellers were not ordered.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his question of order.

Mr. O'BRIEN. A quorum not having voted upon the adoption of the amendment, tellers were in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No quorum having voted, it was competent for the Chair to have ordered tellers. But the sense of the House was taken upon the question by a division, and tellers were not ordered.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. REAGAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUBSIDIARY SILVER COIN.

Mr. RANDALL. The Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the amendments of the Senate to House bill No. 2450, to provide for a deficiency in the Printing and Engraving Bureau of the Treasury Department, and for the issue of silver coin of the United States in place of fractional currency, have instructed me to report the same back to the House with a recommendation that the amendments of the Senate be concurred in. Upon that I call the previous question.

Mr. CONGER. Will the gentleman state the substance of those amendments or allow them to be read?

Mr. FORT. Let them be read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to give notice that I shall call for a separate vote upon one of the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to that. I only ask that the previous question may be ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendments of the Senate.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

At the end of line 6, page 1, insert the following:

"And the further sum of $48,000 to provide for engraving and printing national-bank notes, to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury."

Page 1, line 3, strike out the word "whether" and insert in lieu thereof "whenever."

At the end of line 19, page 1, insert:

"And all fractional currency redeemed under this act shall be held to be part of the sinking fund provided for by existing law, the interest to be computed thereon as in the case of bonds redeemed under the act relating to the sinking fund."

Strike out section 3 of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask a separate vote on the amendment of the Senate to strike out section 3 of the bill of the House.

Mr. HURLBUT. I ask that section 3 be read.

The section was read, as follows:

That the silver coins of the United States of the denomination of $1 shall be a legal tender at their nominal value for any amount not exceeding $50 in any one payment; and silver coins of the United States of denominations less than $1 shall be a legal tender at their nominal value for any amount not exceeding $25 in any one payment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am opposed to concurrence in the amendment of the Senate striking out that section, and I shall ask a separate vote on that amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. The section was stricken out in the Senate upon the statement that a separate proposition would be introduced for that purpose in another bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

The question was taken upon concurring in the amendment of the Senate to strike out the third section of the bill; and upon a division there were—ayes 96, noes 55.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. HOLMAN called for tellers.

Mr. KASSON. I ask unanimous consent of the House that the session of this afternoon be continued for fifteen minutes longer.

Mr. RANDALL. It is important to pass this bill in order that the people in the Treasury may be set to work again.

Mr. LUTTRELL. There is so much suffering that I think we should pass this bill now, even if we have to go without our dinner.

Mr. HURLBUT. I call for the regular order.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. KING was granted leave of absence for three weeks on account of important business.

The hour of half past four having arrived, the House, pursuant to previous order, took a recess until half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House re-assembled at half past seven o'clock, and was called to order by Mr. BLACKBURN as Speaker pro tempore.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. COX in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2571) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read as follows, under the heading "Commissioner of Internal Revenue:"

For dies, paper, and stamps, $450,000; and hereafter the transmission of internal-revenue stamps to the officers of the internal-revenue service shall be made through the mails of the United States.

Mr. RANDALL. In accordance with the suggestion which I made when this bill was last under consideration in the Committee of the Whole, I now submit, not as coming from the committee, but with their permission, so as to test the sense of the House, the following amendment:

Insert after the first clause of the paragraph just read the following:

"Said engraving and printing to be done in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing of the Treasury Department: Provided, The cost does not exceed the price paid under existing contract."

I may perhaps repeat with propriety the statement which I made on the last evening when this bill was under consideration. It is well known that a large number of persons have been discharged from this Bureau; and upon application to the Secretary of the Treasury I learn the fact that if such an amendment as I have indicated be adopted about two-thirds of the employés now on furlough or discharged would be re-employed by the Government. The question is between having this work done in the Bureau or done by private contractors. Heretofore, I believe, a portion of this work—the printing of the adhesive stamps—has been done in Philadelphia. The check stamps have been prepared by phototype in New York. Various other classes of stamps, such as beer stamps, distillery stamps, tobacco stamps, snuff stamps, &c., are now being printed by three bank-note companies, the American, the National, and the Continental. It is a question for the House to determine whether this work should be given to employés of the Government in the Engraving and Printing Bureau or whether it should be allowed to continue in the hands of the three contracting companies that I have named. I am informed by the Secretary of the Treasury that he has given the ninety days' notice provided for in all those contracts by which the Government can, without any violation of the terms of the contracts and without subjecting the Government to any liability for damages, resume the work in the Department on the 1st of July next. With this statement I leave the question for the House to determine.

Mr. HAMILTON, of New Jersey. I would inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether it is now discretionary with the Secretary of the Treasury under the law to do the work in the Treasury Department?

Mr. RANDALL. The Secretary of the Treasury, under the contract, has the right to give ninety days' notice when the contract shall cease.

Mr. HAMILTON, of New Jersey. Has he then the discretion to do the work in his own Department?

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know that he has that discretion; but he has the authority to discontinue doing the work under contract with the parties who now execute it.

Mr. HENDEE. I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] whether his amendment, if adopted, will not in fact save a large expense to the Government in the matter of transportation and expressage.

Mr. RANDALL. Undoubtedly it will save money in expressage. I understand that there has been some arrangement made by which the expressage has been reduced, but according to a statement embraced in a report of the Committee on Banking and Currency in the last Congress the cost of expressage on revenue-stamps in one fiscal year was more than $19,000. In the report of that committee upon the engraving and printing of bank-notes, fractional currency, internal-revenue stamps, &c., there is a table, designed to show the difference between the cost of having the stamps printed by the bank-note companies and the cost if printed in the Bureau. One of these tables, all of which I include in full in my remarks, shows a difference in favor of the Bureau of $5,902.50. Another of the tables, based on reduced prices to journeymen printers, shows a difference in favor of the Bureau, exclusive of freight, of $1,762. To my mind there is no reason why the Government should not be able to print these stamps at less than the cost when printed by contractors, when we take into consideration the fact that the Government incurs no additional expense for rent or machinery, pays nothing for insurance, and has no dividends to declare the stockholders, as have these companies. One reason why the Government cannot compete so successfully as it should with private parties arises from the difference in hours of labor. To some extent, also, private parties are enabled to get more work out of their mechanics and skilled laborers than the Government can, so far as experience shows.

This question is for the House to determine. I do not wish, nor does the committee, to bias the House in any degree one way or the other.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I have a further amendment to the same paragraph, to come in after line 593, which I send up to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

And the unexpended balance standing on the books of the Treasury to the credit of the appropriation for stamps, papers, and dies for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, is hereby made available for any expenditures incurred on account of stamps, paper, and dies during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and June 30, 1877.

Mr. RANDALL. There is what is in the nature of a deficiency of $28,000, and the pending amendment allows them to expend that amount of money.

Mr. HURLBUT. How does he propose to expend a deficiency?

Mr. RANDALL. I propose to make a re-appropriation to meet the deficiency. I ask the letter from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, February 29, 1876.

SIR: Confirming the verbal statement made to the Committee on Appropriations by Mr. E. R. Chapman, chief of the stamp division of this Office, I have the honor to state that the estimated expenditures on account of stamps, paper, and dies during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, are $466,280.83.

The expenditures during the first six months of the current fiscal year and the estimate of expenditures for the last six months of the year aggregate $528,000, and as the appropriation is but $500,000, there will therefore be a deficiency of $28,000, which should be provided for.

If an appropriation is made to cover the deficiency, it is the opinion of this Office that it can reduce the expenditures for the next fiscal year to $450,000.

Inasmuch as a balance is shown upon the books of this Department to the credit of the appropriation for stamps, paper, and dies for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, it is suggested that the necessity of a deficiency appropriation can be obviated by adding to the appropriation clause in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill now under consideration in your committee the following, namely:

"Provided, That the unexpended balance standing on the books of the Treasury to the credit of the appropriation for stamps, paper, and dies for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, is hereby made available for any expenditures incurred on account of stamps, paper, and dies during the fiscal years ending June 30, 1876, and June 30, 1877."

If the deficiency appropriation is not made or the above proviso inserted in the bill, it will be absolutely necessary that the appropriation for the next fiscal year should be not less than $480,000.

With reference to the expenditures under this appropriation, I beg to add that the printing of all stamps, except those for special taxes, is done under contracts made after due advertisements for proposals and awards to the lowest bidders.

The rates paid have been materially reduced during the past eighteen months, and this Office would be prepared to show a material reduction in the expenditures were it not for the annual increase in the production throughout the United States of the articles upon which internal duties are levied.

I shall take pleasure in waiting upon your committee at any time that may suit your convenience, personally or by representative, for the purpose of exhibiting the existing contracts and explaining the reductions in rates hereinbefore referred to.

Very respectfully,

D. D. PRATT,
Commissioner.

Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. FOSTER. I move to strike out all after the word "dollar" in line 591, being the clause which provides for the transmission of internal-revenue stamps through the mails.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. HENDEE] desires to move an amendment to perfect the paragraph which the gentleman proposes to strike out.

Mr. FOSTER. I will withdraw my amendment for the present.

Mr. HENDEE. I move at the end of line 593, after the words "United States," to insert "in registered packages," so it will read, "and hereafter the transmission of internal-revenue stamps to the officers of the internal-revenue service shall be made through the mails of the United States, in registered packages."

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. HENDEE. It seems to me that would be a guard which would protect that class of property while passing through the mails.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. I now renew my motion to strike out the clause as amended, that is to strike out these words: "and hereafter the transmission of internal-revenue stamps to the officers of the internal-revenue service shall be made through the mails of the United States, in registered packages."

Mr. Chairman, the object of the insertion of this clause is to save a small sum of money to the United States. The objection to it is this: We make a specific appropriation for these stamps in amount just about what is necessary. There is no sure protection against theft and robbery in the United States mails, nor is there any recourse in case of robbery. If twenty-five or fifty thousand dollars' worth of these stamps should be stolen the Department would be short that much.

It strikes me, Mr. Chairman, it is not a sound policy to trust so large an amount of valuable property in stamps in the mails of the United States for the mere purpose of saving a few thousand dollars—ten or twelve thousand at the outside.

Mr. RANDALL. The object is to save between fifty and sixty thousand a year, which to my mind unnecessarily goes to express companies. This is one of the abuses; and there are many others of the same character. The people and the House will be surprised at the enormous amount of money which under the existing law goes to express companies.

It is an extraordinary position to my mind for a friend of the Administration to assume that the United States mails are not secure. I supposed they were, and more especially when I find the amendment which was so well put in by the gentleman from Vermont. I think there is no danger whatever in connection with the transmission of these stamps in registered packages.

Mr. FOSTER. I should like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question. He is a business man; so am I. There are $80,000,000 or $90,000,000 of these stamps to be transmitted through the mails, and I put this question to him as a business man, would he trust the mails of the United States?

Mr. RANDALL. As a business man I do and am compelled to trust them. I always do. I have, just as proposed by the gentleman from Vermont, my package registered. I am quite aware of the fact that I can have no claim against the United States for damage in case of loss; but, as it were, I have a constant eye on that package until it arrives at its destination. These registered packages are made up especially, and here is a good place to save the amount of money I have indicated.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether it is not true that stamps and stamped envelopes distributed by the Post-Office Department to the thirty thousand or forty thousand post-offices do not go through the mails, and whether they do not always go without loss?

Mr. RANDALL. I understand that to be so, but as the gentleman knows the fact, I hope he will assert it here upon this floor.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Such is my understanding of the fact in the case.

Mr. RANDALL. This is a mere gratuity to the express companies.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I wish to suggest that since we passed the law allowing packages to go through the mails on the Pacific coast, thousands and tens of thousands of dollars in gold dust and gold bars pass through the mails every month—$20,000 a month going into the San Francisco post-office every month, and not one dollar has ever been lost.

Mr. RANDALL. I have a better opinion than the gentleman from Ohio of the safety of the mails.

Mr. FOSTER. I am very glad to hear this testimony in favor of the efficiency of the Post-Office Department.

Mr. LUTTRELL. We are not speaking of straw bids now,

Mr. FOSTER. I withdraw my amendment.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For salaries and expenses of collectors, $1,531,000.

Mr. DUNNELL. I offer the following amendment:

Strike out "$1,531,000" and insert "$1,931,000."

It seems to me that the reduction in the amount appropriated for the collection of the revenue has been very large. Last year there was appropriated $2,150,000. This year there is a reduction to $1,531,000, or between 24 or 25 per cent. Now, I do not wish to be captious at all on this bill, but this is an item that gives force and efficiency to the internal revenue. We get upward of $100,000,000 of internal revenue. It seems to me very bad policy to cut down a few hundred thousand dollars in providing for that collecting force, if by doing that we might lose two, three, four, five, or ten million dollars.

It will be remembered, Mr. Chairman, that within the last five years we made a large reduction in the internal-revenue collecting force. In the Forty-second Congress the assessors were dispensed with, and in the Forty-third Congress there was a very large reduction in the collecting force. And now it is proposed to make a still further reduction of one-fourth. I think it is stated by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that we have now no more force than we ought to have; that the number of collectors and deputy collectors is as small as it can be consistently with a thorough and vigorous collection of the revenue.

Take my own State, the State which I have the honor in part to represent. We have at least seventy-five counties in which this collecting force have to go. We have but two collectors and about eight deputies to take care of seventy-five counties; a territory larger than all New England. Now it is proposed to cut down the force, and I suppose my State will be affected as well as others. It is, I believe, the fact that when the deputy collectors are sent out from time to time to make a special examination, when they return they collect in increased revenue more than the cost of those deputies. It is utterly impossible to get the revenue unless it is looked after. The deputies must go from county to county and from village to village, and the entire territory must be looked over. I think it is not economy to reduce this collecting force, this supervising force, because by cutting down a few thousand dollars we may lose ten times the amount we save. I insist that this reduction is altogether too large, and I hope that if the amount shall not be brought back to the point indicated in my amendment, there will be at least something added to the collecting force provided for in the bill as it stands.

Mr. RANDALL. It is necessary for me to state that the reduction in this appropriation involves a reduction in the number of collection districts, and therefore of the number of collectors from one hundred and sixty-six, as it is now, to one hundred and five. The general character of the business for the various districts was examined into, and the result was reached of the reduction I have stated. An examination was also made in regard to the necessary expenses, and an estimate of what was required in each State was reached with great care. I have before me a table showing the result; the number of collection districts in each State, and the amount of money which was deemed necessary to maintain the officers and to collect the revenue as heretofore. The reduction made in the number of collectors is sixty-one. Of course we are relieved from the payment of the salaries of that number of collectors. The other salaries in the collection offices above $1,200 were reduced 10 per cent. The number of deputies that we reduced was very few. I think the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] will bear me out in stating that no considerable reduction was made in the number of deputy collectors.

Now, having reduced the collection districts to one hundred and five, the amount was reached which is stated in this paragraph, $1,531,000. In the reduction of the districts and the provision directing their consolidation we left it to the discretion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue how those consolidations should be made. The basis upon which we arrived at the result I have indicated can be varied from by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue whenever he may see fit. For instance, it may be that our basis in some of the States is not as large as it should be; but we are advised that in other States it is in excess of what it should be. For instance, according to our basis Georgia should be divided into three districts; and yet the member of the Committee on Appropriations from that State thinks that one is sufficient; and two of the leading citizens of Georgia, one of them I think having been formerly connected with the internal revenue, came before the committee, or at least came to me and other members of the committee, and stated that one is sufficient. He wrote a letter on the subject, which is on file.

Again, take the State of Indiana. We have provided for four districts in the State of Indiana, while my friend in front of me from that State, [Mr. HOLMAN,] and he is a member of the Committee on Appropriations, deemed that two were sufficient, and that certainly not more than three were necessary. Arkansas has but one now. Of course we made no increase there. Then take my own State of Pennsylvania. We fixed the number there at eight, and yet I have little doubt but it will be found that six collection districts in that State are sufficient.

Mr. KASSON. How about Iowa?

Mr. RANDALL. Iowa has four.

Mr. KASSON. That will do.

Mr. LAWRENCE. How in Ohio?

Mr. RANDALL. Ohio has seven; the number being fixed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] who is a member of the Committee on Appropriations.

My own State, as I have before stated, has eight. I think the work could be done with six. I merely mention these States to illustrate the fact that we have not crippled the Commissioner of Internal Revenue at all in fixing the number of these districts.

Mr. HURLBUT. How about Illinois?

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Illinois inquires as to his State. We have given seven districts to the State of Illinois. The State of Tennessee has three, and yet I believe that this is more than is sufficient, certainly one more.

I state these facts so that the House may see at once that we have not crippled the Commissioner.

Now we have directed him to make these subdivisions for this reason, that it came to the knowledge of the committee that unless we did so direct him to do he would have great difficulty in overcoming—I say it with great respect—a sort of political pressure brought to bear on him whenever he comes to consolidate districts. It is the opinion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that these districts may be consolidated, and he has more than once attempted to consolidate them. Let me say to his credit that I do not know any man in the Government who is more desirous to reduce the expenditures of the Government than the present occupant of that office.

Mr. PRATT. I would ask the gentleman if the committee have provided in this bill for the number of districts in each State?

Mr. RANDALL. No; we have declared that the total number shall be one hundred and five, and have directed the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to redistrict the United States as he may see fit, restricting him, however, to one hundred and five districts.

Mr. PRATT. Then the numbers which the gentleman has been giving for each State are from his own calculations merely.

Mr. RANDALL. It is the basis adopted by the committee for its government, and is one that in our opinion could do no harm, as we thought.

Mr. HENDERSON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. RANDALL. Certainly; I am ready to answer all questions.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to ask the gentleman whether the reduction of collectors will not result necessarily in an increase of the number of deputy collectors?

Mr. RANDALL. We think not. The collector does not travel, but the deputies do; and the reduction we have made in the number of deputies amounts to a mere nothing. I think the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] will corroborate me in the statement that the increase in the number of deputies is not large.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not large——

Mr. FOSTER. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I can cheerfully attest to the faithfulness and attention that this part of the bill has received from the committee, and especially from its chairman. I disagree with him as to the amount of reduction he proposes to make, but I cordially concede that he has given it careful and close attention. For myself, I am governed and I feel that I am bound to be governed to a certain extent by the views of the able management of that Department. There are to-day one hundred and sixty-six collection districts in the United States. They have been steadily reduced from two hundred and forty-odd to one hundred and sixty-six, and the bill proposes to reduce the number to one hundred and five.

In my judgment, Mr. Chairman, and in the judgment of the Department which has given this subject a careful, close, and scrutinizing attention, this reduction is too great. In their own opinion, as in mine, it jeopardizes the successful collection of the revenue. They met us in a spirit of economy; they met us as we desired they should; they have gone over this whole subject carefully, and they gave to us as their opinion that the lowest possible point to which this reduction can be made is one hundred and thirty districts. To that reduction they accede. They have gone over carefully the expenses attending the collection of the revenue, and in their judgment it requires $1,900,000, or $200,000 less than last year.

In my judgment, Mr. Chairman, it is a dangerous thing to do to to carry this reform or retrenchment to such an extent in a Department like this, which collects more than two-fifths of all the revenues, to an extent that may possibly cripple it. I say here that I would rather give more to this Department than it needs than less. I believe that it is economy in this matter. I think that the committee ought to give the Commissioner of Internal Revenue the sum he asks, which is, $1,900,000.

Mr. RANDALL. As the gentleman from Ohio has alluded to the conference of the committee with the officers of this Bureau, which was a pleasant one, I want to say that for myself I suggested that we should reduce the number of collection districts to one hundred, that we then embarked upon the task of consolidating and reducing the number, not knowing exactly where we would reach until we got to the end, and strange to say, these very gentlemen of the Department and our subcommittee, consisting of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] and myself, reached one hundred and five districts together as a proper basis of reduction.

Now let me say, and I say it with great respect, that the natural inclination of the gentleman at the head of this Department is to hold on to the number of collection districts now existing. I suppose that if I were there myself I should want to retain all I could, but really I think that there is no possible harm that can come from this consolidation down to one hundred and five districts.

We have not in any measure whatever reduced the number of deputies who do the traversing of the various collection districts to see that the revenues are collected, and we have set apart, as I think, a liberal sum in each State for the collection of the revenues. But if it should be developed that this reduction is too large, we shall have it within our power to remedy it.

Now, I remember very well the discussion which took place formerly on this subject, and the same character of complaint was made when the former consolidation took place at the instance of a then member of the House from Kentucky, Mr. Beck, and I am not certain but that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] was a member of the subcommittee that made that reduction.

Mr. FOSTER. That was another matter.

Mr. RANDALL. What I want to state to the House is that it is the disposition of Bureau officers to predict great injuries to the revenue if we make these reductions.

Mr. FOSTER. I withdraw my formal amendment.

Mr. DUNNELL. I renew the amendment to the amendment. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has said that this reduction would not reduce the number of deputy collectors.

Mr. RANDALL. I said it would not materially reduce the number.

Mr. DUNNELL. I think it would materially reduce the number of deputy collectors. Here is proposed a reduction of about $600,000 in the expenses of collecting the revenue. It will be seen at once that all that amount is not saved by simply reducing the number of collectors from one hundred and sixty-five to one hundred and five.

Mr. RANDALL. A part of it comes from the 10 per cent. reduction upon the salaries above $1,200.

Mr. DUNNELL. There are but few salaries above that sum in this Bureau.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman is mistaken in that.

Mr. DUNNELL. Gentlemen must see that this reduction will not be only in the number of collectors, but there must necessarily be a reduction of the number of deputy collectors. A few moments ago I went over to the seat of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to examine the list of States that he has there, for the purpose of ascertaining the principles of this reduction. I found that the State of Minnesota was consolidated into one district. As I stated before, there are seventy-five counties in Minnesota that must be visited, and there are stretches of four hundred miles that must be gone over in a territory larger than all New England. The amount here appropriated is but a little more than half of what has been heretofore appropriated; yet fault has been found with the deputies there because they could not go over the Territory sufficiently under the former appropriations. The loss which will result will not be in a place like Philadelphia or New York, and other larger and more thickly-settled places; but it will be in the more sparsely-settled portions of the country, the remote villages and the remote cities, all of which must be visited once a month.

Now, if we before had none too many men to do this work, I insist, in the interest of true economy and of the thorough collection of the revenue, that with this reduction of 24 per cent. the year that shall tell the story of the result of this reduction will show that we have lost millions while attempting to save a few thousands. I hope the amendment proposed to be made to this paragraph will be adopted.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. It seems to me it is a very hazardous experiment which the Committee on Appropriations are recommending to this House. One year ago the tax on distilled spirits was raised from seventy cents to ninety cents per gallon. The proposition was debated here very fully, and the only serious objection that was urged to it was that it would be impossible to collect a higher rate of tax. To-day arguments are made in favor of the reduction of the rate of tax, because it is insisted that a greater amount of revenue will be collected from the lower rate of tax. You cannot collect the tax on distilled spirits unless you have officers to attend to the duties connected with the assessment of the tax, and the ascertainment of the amount of material used and the amount produced. You must have collectors, deputy collectors, gaugers, store-keepers, and all the other officers provided by law at the present time.

Mr. LUTTRELL. Did we not collect a larger amount of revenue when we had a fifty-cent tax?

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. You are calling me off to a proposition that I want to discuss at the proper time, when I will show you why we collected more when the tax was lower; and it was not because the tax was lower. However I do not want to discuss that proposition at this time.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me to suggest that the store-keeper and gauger is the man to do the work, not the collector?

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I understand that; I do not want to discuss that part of the subject until we come to it. You must have deputy collectors as well as collectors. You have in this country some six hundred and ninety-six registered grain and molasses distilleries, besides about four thousand fruit distilleries. There are in Georgia twenty-two grain distilleries, besides four hundred fruit distilleries; and it is necessary that you have the officers to assess these distilleries.

This Administration has already reduced the number of officers in this branch of the executive Government. When the President was first inaugurated there were six thousand and forty-three officers connected with the internal-revenue service. In two years from that time they had been reduced to four thousand one hundred and seventy-one; and at the present time there are but two thousand eight hundred and two.

The following will show the number of the several officers and employés engaged in assessing and collecting the internal revenue in the various collection districts of the United States at the different times named:

	March, 1869.	Dec'r, 1871.	April, 1876.
Assessors	240	232	.....
Collectors	240	232	166
Supervisors	25	25	10
Detectives	24	22	25
Assistant assessors	2,746	1,391	.....
Gaugers	742	987	806
Store-keepers	1,116	781	698
Tobacco inspectors	750	134	29
Surveyors	160	367	.....
Deputy collectors	.....	.....	865
Clerks, messengers, and janitors	.....	.....	203
Total	6,043	4,171	2,802

We have by law changed the system so that it has become possible to reduce the number by imposing upon collectors and assistant collectors the duties that prior to that time were imposed by law upon assessors and assistant assessors.

When the law was first framed providing for the collection of internal revenue it was upon the principle which was recognized during the war of 1812, when we had an internal-revenue system; that is, with one set of officers performing duties connected with assessments and another set of officers acting as a check upon them. We concluded to abolish that system, and did abolish about one thousand assistant assessors, and in their places we provided for the appointment of deputy collectors. At the present time we have eight hundred and sixty-five deputy collectors. There were deputy collectors before that time, but they were paid out of the allowances and commissions provided for the collectors of the district. In 1871 we abolished two hundred and thirty-two assistant assessors and consolidated the districts. At the present time there are one hundred and sixty-six collection districts; they have been reduced 20 per cent. during the last year. The present Commissioner of Internal Revenue has done all that he could do with safety and economy from time to time, experimenting carefully and wisely to see that he did not impair the efficiency of the service while reducing the number of officers. Now, he has said, as gentlemen here state, that he can, without impairing the collection of the revenues, reduce the number to one hundred and twenty-nine, and that he does not believe it safe or prudent to make a greater reduction. But the committee come in here and take up the list; and one gentleman from Georgia says, "I think one collector and two or three deputies can take care of twenty-two grain distilleries and over four hundred fruit distilleries in Georgia; I believe I know more about this than the internal-revenue officers; I believe these districts can be consolidated." So these gentlemen go on and undertake to place themselves in the position of this officer. I believe seriously that if gentlemen on the other side of the House sustain the reduction proposed by the committee the country will hold them responsible if the tax of ninety cents a gallon cannot be collected.

Mr. KASSON obtained the floor, and yielded his time to Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. In my view the present tax should be maintained and the necessary force given to the internal-revenue officers until we see whether we can collect the tax or not. Give the present system a fair trial; then if the tax appears too high, let us reduce it; but let us not cripple the force of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the officers acting in conjunction with him, and then divide the responsibility. Let the responsibility rest upon the office and those who administer it. Let us give them the force which they say they require, and then hold them responsible for the efficient administration of the law. There are in the present service about fourteen hundred men, including all the officers connected with the service except the gaugers or store-keepers. I do not understand that the committee propose to reduce the number of gaugers or store-keepers. That is not particularly connected with this paragraph. But the number of other officers you must have in some shape. In this bill you propose, as I understand, to dispense with ten supervisors and also to refuse to the Commissioner twenty-five additional revenue agents that he asks for. As I understand, and I have it from the Commissioner himself, he has consented to one hundred and twenty-nine collectors, provided he can have twenty-five more revenue agents. If the districts be reduced to one hundred and twenty-nine, he can send out these officers to perform service now performed by other officers. The Commissioner asks that there may be this additional force of twenty-five revenue agents, and if this be granted, he will consent that the collection districts shall be reduced to one hundred and twenty-nine. But you do not give him a single additional officer that he asks, while you propose to reduce the number of districts to one hundred and five upon a consolidation made in the committee. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me this is unwise and unsafe. It is better, far better, to move slowly and carefully. Other governments have for years collected a part of their internal revenue by a tax on distilled spirits. France and Germany and Great Britain have moved cautiously. Let us do the same. If we experiment at all, let us do so with great caution. Let us give proper trial to any system or law which we may adopt. Let us not, in pursuit of a false and mistaken economy, interfere with a system which is now working with advantage, and which is collecting revenue more cheaply than any other system that has been tried. Our internal-revenue service does not now cost nearly so much in proportion to the amount collected as the customs-revenue service. The internal revenue is collected more cheaply than at any time before in the history of the country.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to say that I favor the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. FOSTER.] Gentlemen will recollect that under existing law the Commissioner of Internal Revenue during last year reduced the number of collection districts, I believe, thirty, and he tells us that he cannot reduce them further at this time without endangering an honest collection of the revenue. Now, gentlemen on the other side tell us that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is honest, intelligent, and vigilant, the best man that can be found for the place. Now, then, why not let the law remain as it is? If the districts can be consolidated further, it is admitted by all that the Commissioner will and has the power to consolidate them. Why, without a better knowledge of the necessities of the service than we can have, blindly and, I may say, recklessly provide that the collection districts shall be cut down fifty-six more?

The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations says that one district for Georgia is enough. Now, let us see about that. During the last fiscal year Georgia paid $387,000, all told, internal-revenue taxes, and there were operated in the State four hundred and nineteen distilleries; while my own State (Illinois) for the same year paid largely more internal-revenue taxes than any other State, namely, over $17,600,000, and there were operated one hundred and seven distilleries; and the chairman of the committee says seven collection districts are enough for Illinois. Now, I want to submit that the amount of revenue collected in Georgia perhaps will not justify more than one collector; possibly many persons in Georgia do not pay the taxes, and possibly we could well pay the salaries of several additional collectors in Georgia for a full collection of the revenue. I do not say that this is the case. I only judge that it may be so from the large extent of territory, the great number of distilleries in that State, and the small revenue collected. Again, the chairman of the committee tells us that in making up the number of districts it is upon the basis of four districts in Iowa. Now, Iowa only paid a revenue of $1,000,000 last year. Now, if it takes four collectors for Iowa to collect $1,000,000, surely seven collectors in Illinois are not enough to collect $17,600,000 per annum.

So I might go on and make similar comparisons as to nearly all the States. I want to get along with the smallest possible number of officers that can collect the revenue; and when I say collect the revenue, I mean just what I say—collect the revenue. Therefore, let the law remain as it is. If the good of the service requires two or three collectors in Georgia, let the Commissioner have the power to appoint them; and if he can dispense with collectors in Georgia, Illinois, Iowa, or elsewhere, let him continue to have power to do so. Such authority has worked well heretofore; then why, in the interests of a false economy, change it? It looks to me as though the effect of the proposed law would be to prevent an honest and efficient collection of the revenues.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, it is conceded not only by gentlemen who have discussed this subject here, but I think by gentlemen who are connected with the Internal Revenue Bureau, that the number of collection districts can be reduced thirty-six. It is a well-known fact that the present very efficient head of that Bureau, a gentleman whose capacity as well as integrity admirably fit him for so important a department of the Government, has made the attempt to reduce the number of districts below the present number of one hundred and sixty-six, and for reasons not now necessary to mention he has been compelled to desist. It is believed by others who have examined this subject carefully that the number may be safely reduced to one hundred and five.

I do not think that there is any officer of this Government less likely to magnify his office than the head of this Bureau. He is a very great man for a Bureau office as important as this; great in his experience, great in his intellectual capacity, and great in his high character for integrity—a very strong man indeed for such an office. It is an important office in this Government, and at this time especially one that ought to be presided over by the first order of ability as well as of the highest possible integrity. But still no man could hold an office in this Government or any other without a disposition to magnify somewhat the office itself. It would not be very remarkable, therefore, that the present Commissioner of Internal Revenue should be inclined to insist and feel the number should be rather above than below the actual number required for the efficient discharge of the duties of the Bureau.

The fact, however, Mr. Chairman, cannot be overlooked, and every gentleman looking at the subject from his experience in his own region of country must admit that this internal-revenue system has been greatly simplified.

Our experience of about fourteen years has been a very valuable one. All of the revenues are paid now with stamps, with the single exception perhaps of the slight tax imposed on the banks. They are collected by the sale simply of stamps. Not only that, but so great has been the reduction of the number of things to which the revenue applies that in a given section of the country, in a given State of the Union, there are comparatively small portions which furnish the revenue. I call to mind a district which furnishes $2,000,000 of revenue with six counties, where the revenues are collected in a single county excepting $200,000, and the cost of collecting the revenue in that one county, to the extent of $1,800,000, is only $2,900, while the whole cost of collecting the revenues in the district runs up to $11,000 or $12,000. The additional expense in the absence of consolidation simply results in the collection of $200,000 and the keeping up of the office of collector at a given point. It can readily be seen that consolidation in such a district—and so it is with any number of other districts of a similar character presided over by a single chief acquainted with the persons who are appointed to the various subordinate positions—renders the execution of the revenue laws perfectly safe.

The only reason why it is important to have a considerable number in any one State is that the collector shall have a district not too large for him to supervise, devoting himself to its duties, and not too large but he may be personally acquainted with the qualities, capacity, and integrity of the persons who may be employed subordinate to himself. With the facilities now existing in most of the States of the Union, railroads reaching points at very brief intervals of time, and the general acquaintance of a gentleman traveling over a given region of country, it is rendered almost certain that he will find no difficulty in almost any State of the Union of medium size and population in knowing the character of the men whom he brings into the public service as his subordinates and deputies. I therefore think, in view of these considerations and in view of another important fact of the public vigilance, an important element to be considered in giving aid and assistance to the revenue officers of the Government everywhere, this reduction of force and expenditure is entirely safe.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think, sir, it is not so very important as to the number of collection districts or of collectors that may be required; but, if you reduce the number of collectors, it is manifest, as it seems to me, you must increase the number of deputies, or else in very many districts of the country the revenues will be but partially collected. Now, sir, as a matter of economy, a few years ago the office of assessor of internal revenue was abolished. I think it was an unfortunate day for our country when that was done. It was, perhaps, necessary then that the number of districts should be reduced; but the office of assessor, in my judgment, ought to have been continued in existence, because the one is a check on the other, and checks and balances are necessary in our Government for honest administration of this or any other service.

I doubt very much whether any of the frauds which have so recently startled our country could have been committed if the office of assessor had been continued, because, as between the collectors and assessors, the one would necessarily have been a check upon the other. Now, when we had assessors and assistant assessors, it was the duty of the assistants to assess from month to month all persons who owed the Government a tax, and their lists were then placed in the hands of the collector, and it was his duty to collect the amounts. And I believe sincerely that since the office of assessor was abolished we have lost more revenue in every district almost of this country than would have paid the assistant assessors for their services. I believe that in very many portions of the country there is revenue lost every year that would not be lost if it was the duty of some assistant assessor to look after this.

It is said that the deputy collectors do this duty. Perhaps they do. But you are cutting down, you are reducing the force, and in fact it is becoming in many cases a mere voluntary tax. The people pay it who want to pay it, and those who do not want to pay it get around it in some way or other.

I think if you reduce the number of collectors you will necessarily have to increase the number of deputy collectors, or else the revenue will not be honestly and fairly collected. And I wish to say here, that I am not interested in the appointment of any collector or deputy collector, gauger, or store-keeper, and I do not want to be. But I do want the taxes and revenues of the country to be honestly and fairly collected.

Mr. RANDALL. Now I ask that by unanimous consent the debate on this paragraph be closed.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to reply in a word or two to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.]

Mr. RANDALL. I withdraw my request for the present.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman from Indiana seemed to make a great point of the idea that officers of the Departments are likely to magnify their position. He wanted to give the present incumbent of the office of Commissioner of Internal Revenue a very high character, and yet he said that with all this high character he is likely to magnify the importance of this position. Now, I want to put it to this House whether or not, in their judgment, the gentleman from Indiana is not more likely to magnify the question of reduction than the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is to magnify the importance of his office?

Mr. HURLBUT. A very fair conundrum.

Mr. RANDALL. I now ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph be closed.

There was no objection.

The question being taken on Mr. DUNNELL'S amendment, there were—ayes 56, noes 101.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For salaries, expenses, and fees of store-keepers, agents, surveyors, gaugers, and miscellaneous expenses, $1,450,000; and hereafter no gauger shall receive a greater compensation than $5 per day, and no store-keeper shall receive a greater compensation than $4 per day; and said gaugers and store-keepers, respectively, shall only receive said compensation when rendering actual service. And from and after the 30th day of June next, there shall be no more than one hundred and five collection districts. And the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is hereby authorized and directed to locate the collectors at such central points as in his judgment he may deem best for the interests of the public service. And it shall be the duty of the President, and he is hereby authorized and directed, to reduce the internal-revenue districts to not exceeding the number aforesaid in the manner heretofore provided by law. And sections 3159 and 3160 of the Revised Statutes, and all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of the foregoing paragraphs relating to the internal-revenue service, are hereby repealed. And sections 2649, 2650, and 2651 of the Revised Statutes, and all laws and parts of laws authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint special agents to be employed in the customs service, and classifying them and regulating the duties of said agents, are hereby repealed. And sections 3321 and 3323 of the Revised Statutes, so far as the latter section relates to wholesale liquor-dealers' packages filled on the premises of wholesale liquor dealers, shall, from and after the 30th of June next, be repealed; and packages of distilled spirits filled on the premises of any wholesale liquor dealer shall thereafter be stamped under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe.

Mr. RANDALL. I have an amendment to offer to that paragraph.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Meanwhile I desire to reserve the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. I offer the following amendment:

In line 605 strike out all after the word "districts" down to and including the word "service" in line 608, namely, these words: "And the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is hereby authorized and directed to locate the collectors at such central points as, in his judgment, he may deem best for the interest of the public service.

That clause was put in at the instance of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. Since it was inserted here the House has passed a bill accomplishing the same result, and that bill is now in the Senate and likely to pass.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. It was on that that I desired to reserve the point of order. I desired to call the attention of the chairman to it, not because I objected to the provision, but because I think it has no business in the bill. The provision itself is all right.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no objection to this provision at all. It was put there at the instance of the Commissioner.

Mr. SAMPSON. If I remember correctly, the bill that was passed here left it entirely discretionary with the Commissioner where he should locate these officers. I see by this it is provided that they shall be located at central points. Now, I submit to the House whether this is not an important feature; whether it is not desirable to limit the Commissioner to some extent in the location of these officers.

In my judgment this provision is an improvement upon the bill that has already passed this House. There should be some limitation. The Commissioner should be required to locate those officers in some central part of the district with reference to the business of that district. There ought to be at least that limitation upon the judgment of the Commissioner. He should not have it entirely within his power to select any point he might desire, but should be requ red to consult the convenience of the district, at least to that extent that the office should be located in some central and convenient point of the district. For that reason I hope this provision will not be stricken out.

Mr. RANDALL. The necessity for this provision arose from the difficulty encountered by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue when he came to consolidate two districts; each district was desirous of securing the location of the office, and the collector in the district selected would be retained in the office.

Now, I really believe that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, if the bill which has already passed the House should pass the Senate, will select a central point, notwithstanding those words are not embraced in the bill as it passed the House. But this provision, as I said before, was placed in the bill at the instance of the Commissioner; but the Committee on Appropriations, on reflection, did not wish to trench in any respect on such legislation as rightly belongs to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. SAMPSON. I would ask the gentleman what harm this provision can possibly do?

Mr. RANDALL. I can see no harm in it.

Mr. SAMPSON. I see no necessity for striking it out.

Mr. HOLMAN. This provision is similar to a bill which has already passed the House, but has not passed the Senate. It is a very proper provision, and I hope the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will not insist on his motion to strike it out.

Mr. RANDALL. If I do not make the motion the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] will make the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is too late to make the point of order. It is quite clear that it is a good provision. We have already passed a bill containing substantially the same provision, and if the bill should not happen to pass the Senate it will be very convenient to have this provision here.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I stated that I desired to reserve the point of order. I did not care to press it, because I understood the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations proposed to strike out the provision.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does not the gentleman from Illinois think that it is a proper provision somewhere, in some law?

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Well, I do not think it is in this bill. I think that it should be considered in the House as a subject by itself. It has been so considered in the House. I want also to make the point of order upon that portion of the section from the word "and" in line 616 down to and including the word "repealed" in line 622, as follows:

And sections 2649, 2650, and 2651 of the Revised Statutes, and all laws and parts of laws authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint special agents to be employed in the customs service, and classifying them and regulating the duties of said agents, are hereby repealed.

That provision relates wholly to customs revenue and has no relation to internal revenue, and therefore is not germane to this subject.

Mr. HOLMAN. I submit that the point of order comes very late.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the time to make a point of order is at the close of the reading of the paragraph.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I rose and said that I would reserve the point of order until the gentleman from Pennsylvania had offered his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL.]

The question was taken on Mr. RANDALL'S amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of the paragraph:

The said Commissioner may consolidate the offices of gaugers and store-keepers whenever, in his judgment, it can be done without detriment to the service at such distilleries whose producing capacity does not exceed forty gallons per day.

I offer that amendment in obedience to the recommendation contained in the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and which, as he stated, will cause a saving to the Government of $100,000 a year.

Mr. WHITE. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania by adding thereto the following:

And section 3245 is so amended as to read:

"The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may exempt persons who manufacture spirits by hand-mash copper distilleries having an average daily capacity of less than ten gallons; and distillers of brandy made exclusively from apples, peaches, and grapes, from any provision of this title relating to the manufacture of spirits except as to the tax thereon, when in his judgment it may seem expedient to do so."

Mr. RANDALL. That amendment changes the existing law, but I am willing to waive the point of order for the present. I suggest, however, to the gentleman from Kentucky that he allow the amendment offered by the committee to be adopted.

Mr. WHITE. My amendment is an amendment to the amendment of the committee and is germane.

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point of order that the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky changes the existing law, but I am willing to reserve the point of order so as to allow the gentleman to speak five minutes to it. I do not want to interfere at all with any remarks which the gentleman desires to make.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that there are a great many of these little distilleries that have an average capacity of less than ten gallons, and it is with the same end in view, doubtless, which the chairman of the committee had in view when he proposed to restrict it to the capacity of forty gallons daily, that I offer the amendment. A store-keeper gets, for instance, $4 a day, and these little distilleries will not pay the Government $4 on the amount they distill.

Now, anybody can see the point I am trying to make. It is that we shall save money to the Government on the one side and save annoyance to these little distillers on the other by this amendment. I propose only to insert two lines in the section of the general statute which I propose to amend.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it has been said by persons on the stump, and I have heard it myself, that the law as it now stands was evidently intended by the republican party to oppress these little distillers. There can be no question but what the law as it now stands is in the interest of the large manufacturer of whisky. I do not intend to encourage the manufacture of whisky. I hope I am as far from doing that as any one. But if whisky is to be manufactured, I can see no reason why the man of limited capital should not be allowed the same privileges as the man with large capital. I cannot believe but these distillers are just as honest as the store-keepers who are set to watch them. For that reason I would abolish the store-keepers entirely where the distilleries have an average capacity of less than ten gallons a day, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] proposes in his amendment in regard to distilleries with an average capacity of less than forty gallons a day. The object of each of us is the same.

I would add one other remark, as to how the Government would get the tax in case my amendment should be adopted. Where these little distilleries at the present time make brandy from peaches, apples, and grapes, the tax is collected by the gauger going around and gauging the amount manufactured and stamping the barrel or keg. The same process could be gone through with in regard to the distilleries that would be reached by my amendment. What I propose is to do away altogether with the store-keeper and apply the same law to those who distill from corn and rye as is applied to those who distill from apples, peaches, and grapes.

Mr. RANDALL. I now insist upon my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must overrule the point of order. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] is certainly germane to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL.] The one proposes to consolidate these offices, the other to abolish them.

The amendment to the amendment was not agreed to, upon a division—ayes 28, noes not counted.

The question recurred upon the amendment of Mr. RANDALL.

Mr. RANDALL. I will read a brief clause from the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, which relates to my amendment. It will be found on page 164 of the report of the Secretary of the Treasury at this session of Congress:

> If Congress see fit to confer power upon the Commissioner to consolidate the offices of gauger and store-keeper whenever, in his judgment, it can be done without detriment to the service, this power, in my opinion—

That is, the opinion of Commissioner Pratt—> could be profitably and wisely exercised at such distilleries whose producing capacity does not exceed forty gallons per day. In this way I estimate that at least $100,000 would be saved in expenses.

We have incorporated in this amendment almost the identical words of the Commissioner in this report.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I want to ask the gentleman one question in regard to his amendment. I see that by the paragraph under discussion the compensation of the store-keeper is limited to $4 a day, and of the gauger to $5 a day. Now, in case of the consolidation proposed by the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, would the person in whose interest both of these offices were consolidated draw both salaries, or the larger one or the smaller one?

Mr. RANDALL. That of course would be left to the discretion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. Under existing law he could not draw two salaries.

Mr. O'BRIEN. That is what I want to know.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I do not know that there is any objection to this recommendation of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, any more than there is to several recommendations that he has made and which the Committee of Ways and Means are now considering. For one I think this is a desirable amendment in itself; but as I said in regard to the provision which was stricken out of this bill, this provision should be in a bill relating to the administration of the revenue, concerning which there are many recommendations which will be reported upon in due time.

Mr. RANDALL. We believed it was germane here.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I do not object to it.

Mr. RANDALL. There was no purpose on the part of the Committee on Appropriations to interfere with any of the prerogatives of the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. We are happy to hear the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations say so.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that the last clause of his amendment might very well be omitted. The Secretary of the Treasury expresses the opinion that this consolidation can safely be made where the capacity of the distillery does not exceed forty gallons per day. But the important thing is simply to confer upon the Commissioner the power to consolidate these offices when in his judgment it can be done without detriment to the public service. The other is simply incorporating into this amendment the argument of the Commissioner as to the cases where this consolidation might be properly applied. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue should be given without restriction the power to consolidate these two offices. I therefore suggest that the last clause of this amendment be omitted.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to that. I am quite willing to leave it to the discretion of the Commissioner, for I have no doubt the power will be properly exercised. I will, therefore, modify my amendment by striking out the limitation as to forty gallons per day.

The amendment, as modified, was read, as follows:

> The said Commissioner may consolidate the offices of gauger and store-keeper, whenever in his judgment it can be done without detriment to the service.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is right.

The amendment, as modified, was then agreed to.

Mr. LAPHAM. I move to amend the pending paragraph by striking out the following:

> And sections 2649, 2650, and 2651 of the Revised Statutes, and all laws and parts of laws authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint special agents to be employed in the customs service, and classifying them and regulating the duties of said agents, are hereby repealed.

This provision, abolishing the sections of the Revised Statutes authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint special agents when he deems the public service may require him to do so, is a very radical one. Those sections were incorporated in the Revised Statutes at the last session of Congress, as a part of the permanent laws of the United States. They are permissive merely; they authorize the Secretary of the Treasury, if in his judgment the public service may require it, to appoint special agents. They create no office unless the public necessity demands, temporarily or permanently, the employment of special agents to detect frauds in the revenue. I doubt not that those sections were voted for by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] and the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.] Why, so soon after their enactment, should this absolute repeal of those provisions be proposed, taking away from the Secretary of the Treasury all power to investigate matters of fraud upon the revenue from one end of the country to the other? Why, sir, I would as soon think of taking away from the United States marshal or his deputy, or from a sheriff, the posse comitatus necessary to enable him to execute the laws, as absolutely and forever to deprive the Secretary of the Treasury, as this proposition does, of any power whatever to discover frauds in the collection of the revenues of the Government. I do hope that so sweeping an amendment as this will not receive the sanction of the committee.

Mr. RANDALL. The first of these three sections of the Revised Statutes provides for the appointment of special agents, the second classifies them, and the third makes regulation as to their duties. I do not think it is improper for me to state the fact that the proposed abolition of these offices was originally inserted at the instance of the Secretary of the Treasury himself. Subsequently, however, he thought he ought to have ten of these officers. Now he has fifty-three, I think. I have recently understood, although I am not fully informed, that he now desires twenty; that he would abolish thirty-three.

Mr. LAPHAM. I suggest to the gentleman that if the Secretary needs only twenty, all he has to do is to appoint only that number. The provision is permissive entirely.

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir; that is the very rock upon which the Secretary has stranded. There is the ground of trouble. He does not know whom to turn out. He wishes the law to be directory, fixing an absolute number. When I spoke to him on the subject he thought that he could do without these officers entirely. Since then, in a conference with the committee at his office, he thought that ten ought to be retained. The committee thought that this character of detective service was not required at all; that a large sum of money, amounting in the aggregate to nearly if not more than $200,000, could be saved by the abolition of these offices. This is the large sum which we expect to save by the repeal of these three sections of the Revised Statutes. I hope that the House will confirm the judgment of the committee.

Mr. KASSON. Do I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania to desire to abolish all the agents, or simply to have a reduced number?

Mr. RANDALL. To abolish them all.

Mr. KASSON. The observation that we have had in a former Congress in the course of an investigation by the Committee of Ways and Means as to the misuse as well as the use of these officers left the impression, I think, on the mind of every member of the committee that a limited number of these agents is indispensable to the detection of fraud; and, unless this committee is advised by the present Committee of Ways and Means against it, I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will consent to what I thought was going to be his own suggestion: a limited number for this service of the Department.

Mr. RANDALL. I was merely stating the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury, as distinguished from that of the committee.

Mr. KASSON. And his judgment, I understood, was that there should be ten or twelve of these officers.

Mr. RANDALL. Ten, we understood him; but I have learned since that he wants twenty.

Mr. KASSON. I understood a member of the committee was going to propose that number; and I thought that the gentleman from Pennsylvania as he took his seat indicated a disposition on the part of the committee to allow perhaps a reduced number.

Mr. RANDALL. As one member of the committee, I should not object seriously to ten.

Mr. KASSON. In view of a very long examination which, as the gentleman may remember, was made by the Committee of Ways and Means in the last Congress as to the misuse as well as the use of these agents, I can certainly say for myself that I became very thoroughly satisfied that a limited number of these officers is absolutely indispensable to the detection of frauds under the best system that we can devise. I venture to give the gentleman this assurance, because I understood a motion would be made by a member of the committee to allow a limited number of these officers.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think the committee have authorized any change in the paragraph; but I am willing, so far as I am individually concerned, and I think the committee would be willing to continue not more than ten of these officers.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope, then, the gentleman will allow an amendment of that kind to be offered. To say that the Secretary of the Treasury shall have no special agents, that he shall not be armed with power of law to send an agent to any place where there may be frauds upon the revenue, is, I think, to cripple the Department in a very important branch of the service. I agree with the gentleman, and I have thought for a number of years that this force could be reduced and ought to be reduced. But to take away the law by which the employment of any officers for this kind of work is authorized would, in my judgment, be a serious crippling of the Department.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman must not inveigh against the committee in that respect, because we conformed to the original wish of the Secretary of the Treasury, as we understood it.

Mr. GARFIELD. But I understand that such is not the Secretary's wish; and the committee ought not to stand upon a misunderstanding. If the gentleman will himself offer the amendment in proper shape, I have no doubt it will meet the general concurrence of the House. I request the gentleman to indicate the shape in which he would like to have the amendment offered.

Mr. RANDALL. I am entirely willing, of course, that any gentleman should test the sense of the House on that point, (as he would have the right to do,) without interposing any objection from the committee.

Mr. LAPHAM. I desire to call attention to the language of the statute:

The Secretary of the Treasury may appoint special agents, not exceeding fifty-three in number, for the purpose of examining the accounts of the collectors and for the purpose of detecting frauds.

Now if the Secretary of the Treasury finds that only ten are necessary, it is fair to assume that he will appoint but ten.

Mr. RANDALL. He has fifty-three now in office.

Mr. FOSTER. Read the next three clauses.

Mr. LAPHAM. They simply classify them.

Mr. KASSON. The language is imperative.

Mr. FOSTER. Read it to the House.

Mr. LAPHAM. Section 2650: "The special agents shall be divided into three classes."

Mr. KASSON. "Shall be divided into three classes." Then it goes on to give the number in each class and fix the compensation.

Mr. LAPHAM. It does not make the number of each class imperative. It is enough for me, Mr. Chairman, this bill proposes to take from the Secretary of the Treasury absolutely and forever all power to appoint these agents.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe the gentleman from Pennsylvania did not make any motion.

Mr. RANDALL. I did not.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not very well informed as to the propriety of retaining any number here. The impression made upon the Committee on Appropriations was that these agencies might be dispensed with without any detriment to the public service. If it is desirable to retain any number, certainly ten, in my judgment, will be sufficient. In that event it will simply be desirable to retain section 2649 and add to it, repeating from the next section the following words: "each of whom shall receive a compensation of $8 per day and actual traveling expenses when employed in the duties of such agencies."

The law as it now is provides that the Secretary of the Treasury may appoint special agents, not exceeding fifty-three in number. Then section 2650 provides that the special agents shall be divided into three classes. The first class shall consist of nineteen agents, two of whom shall each receive, in addition to the expense necessarily and actually incurred by him, a compensation of $10 per day; and seventeen of whom shall each receive, in addition to expenses necessarily and actually incurred by him, a compensation of $8 per day.

The second class shall consist of sixteen agents, each of whom shall receive, in addition to expenses necessarily and actually incurred by him, a compensation of $6 per day.

I do not know but the compensation provided for the second class would be more reasonable, and I therefore suggest the section as it now stands be re-enacted with the modification limiting the number to ten, each of whom shall receive the compensation of $6 a day and actual traveling expenses when employed in the duties of such agencies. I trust that will be deemed satisfactory.

Mr. GARFIELD. While I do not agree with the gentleman from Indiana that the number is sufficient, I think that it is better than the proposition in the bill; and, if the gentleman will allow me while up, I will state that before the law which has just been read was passed the Secretary had the power to appoint an almost limitless number of these special agents of the Treasury, limited only by the appropriation he had.

Mr. HOLMAN. The law limits the number of these special agents to fifty-three.

Mr. GARFIELD. I was referring to a period before the law to which the gentleman refers was passed. The law from which he has read in the statutes is one limiting his power, limiting the number of these special agents and classifying them as to the total number and the pay of each class, so that there could be no abuse of the power given to the Secretary. The very law the gentleman has read from was in the direction of limitation and economy.

Now they stand precisely in the same relation to customs duties that the people referred to in the next clause of the bill, in lines 632 to 635, for detecting and bringing to trial persons guilty of violating internal-revenue laws, &c., do to the discovery of the rascals upon the internal revenue. The crooked-whisky developments of the last year have come out of just such a provision in the internal-revenue service as this is in the customs service. If we drop this out altogether, we would take it out of the power of the Secretary of the Treasury to ferret out frauds in the customs service, just as we would take it out of his power to ferret out crooked-whisky frauds. If we drop out the next clause in reference to the internal revenue, he would have no power to send men to follow smuggled goods or anything of that sort.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to modify this provision in the pending bill to read as follows——

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment now pending to strike out.

Mr. HOLMAN. I propose to perfect it before it is stricken out. I move that sections 2649, 2650, and 2651 of the Revised Statutes be modified.

Mr. HILL. I suggest to the gentleman from Indiana to strike out in line 622 the word "repealed," and then say "are hereby modified so that the number of said special agents shall not exceed ten, and the compensation of each shall be $8 a day."

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. O'BRIEN] suggests to strike out the words "are hereby repealed," and insert in lieu thereof, "are so far modified as to authorize the appointment of ten special agents, each of whom shall receive the compensation of $8 a day. I propose to make it $6 per day.

Mr. KASSON. You want to repeal section 2650, which is the only one to be repealed. I phrase it in this way, "that section 2650 of the Revised Statutes is hereby repealed, and the number of special agents authorized by section 2649 is reduced to ten."

Mr. HOLMAN. Sections 2650 and 2651 have both to be repealed.

Mr. KASSON. Only 2650 needs to be repealed.

Mr. LAPHAM. I suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that there would then be no compensation fixed.

Mr. HOLMAN. The amendment I have prepared accomplishes the purpose, the gentleman will see, very fully. I therefore move to strike out the words "are hereby repealed" and insert the following words:

Shall be so modified as to authorize the appointment of ten special agents, each of whom shall receive a compensation of $6 a day and actual traveling expenses when employed in the duties of such agency.

Mr. LAPHAM. If the gentleman from Indiana will drop the last clause of his amendment changing the compensation, and will leave that as provided by the statute and merely limit the number to ten, I will accept his amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. The trouble is that the law provides for compensations varying from $10 to $6.

Mr. HILL. Make it $8.

Mr. HOLMAN. Very well, I shall not object to putting it at $8.

Mr. LAPHAM. I accept that.

Mr. HILL. I would suggest to the gentleman from Indiana to insert the word "only" before the word "ten."

Mr. HOLMAN. Very well. I agree to that.

Mr. FOSTER. I desire simply to state that the Secretary of the Treasury, after careful investigation, thinks twenty is the proper number and the number he should have. I do not propose to trouble the committee by moving an amendment. I simply want to put on record the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. RANDALL. I would further suggest to the gentleman from Indiana that he add the words, in an appropriate place, "when actually employed."

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that is very proper.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as now modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words, in line 622, "are hereby repealed," and insert:

"Shall be so modified as to authorize the appointment of only ten special agents, each of whom shall receive the compensation of $8 per day and actual traveling expenses when actually employed in the duties of such agency."

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to correct a statement I made a moment ago, that the reduced expenses of this would reach $200,000. I have a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury stating it will be $124,000, $76,000 less than I stated.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I want to have the gentleman from Pennsylvania add to his remarks that the amount of fines and forfeitures collected previous to last year has usually been half a million dollars, and the greater part of it was collected through these agents on discoveries made by them.

The question being taken on Mr. HOLMAN'S amendment, there were—ayes 92, noes 14; no quorum voting.

So (no further count being demanded) the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE. I offer the following amendment:

At the end of the sentence in line 616 insert:

And section 3255 is so amended as to read:

"The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may exempt persons who manufacture spirits by hand-mash copper distilleries having an average daily capacity of less than nine gallons, and the distillers of brandy made exclusively from apples, peaches, or grapes, from any provision of this title relating to the manufacture of spirits, except as to the tax thereon, when in his judgment it may seem expedient to do so."

I have changed the amendment which I introduced some minutes ago, at the suggestion of gentlemen on the other side of the House, who agree with me that it is nothing more than just to the small distillers to pass such an amendment. Perhaps I was not clearly understood before.

The law as it now stands requires as to these small distilleries that gaugers shall gauge their spirits and stamp them; but there is an exemption from the provisions relating to the manufacture of spirits except as to the tax thereon, where the distillers make their brandy from peaches, apples, and grapes. Now, I propose to amend that by saying that at the discretion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, these hand-mash distilleries which have a daily capacity of less than nine gallons shall be included in the same category of exceptions. There can be no objection, it seems to me, to this.

It is known to other members on this floor, as well as to myself, that a great number of these hand-mash copper distillers are almost totally destroyed as the law now stands. They are subjected to so many of these new arrangements connected with distilling that the expense is more than their profit amounts to. Consequently these people are debarred altogether from the business. This, I think, is not just.

In addition to this, the violation of the law as it now stands leads to what is known in my section of the country, and I believe in North Carolina and in some parts of Virginia and Tennessee, as moon-shining, that is to say, they go out into the heads of hollows and start a little distillery of their own in violation of law. Now, if this provision becomes a law, these distillers will come down in open daylight and conform to the law. I received intelligence the other day of a case where a family were taken from my district to Saint Louis simply because some one had been making moonshine whisky. The Government makes nothing as the law now stands. If the law was complied with, the distiller would not pay enough tax to half pay the store-keeper. It would be better for the Government to leave it alone than to attempt to get fifty dollars or a hundred dollars a year from it, and at the same time great annoyance to these people would be saved.

Mr. RANDALL. The effect of this amendment would be to put all these whisky-distillers making less than nine gallons per day, which is about twenty-seven hundred gallons per annum, under the provisions of section 3255 of the Revised Statutes, which is as follows:

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may exempt from any provision of this title relating to the manufacture of spirits, except as to the tax thereon, when in his judgment it may seem expedient to do so.

Now it seems to me, in the absence of any suggestion from the Internal Revenue Department or the Secretary of the Treasury, this would be an unsafe and unwise amendment to adopt. I do not know exactly where it would reach; I have not been advised upon that point. I was not aware that this amendment was to be offered, and therefore I have not been able, nor has the committee been able, to consult with the Department of Internal Revenue in relation to it.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will allow me to say that the chief danger in the revision of the internal-revenue laws has been from these small distilleries which are hidden away in some little ravine or some out-of-the-way place, and run in a considerable amount of spirits in that way without its ever being known. The very earliest difficulty that the Internal Revenue Department encountered was from this group of small distilleries and it was deemed best to root them out entirely by law, although it might hurt some in a great many localities. But in England, where these subjects have been carried to the nicety of finding out how to collect the revenue, these small distilleries have been substantially broken down and none but the largest are allowed to remain in operation; in fact it may be said to be true in England that the government runs the business of making spirits so as to control it and get revenue from it. If you allow these small distilleries to come in, you may be sure that they will spring up everywhere in the country and we shall lose the largest part of our revenue in that way.

Mr. FORT. I move pro forma to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I fully understand the object to be attained by this amendment, and therefore I thought that I would discuss it a little myself. It is clear, however, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] who has just spoken is wrong, or else it is the duty of this House to repeal those sections of the Revised Statutes which refer to distilling spirits from fruit. If I understand it, small distilleries are now permitted by the Secretary of the Treasury to be operated without having a store-keeper to keep watch over them, without subjecting the Government to the cost of paying for gauging or for storing whatever spirits they may make.

Mr. PAGE. They have to pay the tax right off.

Mr. FORT. They have to pay the tax, of course. That is not the question. As I understand it, small distilleries may now be operated to make spirits from fruit.

Now, will the gentleman tell us why we should not allow high-wine distilleries to be operated in the same way in making high wines from grain? Is there any reason?

Mr. GARFIELD. Will the gentleman allow me a word?

Mr. FORT. Yes; for I have great respect for the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GARFIELD. It was permitted in the case of fruit distilleries, although it was considered somewhat dangerous, because such a distillery could run only a few weeks during the year, in the fruit season; but if you apply it to high wines, a distillery will run the year round, winter as well as summer.

Mr. RANDALL. In addition to that let me say that no one carries on fruit distilling as a separate business.

Mr. FORT. I hope these interruptions will not come out of my time.

Mr. WHITE. The gentleman will allow me to say that I had not expected that any opposition to my amendment would come from this side of the House; I did expect it from the other side, since they charge this upon us as republican maladministration.

Mr. FORT. I cannot yield further to the gentleman. This is not a political question; unfortunately republicans drink whisky as well as democrats.

Mr. HENDEE. O, no.

Mr. FORT. Now, it is a simple question as to whether we will permit men of small means and capital, poor people, to manufacture high wines when we are permitting men to do so from fruits. I can see no difference.

Gentlemen say that these distillers who manufacture brandy out of fruits only run in the fruit season. The fruit season may be long or short; but that is no reason why such a law as this should be upon the statute-book. Now, if it is proper to allow men of small means to manufacture brandy from fruit without a store-keeper being placed over them and if the revenue is collected on brandy made from grapes, apples, and peaches—which, by the way, run through a very considerable portion of the year—why not collect the tax in the same manner when it is made out of grain, corn, or sod-corn, as we do in Illinois? It can be collected in the one instance as well and correctly as in the other; and as the gentleman from Kentucky well said the law as it now stands effectively prohibits men of small means who have not capital to employ in building and operating large distilleries from engaging in this business. We all know that it takes a great deal of capital to set up a distillery and run it, whether it be in Tennessee, Illinois, or Kentucky. In my judgment, men of small means ought to have a right to enter into this industry and make liquor from corn just as much as those who make it from fruit or anything else, and I see no reason why this amendment should not be adopted in some form or other.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I concur very fully in the views of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. I think it would be most dangerous to adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. WHITE,] for there is a great difference, as I understand it, between the manner of distilling in large distilleries from grain and that of distilling in these little distilleries from fruits.

A great distillery to be carried on with profit must have machinery for grinding, must have the mash and fermenting tubs, for the mash must remain in the tubs for a long period. To carry on a distillery profitably requires a large amount of capital. That is why the small distilleries, of the size that it is proposed by this amendment to permit to carry on the business, cannot compete with the larger distilleries, unless they manufacture some special quality of liquor or in some way avoid the payment of the tax. In the West it is found that the large distilleries in the grain-centers break down the small distilleries under the present law.

It is for the advantage of the revenue, as was said by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] that this business of distilling should be concentrated. It would be odious indeed to make distilling exclusively a monopoly; but it would probably be for the interest of the revenue, and secure the fullest collection of the taxes, if it was confined to perhaps one hundred grain distilleries of the largest capacity. But our system has not proceeded upon the principle of making this a monopoly.

If, however, we encourage the establishment of little distilleries all over the country making ten gallons a day, the Department cannot watch them. It is proposed by this bill to cut down the number of officers to watch those who are engaged in distilling, and also the rectifiers and dealers in spirits, and those engaged in the transportation, sale, or handling of spirits; and at the same time here is a proposition to open all the avenues of fraud. It seems to me that this proposition is worse than that of the committee to reduce so largely the number of the officers.

Mr. FORT. It is left within the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, and none of these small distilleries can be so operated without his consent.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted upon the pending amendment.

Mr. SAYLER. I move to amend by striking out the last word for the purpose of saying, in the interest of the honest men engaged in this business, that I do not know so profitable a source of fraud on them and on the revenues of the country as this proposition made by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. WHITE.] If it should be adopted, in my judgment, the hills and valleys of Kentucky, with the bordering portions of Southern Ohio, will have more "mountain dew" in them than can be found in the Pass of Dunloe, in Ireland, to-day. I certainly hope that all who are in favor of the interests of the revenue will oppose this amendment.

Mr. FORT. I suppose the gentleman, representing as he does the large distilleries of Cincinnati, is not willing that they should compete with the poor people of Kentucky.

Mr. SAYLER. Certainly not.

Mr. WHITE. I doubt not the gentleman from Ohio represents the large distilleries, or some of them at any rate. I have stated here that the large distilleries will fight this proposition. I have no doubt of that. The large distilleries are opposed to the little distilleries. It has always been the principle of the large dealers in everything to try and crush out the small dealers. It is the same way in the manufacture of whisky, the large distillers want to shut off the small distillers entirely. Gentlemen must see that that will work great injustice to men who are not fortunate enough to be possessed of a large amount of this world's goods.

Mr. SAYLER. I withdraw my formal amendment.

The question was then taken on the amendment of Mr. WHITE; and upon a division there were—ayes 31, noes 49.

Mr. WHITE. No quorum has voted.

Mr. HURLBUT. It is not fair to raise that point.

Mr. WHITE. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. RANDALL and Mr. WHITE were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 30, noes 77.

Mr. WHITE. I will not call for a further count.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. I move to amend the pending paragraph by striking out the following:

For salaries, expenses, and fees of store-keepers, agents, surveyors, gaugers, and miscellaneous expenses, $1,450,000; and hereafter no gauger shall receive a greater compensation than $5 per day.

And in place of that I move to insert the following:

For expenses of agents and surveyors, for fees and expenses of gaugers, for salaries of store-keepers, and for miscellaneous expenses, $1,800,000; and hereafter the fees paid to the gauger shall in no case exceed $5 per day.

The amount estimated for this item is $2,300,000, which was the amount appropriated last year; the amount proposed by the Committee on Appropriations in this bill is $1,450,000. I hold in my hand a table prepared at the Department of Internal Revenue, which shows the operations of that Department, so far as this fund is concerned, for the present fiscal year. Up to the 1st of March, 1876, the amount expended on account of this fund was $1,437,000, or at the rate of $1,950,000 a year.

We propose, with the concurrence of the Department, to make a reduction of the supervisors to the amount of $136,000. We propose a reduction of the fees of gaugers to the amount of $60,000, and of store-keepers to the amount of $35,000; also for the gauging, &c., of wholesale establishments to the amount of $100,000. In regard to this latter item—gentlemen on the other side will doubtless refer to it—I know that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in his annual report suggested that a change in the law respecting gauging at wholesale liquor establishments would work a saving of two hundred and odd thousand dollars. He now states that this is an overestimate; that about $100,000 will cover it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this Department has carefully gone over this question. It has submitted the figures which I give to the House. In the view of the Department, the amount necessary to run the Department for next year under this item is $1,800,000.

Gentlemen on the other side of the House have confessed that they know nothing at all about this bill; that they are following the committee. We have the committee on one side and an intelligent Department on the other. But I congratulate myself and the House that finally, on the motion of the gentleman from Philadelphia, the solid phalanx on the democratic side of this House has been broken, and that too on the most monstrous proposition that has been brought before the House during this discussion. Now, gentlemen, you have broken away once from this committee, and I put this question to you, Do you believe that a majority of this committee understand this question any better than the head of this Department, associated as he is with able chiefs who have been there for years?

Mr. RANDALL. Now, Mr. Chairman, I propose to show by the Department's own figures that what we propose to give them is quite adequate. I will take the last fiscal year, ending June 30, 1875. There was expended during that year for the purposes embraced in this paragraph $2,055,641. Now come the deductions by reason of the changes which we have made in this bill. For instance, we have abolished entirely the supervisors, which cost in that year $136,674. The new arrangements for gauging, providing for single gauging of wholesale dealers, will, according to a statement in one part of the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, save $250,000 a year, and according to another estimate of the Commissioner, $200,000. The committee, in arriving at what they thought would probably be the correct figure, struck a middle point and deducted $225,000. As to the gaugers, the committee from the information they obtained estimated that the reduction to $5 a day would effect a saving of $75,000, and that by the reduction of the store-keepers to $4 a day there would be a saving of $60,000. Now, the amendment proposing to carry these stamps through the mails in registered packages will save $54,000. The amount paid during the last fiscal year as attorneys' fees—paid to our own district attorneys—was $16,683. The committee deemed it proper that our own officers should protect the Government against frauds without expecting any compensation beyond their regular salaries and fees. Again, the consolidation of the gaugers and store-keepers, as suggested by the Commissioner, would save, according to his estimate, $100,000. Making these deductions in the aggregate from the amount this branch of the service cost for the year ending June 30, 1875, we reach as the figure necessary to be appropriated now about $1,385,000. But in order not to cut too closely we allow $1,450,000—$65,000 more than we believe to be absolutely essential.

But, sir, we were not content with this estimate. I took occasion to make inquiry of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue as to the amount that had been expended during the first nine months of the current fiscal year. He referred me to the First Comptroller of the Treasury; and I have received from the Acting Comptroller a letter, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, FIRST COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., April 10, 1876.

SIR: The amount expended from the appropriation for salaries, expenses, and fees of supervisors, store-keepers, agents, surveyors, gaugers, and miscellaneous expenses, from July 1, 1875, to March 31, 1876, was $1,248,164.46.

Very respectfully,

WM. HEMPHILL JONES,
Acting Comptroller.

Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
United States House of Representatives.

Mr. RANDALL. Now, if the expenses of the current quarter do not exceed the average of the past three-quarters of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, there will remain from last year's appropriation of $2,300,000 a surplus of $635,780. According to this estimate, it will be observed, the amount that will be expended for the current fiscal year will be $1,664,219. It should be remarked that the present Commissioner of Internal Revenue came into office on the 18th of May, 1875; that during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, he was in office only about six weeks; he has now been in office considerably less than a year. He has, I admit, made various reductions; and I think it quite "a feather in his cap" that he is enabled to show a surplus of $600,000. Deducting that surplus from $2,300,000, we have $1,700,000. Then, making the deductions which I stated as the result of the change of the law, and which in the aggregate amount to $660,000, it appears probable that less than $1,100,000 will be sufficient for the next fiscal year, provided that the same economy now exercised should be continued. But we propose to allow $1,450,000, giving a margin of $350,000. I think it will be admitted that we have certainly shown no disposition to cut down this appropriation too low.

Mr. FOSTER. I move to amend by striking out the last word. It is hardly fair for the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the committee, to submit the statement of the Comptroller of the Currency, without the additional statement——

Mr. RANDALL. You have given that, and therefore it was not necessary for me to give it.

Mr. FOSTER. Without the additional statement that there are due and unpaid bills chargeable to this fund of $200,000, accrued prior to March 31

Mr. RANDALL. I have not had that established to my satisfaction; but, even if it is true, there is still a margin of $150,000.

Mr. FOSTER. I submit, to go with the gentleman's figures, a statement prepared by the Commissioner himself showing that the total amount of expenditures for this year will be in round numbers $1,950,000 instead of $1,400,000 as stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Appropriation for salaries and expenses, supervisors, and subordinate officers, &c., of internal revenue.

Amount expended as shown in accounts adjusted by Comptroller to March 31, 1876		$1,248,164 46
Accounts for services prior to March 31, 1876, not yet adjusted—gaugers for February and March, 1876, estimated	$110,000 00
Supervisors' account, March, estimated	5,000 00
Revenue agents' account, March, estimated	8,000 00
Adams Express Company's accounts for October, November, and December, 1876, appropriated for	17,009 00
Adams Express Company's accounts for January, February, and March, not received, estimated	18,000 00
Surveyors' account, not received, estimated	1,000 00
Miscellaneous accounts not yet filed, attorneys, telegraph, locks, &c., estimated	10,000 00
Payments to store-keepers and gaugers for months prior to March, not yet received or suspended temporarily, estimated	20,000 00
Total probable expenditures for the period from July 1, 1875, to March 31, 1876		1,437,473 46
Or at the rate per annum of		1,916,630 00
Add for contingencies not considered above, say		34,000 00
Probable expenditures for the year		1,950,630 00

Mr. RANDALL. Until I found these figures on yesterday the Department insisted that $1,950,000 was necessary. After I had found these figures in the First Comptroller's Office they now come down to $1,800,000. I am quite certain we have given them an adequate sum.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the committee now rise.

Mr. RANDALL. I should like to finish this revenue branch before the committee rise.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I hope the committee will rise now, as I think we should all like to see these various statements in print.

Mr. RANDALL. If we do not finish this paragraph to-night, but let it go over until to-morrow night, a new debate will spring up, and we cannot tell where it will end. The committee now understands this subject, and I hope we will continue in session until it is disposed of.

Mr. FOSTER. You will not get beaten.

Mr. RANDALL. I am so strong in my facts I think I cannot be beaten if intelligence sways.

Mr. FOSTER'S amendment was rejected.

Mr. FOSTER. I now move the latter clause of that amendment as another amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. Where would it come in?

Mr. FOSTER. After the word "dollars," in line 598.

The Clerk read as follows:

And hereafter the fees paid to gaugers shall in no case exceed $5 per day.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to that.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. FOSTER. I move in line 605 to strike out "105" and insert in lieu thereof "129;" so it will read:

And from and after the 30th day of June next there shall be no more than one hundred and twenty-nine collection districts.

Mr. RANDALL. We have already discussed that sufficiently.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not propose to make a speech.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FOSTER. I move to insert after the word "repealed," in line 616, the words "and section 3152 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended by striking out in the third line the words 'twenty-five,' and inserting in lieu thereof the word 'forty.'"

Mr. RANDALL. I hope that will not be done.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, the present number of special agents is twenty-five. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue in his last annual report asks for fifteen more. He submits to the abolition of the office of supervisor and only asks for fifteen more. That is what this amendment accomplishes.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For detecting and bringing to trial and punishment persons guilty of violating the internal-revenue laws, or conniving in such crime, including payments for information and detection, $60,000.

Mr. HILL. I understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania after the reading of that paragraph would move the committee rise.

Mr. RANDALL. I did not give the gentleman to understand that; but I said I would move the committee rise when we got through with the Revenue Department. This is the only paragraph left. Let me ask whether the gentleman desires to discuss the question?

Mr. HILL. I do.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BLACKBURN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. COX reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, pursuant to the order of the House, had had under consideration the special order, being a bill (H. R. No. 2571) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at ten o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BANNING: The petition of Mason Carter, first lieutenant Fifth United States Infantry, and 9 other officers, for promotion in accordance with section 1204 Revised Statutes of the United States, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, the petition of Richard Vance, first lieutenant Nineteenth United States Infantry, and 3 other officers of the United States Army, for legislation fixing the rule of promotion in the Army, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of Alured Larke, second lieutenant Tenth United States Infantry, and 13 other officers of the United States Army, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, resolutions of the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce, asking that a generous consideration be given to the claims of the Signal Service, and for such appropriations as will secure its increased efficiency and enlarged usefulness, to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. BRIGHT: The petition of W. E. Hoke & Co., for compensation for the value of goods lost by being burned in transit over the Nashville and Decatur Railroad while under control of the military railroad department, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CANNON, of Utah: The petition of citizens of Utah Territory engaged in mining, smelting, milling, merchandizing, and other pursuits, for an appropriation to pay for the arresting, maintaining, subsisting, and guarding prisoners; for summoning jurors and payment of same in civil cases; also for buildings for holding courts, and other incidental expenses; and for the subsistence, clothing, guarding, and care of convicts in the penitentiary, to the Committee on Appropriations.

Also, the petition of Federal officers of Utah Territory, for an appropriation to defray the traveling expenses and to pay the fees of the United States marshal of that Territory and the expense of summoning jurors and witnesses, of keeping and transporting prisoners, and caring for the penitentiary, and the contingent expenses of the courts, to the same committee.

By Mr. CUTLER: The petition of the mayor, aldermen, common council, and 1,500 citizens of Paterson, New Jersey, for such action as will secure the release of E. O'M. Condon, to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. FOSTER: Remonstrance of citizens of Sandusky, Ohio, against the erection of low bridges across the Detroit River, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. HARDENBERGH: The petition of the trustees of Stevens Institute, at Hoboken, New Jersey, for the remission of a certain income or succession tax by them paid to the United States, to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. HENDERSON: The petition of J. L. Finley and 181 others, citizens of Galena, Illinois, for the repeal of the act of January 14, 1875, known as the resumption act, to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. HEWITT, of New York: The petition of Charles F. Chandler, for the extension of a patent used in refining sugar and sirups, to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. HOPKINS: The petition of 171 business men of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, for the regulation of commerce and the prohibition of discriminations by common carriers, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. O'BRIEN: Remonstrance of the Merchants' Mutual Insurance Company and others, against the passage of House bill No. 2685, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. O'NEILL: Remonstrance of the Book Trade Association, of Philadelphia, against the passage of Senator HAMLIN'S third-class mail-matter bill and Mr. MORRISON'S tariff bill, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. PATTERSON: The petition of wholesale liquor dealers and manufacturers of Denver, Colorado, for the definition of the powers and duties of internal-revenue officers and to provide for the collection of the tax on distilled spirits, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. STONE: The petition of citizens of Saint Louis, Missouri, against any change in the present tariff, to the same committee.

By Mr. SWANN: The petition of Peter Kissam Livingstone Cole, for a lien upon the indemnity money due the Japanese government by the United States Government, to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, the petition of W. T. Dixon & Brother, Heiser & Co., and 18 other shoe manufacturers of Baltimore, that the present duty on English lastings and serges may be changed to an ad valorem duty, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Also, the petition of W. T. Dixon & Brother and 14 other shoe-manufacturers, that section 2030 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended by inserting the words "and also boots and shoes" after the words "United States," to the same committee.

By Mr. VAN VORHES: The petition of J. W. Thomas, secretary of Pomeroy Iron Company, and 187 other workingmen, of Meigs County, Ohio, that the tariff laws remain undisturbed for the present, and that when alteration is made counsel be taken of workingmen of the country rather than the enemies of our industries and commerce, to the same committee.

By Mr. WALKER, of Virginia: The petition of workingmen of Henrico County, Virginia, against a reduction of the tariff, to the same committee.

By Mr. WILLIAMS, of New York: The petition of George S. Nicholson, Caleb C. Reynolds, and 76 others, against any change in the tariff, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of George L. Clarke, D. C. Boynton, and 40 others, against any change in the tariff, to the same committee.

By Mr. WILLIAMS, of Delaware: The petition of citizens of Kent County, Delaware, for an appropriation for the improvement of Murderkill River, Delaware, to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, the petition of citizens of New Castle County, Delaware, against any change in the present tariff laws, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, April 12, 1876.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a copy of memoranda furnished General O. O. Howard, commanding the Department of Columbia, by Mr. G. H. Atkinson, taken from verbal statements of Captain J. W. White, revenue-marine service, on Alaska and its resources, and in relation to the colonization of Icelanders in Alaska; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, presented the memorial of Charles Platt, vice-president of the Insurance Company of North America, and others, marine underwriters, owners of claims by reason of which the money paid by Great Britain was awarded by the tribunal of arbitration at Geneva, remonstrating against the passage of House bill No. 2685, reported to the House of Representatives by Mr. LORD from the Judiciary Committee; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. EDMUNDS presented the petition of E. M. Wright and sundry other citizens of the State of Vermont, praying for a repeal of the bankrupt law; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I present the memorial of Alfred Robar and a large number of other citizens of Vermont who were soldiers in the late war of the rebellion and are now on the pension-list, remonstrating against any change of the present system of paying pensions through pension agents near their homes, which I move be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will remind the Senator that like petitions have been referred to the Select Committee to Examine the Several Branches of the Civil Service.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is not the correct reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This was done at the request of the chairman of the Committee on Pensions [Mr. INGALLS] in several instances.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have no objection to letting it take the usual reference, of course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Select Committee on the Civil Service.

Mr. WRIGHT presented the petition of E. C. Burdorf, of New York, late private in the Thirty-fifth New Jersey Regiment, who enlisted as a substitute in that regiment, praying that he may be allowed a bounty; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, presented the memorial of Marcus T. Colton & Son, and other envelope manufacturers, printers, stationers, and lithographers, remonstrating against the manufacture and sale of stamped envelopes and the printing of address cards on the same by the Government without any charge therefor; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. MCMILLAN presented the petition of George W. Carpenter and others who served in the late war, praying for the passage of an act equalizing the bounties of all persons who served honorably in the military and naval service of the United States during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WHITE presented a memorial of the Merchants' Mutual Insurance Company and the Maryland Insurance and Security Company of Baltimore and other marine underwriters of Baltimore, remonstrating against the passage of House bill No. 2685, relating to the distribution of the proceeds of the Geneva award; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, presented a petition of citizens of Portland, Maine, booksellers and stationers, praying the discontinuance by the Government of the manufacture and sale of stamped envelopes, newspaper wrappers, and postal cards; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. HITCHCOCK presented the petition of William N. Tibbets and others, citizens of Sage County, Nebraska, living near the Otoe and Missouri Indian reservation, praying for the speedy passage of the bill authorizing the sale of that reservation; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also presented the petition of Le Roy H. Berryman, of Washington, District of Columbia, praying for the passage of an act authorizing the District commissioners to issue a duplicate of a certificate of corporation stock of the city of Washington, which certificate was destroyed, and the acceptance of the petitioner as bondsman for John Newton Berryman, who is now insane; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BURNSIDE presented the petition of James Flanagan, late private in Company I, Fourth United States Artillery, praying for an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the petition of Charles W. Ingalls, Milton Sawyer, and 22 others, of Little Traverse, Michigan, praying Congress to pass a law to facilitate the issue of patents for homesteads to disabled soldiers; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislature of Wisconsin, in favor of an appropriation by Congress for the completion of the improvement of the Wisconsin and Fox Rivers; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the petition of D. Appleton & Co. and 22 publishing firms of different cities of the United States, praying for the passage of a law making a uniform charge on all printed matter of third class at a postage not exceeding one cent for each two ounces or fraction thereof, regardless of distance; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CLAYTON presented the petition of Elizabeth M. Kershon, widow of John S. Fillmore, late of Denver, Colorado, praying that the title to certain lands situate in Denver City, Colorado, may be relinquished by the United States to her and the other heirs of Fillmore; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

TREASURY BUILDING.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to report back the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury in relation to the cost of the land required for the completion of the east front of the Treasury building, and ask to be discharged from its further consideration. I will merely say that by the examination of the committee we find a rather curious state of facts. The land itself on that street is assessed at a value of $379,369.64, but the estimated value of it is $1,039,674. By the estimate of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury it would cost to obtain the whole of the grounds, including what would be wanted by the United States in the different lots, $939,272. If we only took what we require for the extension it would cost $100,000 more, or $1,039,674.80.

Under these circumstances, the committee does not recommend immediate action, although the extension of the east front of the Treasury building has been recommended for a long series of years. It was first mentioned by Isaiah Rogers, Supervising Architect of the Treasury, in his report for 1863. He there suggests five changes for the Treasury building and ground about it, the fourth for reconstructing the east of Fifteenth-street front on the same plan as the other portions of the building. In his next report, for 1864, the matter is again urged. In the report of the Supervising Architect (A. B. Mullett) for 1867 this change is considered at considerable length and very strongly recommended. The purchase of a strip of land on the east side of Fifteenth street of sixty-one feet deep is proposed. In each succeeding report of this architect up to and including that of 1874 this same measure continues to be most earnestly recommended, and for the following reasons:

First. It was the original design when the extensions were made upon the north and west that the east front should be extended under similar plans.

Second. The present front is of sandstone and is rapidly disintegrating. The rebuilding of it will soon be a matter of necessity.

Third. Considering the nearness of the buildings on the opposite side of the street and the fact that there is woodwork about the windows and in the rooms of the east front, it cannot be considered fire-proof.

Fourth. The Treasury building is very greatly crowded, scarcely accommodates half the force that belongs to the Department. The extension would nearly double its capacity.

Fifth. Every year it increases the cost of the land to be purchased on Fifteenth street.

Sixth. Up to the year 1870 $6,700,000 had been spent upon the Treasury building, and it is too late to pretend to economize by leaving what might be the grandest departmental building in the world mutilated and unfinished.

Seventh. By purchasing land on Fifteenth street and lowering the grade of that street and of the Avenue on the north, the building would no longer be marred by its present location below the level of the streets about it.

But the committee have reached the conclusion that we are too poor to buy this land at the present time, and that although a vastly increased amount will be required at some early future day for the extension, yet that we may be better able then to bear the increased expense than to ask for any appropriation for the addition to the site that would now be required, although it is obvious that it might be obtained for very much less before the new buildings shall be erected that are now in the process of going up.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not wish the statements of the Senator from Vermont to go out at least without a caveat. Plans have been drawn that would complete the eastern front of the Treasury building according to the other fronts of the Treasury building, without widening the street at all and without making it necessary to appropriate a million of dollars or any sum whatever to carry out the plan. It can be done in either one of two ways: First, by extending the east front over the walk and covering the walk with arcades. That would give sufficient and ample extension to complete the plan according to the northern and southern fronts. Or, on the other hand, there is width of street enough on that part of Fifteenth street to allow a walk outside of the extended front of the Treasury building and still leave more space in that street for carriage-way than is indispensably necessary.

I have always thought that the idea of my friend from Vermont to buy a million dollars' worth of land to complete the plan of the Treasury building was rather an extravagant one to indulge in with regard to a public building. I say to him that plans have been prepared by which the east front of the Treasury building can be made to conform exactly to the north and south fronts, with a proper projection. One plan is by making the projection in the nature of an arcade, of which there are innumerable examples in Paris, and very beautiful examples, where the walk is under the projection or arcade. The Rue de Rivoli, the most beautiful street in Paris, is a series of arcades. The Treasury building could extend over the whole walk along Fifteenth street, with full proportions; or, on the other hand, there is sufficient room to swing a footway around the building on the south of the extension and leave plenty of room for a carriage-way and all other roadway. Therefore I hope that the Senator's statement, that we shall at some future time have to spend not only a million dollars but buy all the new buildings that are to be erected, will not be taken unless at least with some allowance.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I have proposed no expenditure of a million dollars nor of any other sum. I do not know that it would cost anything like the sum mentioned to obtain the land that we require. I only gave the assessed value of all the lots here showing that the whole value of the lots were assessed at only about $379,000, and according to law they are assessed by men under oath to put them down real estate at its cash value; but upon inquiry of the parties we find that they ask a higher sum. I have no very magnificent ideas in relation to public buildings and grounds. I wish to maintain of course what we have got. I have not certainly endeavored to bring here any Parisian fashions to inaugurate arcades, covered ways, for foot-travelers. I am a little at a loss to perceive how my friend from Ohio could manage to introduce steps sixty-one feet broad into a street without occupying any portion of the street. The sidewalk is only fifteen feet wide, and it seems to me that we should interfere with that if we had the same extent of frontage for the steps. It would require fully as much, if not a little more, for the ground on the eastern front is lower than that on the western side; so that the steps for the approach would require at least an equal distance to that taken on the other side.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know as a matter of course that steps cannot be introduced on the south front of the Treasury building. In my judgment and in the opinion of good architects, steps really are a detriment, not only to the appearance, but to the form and full plan of the architecture. We have an example of it in the Interior Department. The west front of the Interior Department is a more beautiful front by far than the south front or the east front.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Simply because the architecture has been destroyed by sinking the street. I agree with the Senator that the south front of the Interior Department has been utterly ruined by the mismanagement in that respect.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me complete my sentence. The idea of having a series of steps to approach columns has been abandoned, and is not really a part of the architecture from which they are taken. We have an example of the truth of this in our front here. The west front of the Senate Chamber is plain; it shows a whole story below the columns. In the same way the Treasury building might be extended in the form of an arcade over the width of the walk, showing a complete full story, including the projected portico, and making an arcade of that projection, without any more ground being required than we have now. The failure to put in steps there would be an actual improvement of the front, especially if the Treasury building should be extended by a series of arcades over the walk. You have ample width for the projection necessary to complete the style of arcade, omitting the steps, and the front then would be more beautiful than the present south front of the Treasury building.

I did not intend, however, to enter into the question of architecture, but simply desired to say that, in my judgment, it is unnecessary to expend a million of dollars or any sum of money to carry out the proper extension or improvement of the Treasury building whenever we are ready to do it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I have no doubt the suggestion of an arcade is valuable, so far as this, that it might provide for the sidewalk to go under an arcade; but if there is to be an approach and an entrance on the east side, steps will be indispensable. If you abandon the idea of having any entrance upon the east side, of course you can abandon the steps; otherwise you have to take and use the same amount of space there is on the west side. I do not suppose that anybody expects there will be the same amount of land appropriated and used that there has been on the south side; but there ought to be the same amount that there is on the west front. The committee ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the communication.

The report was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SARGENT, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 173) to provide for the appointment of Frederick F. Baury on the retired list of the Navy; the bill (S. No. 426) for the relief of Elias D. Bruner; the bill (S. No. 112) authorizing the President to nominate Henry S. Wetmore, a lieutenant in the Navy, upon the retired list, submitted adverse reports thereon; which were ordered to be printed, and the bills were postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of William F. Pratt, late acting master United States Navy, praying to be placed on the retired list of the Navy, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Turner Merritt, praying compensation for one hundred and thirteen bales of cotton taken by order of General Banks for the use of the United States Army, for the construction of fortifications at Port Hudson, Mississippi, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PADDOCK. The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the petition of Albert Towle, postmaster at Beatrice, Nebraska, praying to be relieved from all responsibility on account of the robbery of postage-stamps at the post-office at that place, have instructed me to report a bill for his relief, and to submit a written report. I will state that the claim was a complex claim. There were stolen not only postage-stamps, but revenue-stamps. So much of the claim as relates to the loss of revenue-stamps has been referred to the Committee on Finance, and I ask that, when the part of the claim passed upon by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads has been disposed of, the papers in the case may be referred to the Committee on Finance, in connection with the other papers.

The bill (S. No. 727) for the relief of Albert Towle, postmaster of Beatrice, Nebraska, was read and passed to the second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. WHYTE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred a resolution of the Senate in regard to allowing artists to exhibit examples of their statues which are now in the National Statuary Hall at the centennial exhibition, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2452) to extend the time to pre-emptors on the public lands, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Frances E. Stewart, administratrix of the estate of Michael S. Stewart, of Tennessee, praying compensation for wood cut under contract for the Government, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CRAGIN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Martha J. Coston, praying an appropriation for the amount justly due on the manufacture by her of the Coston signal-lights for the use of the Navy Department, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 728) for the relief of Martha J. Coston.

The bill was read and passed to the second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Susan Ten Eyck Williamson, widow of the late Captain Charles L. Williamson, United States Navy, praying to be allowed arrears of pension, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Pensions; which was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 79) to amend section 10 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1875, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported a bill (S. No. 729) authorizing the issue of patents to the purchasers of certain Miama lands in Kansas; which was read and passed to the second reading.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2018) to authorize the Exchange National Bank of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, to improve certain real estate, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I ask the Senate to discharge the Committee on Claims from the consideration of a bill introduced by me yesterday, being the bill (S. No. 711) for the relief of the sureties of Samuel Chisholm, late postmaster at Newton, Massachusetts, and have it referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. I understand that is the practice of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SPENCER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 730) to prevent panics and give elasticity to the legal-tender currency without impairing its value, by limiting its amount, together with national-bank notes and gold and silver coin in circulation according to population, and to make legal-tender notes equal in value to United States Government bonds with the consent and by the action of their owners, and to authorize the issue of legal-tender notes and the retirement of the same under certain circumstances and on certain conditions; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 731) to limit and fix the Signal Service; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. OGLESBY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 732) to dispose of the lands formerly covered by the waters of Pistakee Lake, in the State of Illinois; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES, of Florida, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 733) donating a parcel of land in the city of Saint Augustine, Florida, known as the Powder-house lot, to the corportion of said city for public uses; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WINDOM asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 734) for the relief of William Jasper Cordill; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORTON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. No. 15) authorizing the qualified voters of the District of Columbia to vote upon the question whether they desire Congress to establish a government for the District for the regulation of its domestic affairs the officers of which shall be chosen by the qualified voters of the District, and for laying the result of the election before Congress for its confirmation; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

On motion of Mr. HAMILTON, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Lieutenant-Colonel Lewis Downing, Captain James McDaniel, and Chaplain Evan Jones be taken from the files of the Senate and delivered to the representatives of the parties.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the first case on the Calendar.

DISTRIBUTION OF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

The first bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 563) to provide for the sale of extra copies of public documents and for the distribution of the regular official editions thereof; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. President, this bill is virtually a codification of existing laws regulating the printing and distribution of public documents, and also of certain customs of the Senate concerning the distribution of some of these documents, the original authority for which cannot be found. Anterior to the passage of the resolution of March 3, 1819, the printing and distribution of the Senate's public documents was made under the discretionary power of its Secretary, and that resolution, while it fixed the numbers to be printed, left the distribution of the same discretionary in the absence of any special order. The mode of distribution, however, was assimilated as nearly as possible to the order of the House of Representatives of March 25, 1818, for the distribution of the documents printed for that House, and since that time this precedent has been made the basis of a system of distribution alike irregular, capricious, and expensive.

In 1818 six hundred copies of all executive documents, congressional reports, bills, resolutions, &c., were printed. Now, that number has been gradually increased to nineteen hundred copies of the documents and reports, and nine hundred and twenty-five copies of the bills and resolutions. The cost of printing these bills and resolutions for the last Congress, the Forty-third, was $39,128.94, and there are good reasons for believing that for the present Congress the cost will exceed $50,000.

These expensive publications have been lavishly and capriciously scattered, without any principle of distribution. In the Treasury Department, for example, the First Comptroller has had two sets of all public documents, while the Second Comptroller has had four, the Commissioner of Customs has had three, the Light-House Board has had two, and so on. While some of the documents published by Congress are of great use in conducting the business of the Bureaus to which they relate, the greater portion are of no possible value, and those which are unbound are ultimately sold as waste paper.

For instance, the Light-House Board has two copies of every bill and resolution introduced in Congress. The Light-House Board probably should have a dozen copies of those that relate to the Light-House Board, but they require none whatever of the others; and so of the other Bureaus of the Government. Each Bureau should have a considerable number, doubtless, of copies of those bills, resolutions, and documents that relate to that Bureau, but it wants none others. It is no use to send documents relating to the light-houses to the Commissioner of the General Land Office or of Indian Affairs, or to send those that relate to Indian affairs to the Light-House Board, and yet under this distribution the Light-House Board has two copies of all documents.

This bill, which was prepared after consultation with the heads of the Executive Departments, gives to each Department a specified number of documents, bills, &c., for distribution among the Bureaus to be directly benefited. Instead of sending documents to the First Comptroller and Second Comptroller and to the Commissioner of Customs, &c., the documents are to be sent in bulk to the Secretary of the Treasury, and he is to distribute them among the different Bureaus, as the Prayer Book says, "according to their several necessities."

Another feature of this lavish distribution was the supplying of documents, reports, &c., to foreign legations existing or which had existed here. In 1818 nine legations were thus supplied. But when the Senate's Committee on Printing began the investigation of this distribution, in 1874, it was ascertained that upward of thirty sets were sent by different officials. Some legations thus received six sets, others but one. A regular supply was sent to the legation of Sardinia, which country had some years previously become a part of the kingdom of Italy; another set was sent to the legation of Bremen, which no longer existed; another to the legation of Uruguay, or the Cisplatina republic, which had also ceased to exist; and another was regularly sent to the legation of Switzerland, which never had existed, as Switzerland has never had a diplomatic representative here, a consul-general having looked after the interests of her citizens among us.

This bill provides for the supply of thirty sets of public documents to the Department of State, of which five sets are to be for the use of the Department and twenty-five sets for transmission to United States legations and consulates abroad and to the foreign legations in this city.

In fixing the quotas of the Departments, provision has been made, without increasing the numbers printed, by the proper curtailment of the previous distribution, for furnishing sets of the public documents to the Chief Justice and associate justices of the Supreme Court, the Military Academy at West Point, the Naval Academy at Annapolis, the Mint and its branches, and the Naval Observatory.

Provision is also made for supplying the Library of Congress, the libraries of the Senate and of the House, and the State and territorial libraries, and one set is to be furnished to such incorporated college, public library, athenæum, literary and scientific institution, board of trade, or public association as may be designated by each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress to receive them, provided that the institution so furnished shall pay the cost of transportation.

Another feature of the bill is the distribution of the reserved sets (as they are called) of the public documents for the immediate use of Congress. Heretofore they have been sent to the committee-rooms, and where six sets were thus distributed in 1818 among the committees of the Senate, there are now seventeen sets. These sets are scattered over this wing of the Capitol in as many committee-rooms generally, without arrangement or order and with insufficient accommodations to receive them. This bill provides that instead of this distribution of seventeen sets to the committee-rooms, ten sets be deposited in the library of the Senate. There they will be stamped, catalogued, arranged, and always accessible for the use of any Senator or any committee. In some committee-rooms certain series of documents will be permanently kept for reference, but they will be looked after by the Librarian of the Senate and kept perfect.

Of course, in the Committee on Naval Affairs we require all the documents that relate to naval affairs; but we do not care about documents that relate to public lands or to Indians. In the Committee on Printing we want the documents that refer to that particular branch of the service, which is in some measure committed to our charge, but we do not desire the documents that appertain to all the other departments of the public service. If these documents be kept in the library, where they are accessible to all the committees, they will be taken out and used as they are wanted, and there is an officer charged with reclaiming them and preserving them for future use. Complete sets of the Journals of the Senate and House of Representatives and of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I think, should be in every committee-room.

The bill practically repeals the laws which require the publication of certain documents of course, for popular distribution. There are 25,000 copies of the abridgment of the President's message and accompanying documents, copies of the report on commerce and navigation, and of other documents that the law requires to be printed for the use of the Senate; that is, for popular distribution. We have repealed this requirement twice in the Senate, but our action has not met with the favor which I hope it will this time in the other House. Instead of that, we have provided for the publication of certain numbers of these documents, such number as upon consultation with the heads of the Departments and of the Bureaus are thought to be necessary for executive purposes, not for congressional purposes, leaving it of course in the power of Congress by concurrent resolution to print such number of other documents or of these documents as the two Houses may see fit.

It is provided now by law that any document may be sold by the Congressional Printer, but under the existing law it is necessary for money to be deposited in advance of the publication of the document. That is of course inconvenient, and the cost cannot be correctly estimated in all cases, and so very little distribution of public documents has been made in that way. The proposed law provides that as to every public document the Joint Committee on Printing shall decide whether it shall be stereotyped or not, and then shall decide what number, if any, the Congressional Printer shall print for sale at cost. The documents of every other great government can be bought at some designated place. There is no mode of obtaining ours now except by applying to a member of Congress or by depositing the money in advance of the publication of the document; and where a man wants a single document that is an inconvenient mode. There are, however, some persons who make a deposit with the Congressional Printer and receive all the public documents.

If any Senator desires any information about the bill that I can supply, I shall be happy to give it.

Mr. DAVIS. I would ask the Senator whether this bill increases or diminishes the number now ordered by law to be printed, either for the Departments or for the use of either House of Congress?

Mr. ANTHONY. The number is about the same. The number would have been decreased, but that the increase of the membership of the other House requires a larger number than we had before, and that and the distribution to the Chief Justice and the associate justices of the Supreme Court about take up the amount that has been saved in other quarters. So the number of documents published will be about the same, but the distribution will be to a larger number of persons, and I think the Senate will be convinced that we provide a much more judicious distribution, carrying the documents more immediately to those who require them for use in the public service, and taking them away from those to whom they are entirely useless.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. May I inquire of the Senator from Rhode Island whether this bill proposes any means by which public documents can be obtained at cost by the public?

Mr. ANTHONY. It does. It provides that the Joint Committee on Printing shall instruct the Congressional Printer what number of every document, if any, shall be printed for sale at cost.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. May I then ask further whether it provides that members of the Senate and House of Representatives may obtain copies of such of their speeches as appear in the RECORD on the same terms or at cost?

Mr. ANTHONY. That is provided now. Members of Congress obtain their speeches reprinted from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at cost. I believe 10 per cent. is added generally. This bill does not propose any addition, but barely the cost. I do not suppose that the Government wants to make money out of the sale of public documents, and as we have been in the habit of giving them away, it seems that if people will pay what they cost us it will be a sufficient economy without putting on any profit. So the bill does not provide, as the present law does, that there shall be 10 per cent. added to the cost, but makes the sale at cost. I think the speeches are printed at cost now; they are printed under a provision put into an appropriation bill last year at cost.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is one point that ought to be provided for in this bill. The present law requires the cost of all documents, even when ordered by a member of Congress, to be prepaid.

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is not possible to carry that into literal execution in the ordinary course of business. When I order a document, not knowing the amount of its cost and perhaps the Printer not knowing the exact cost, I am not able to prepay for it; and therefore the Printer is liable every day and he does every day violate the law. He may be called to account for a violation of the law simply because he is not allowed the ordinary discretion that everybody should have who sells a book. Senators here every day order documents, their speeches for example; as a matter of course we subscribe our names for copies, and we think our names are good; and yet if the Public Printer furnishes those documents according to our order he violates the law. The law ought not to be so framed as to compel him to violate the law and to compel us to be participants in that violation.

Mr. ANTHONY. My attention has been called to that by the Congressional Printer, who has received notice in another quarter, that if when a member of Congress sends for a document, for a report of the General Land Office, or if when he orders any speech, and does not pay the money in advance, the Congressional Printer supplies it, and sends the bill next day, as we all know he does with commendable promptness, he violates the law, and is subject to the penalty of embezzlement, and felony, and murder for aught I know. If he is to blame for it, I wish to assume my share of the responsibility; for I told him that I thought if he assumed the responsibility of printing speeches for members of Congress, and in case the cost was not paid in advance paid it himself, or theoretically deposited the money himself, there could be no complaint of that technical violation, if it be a technical violation, of the law; and I think there is a little doubt about that. I spoke to several Senators, who agreed with me.

Mr. BAYARD. May I ask the Senator from Rhode Island if this was not under the same act of Congress by which we order extra copies of what appears in the RECORD? We were first told that we must pay in advance, though we do not know the precise amount that may be required. That we tried for a few weeks, and it was awkward; and I think the Senator from Rhode Island stated—I know he did to me and to other Senators here—that he thought it could be arranged if the Printer would take the responsibility of trusting members of Congress for the payment to him of the actual cost after it had been ascertained and after the copies of the speeches had been delivered. Therefore, for the convenience of the entire Senate and with the approval of the entire Senate I think, that construction was practically adopted, and we did order what speeches we required or any number of copies of the RECORD that we required, and after we received them, after the lapse possibly of a week or ten days, the bill was sent to us and it was paid.

Now, what harm can come or what defalcation there exists in an officer charging himself with the actual cost and being responsible for the actual cost and sending in his account according to the actual cost, instead of receiving the money in advance, I am unable to perceive. There is not a loss of a farthing to the Government. It is simply a question of convenience in dealing. I mean dealing with the Government Printing Office as we should deal with a bookseller. In the one case, we might send an order to a bookseller for books and pay him at the end of a week. That would be perfectly satisfactory to him and convenient to us. If, on the contrary, he would deliver nothing until it was paid for in advance, it might oftentimes be found inconvenient.

That has been the history of this construction of the act; and if the letter of the law be so rigid and is to be so inflexible, then it seems to me we had better alter it to the extent of permitting members of Congress to be charged with the printing ordered by them and have the amount taken out of their pay unless they are willing to settle their bills, as they ordinarily do.

Mr. ANTHONY. I recollect that I spoke to the Senator from Delaware and to several Senators on both sides of the Chamber, and to members of the Committee of Printing, and we all thought, as the Senator from Delaware did, that Senators might be trusted with four or six dollars apiece for the publication of a speech, and I am happy to say for the honor of Congress that the Congressional Printer told me yesterday that there had never been a failure on the part of a member of either House to pay for speeches on presentation of the bill. But if it is a technical violation of the law, (and I am not sure but that it is,) it is better to amend the law doubtless.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments reported by the Committee on Printing will be read.

The first amendment reported by the committee was in section 13, line 2, before the word "print" to insert "stereotype;" so as to read:

That it shall be the duty of the Congressional Printer to stereotype, print, and bind 10,000 copies of the annual report of the regents of the Smithsonian Institution, for distribution by the Smithsonian Institution.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is one feature in regard to our public printing that my attention has been called to and, by what I see in the public prints of what has been going on in the other wing of the Capitol—I do not refer to anything that has occurred, but to what I have seen in the papers—that ought to be corrected. It is unusual for an officer charged with the execution of duties like the Public Printer to have anything to do with the disbursement of public money or to pass on accounts. It is manifest that the Public Printer must be seriously embarrassed in the duties imposed upon him by the law in receiving money from members of Congress and from every citizen of the United States who wants to buy a document, fixing the price himself and making up his accounts. I perceive that that officer, who is an officer of the Senate and whom we are bound to see has fair play, is involved in a controversy or difficulty growing out of a duty that was imposed upon him by law which ought never to be imposed upon an officer performing such duties as his.

This bill or some other bill ought to provide for some paymaster, or for some authorized agent of the Treasury Department, to pay all money and to receive all money, so that the proper accounts may go through the ordinary formula of investigation by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department and money paid into and paid out of the Treasury like any other money. I would not hold the office of Public Printer with the responsibility attached to it by law for any consideration whatever, because the accidental omission to charge himself with ten cents or fifty cents for a public document would involve him in a charge of embezzlement. He may be ever so innocent and yet suspicion would be attached to him, and he could not overcome it. An officer charged with the important duties of Public Printer and having to expend, I think, two millions of public money in the course of a year; who makes contracts and buys paper; who hires I do not know how many employés——

Mr. ANTHONY. A thousand.

Mr. SHERMAN. An officer who has all the multifarious duties imposed on him by law that are devolved on the Public Printer ought not to be charged with the payment or receipt of money. That is clear. Suppose that county commissioners, to take the instance of one of our smallest municipal corporations, were to act not only as county commissioners, but direct how all the work should be done and act as auditor in estimating the accounts and as treasurer to collect the money—what would be thought of the proposition? To combine all these offices in one man would be faulty legislation. This matter ought to be corrected by us. In every railroad company, in every city corporation, in every branch of the Government, there is a division of responsibility. There is one man who directs the employés and superintends operations; another who audits accounts, and still another who collects money and pays it out.

It is perfectly manifest that the legislation about the public printing is faulty, and it ought to be corrected, and I do not know why it cannot be done on this bill. I merely call attention to the fact that the present law in regard to the public printing is imperfect, and that it ought to be revised, and that under it there can be no safety, no guards, no security that an honest man may not be disgraced, and that a dishonest man may not be corrupt.

Mr. ANTHONY. I agree fully with what the Senator from Ohio has said. If he has prepared any amendment of that kind, I shall not resist it; but it requires great care, and I suppose consultation with the accounting officers of the Treasury, to prepare such a measure as he suggests. As this bill is for a particular purpose, confined to a particular purpose, I think we had better pass it now; and I shall be very happy to co-operate with the Senator from Ohio in the passage of such a law as he intimates; but unless he has the amendment prepared now, it will be manifestly impossible to prepare it at our desks. It requires very careful consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the amendments of the Committee on Printing will be continued.

The next amendment reported by the committee was in section 13 after the word "Institution" to insert:

And that the Congressional Printer shall furnish at any time at the expense of the Institution, from the stereotype-plates, such number as may be required of separate parts of the said reports.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 13, line 9, to strike out "four" and insert "five;" so as to read:

That the aggregate number of pages of said report shall not exceed five hundred, and that there shall be no illustrations except those furnished by the Smithsonian Institution.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. Somewhere in the bill the Commissioner of the General Land Office is styled the "Commissioner of Public Lands." The Clerk can find the place. It is a verbal error that can be corrected. I have found the place. In section 11, line 6, the words "Commissioner of Public Lands" should be "Commissioner of the General Land Office."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That correction will be made by unanimous consent.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to ask the Senator from Rhode Island one question. I understand this bill does not affect the distribution of the RECORD or anything that may be published in it as provided by law at this time.

Mr. ANTHONY. It does not apply to the RECORD.

Mr. COCKRELL. How does it affect the Agricultural Department?

Mr. ANTHONY. It does not apply to that. The report of the Agricultural Department goes free through the mail now, and such numbers are printed as Congress may order from time to time. The bill originally contained a provision for the publication of the Agricultural Report for the use of the Commissioner, but that was stricken out when the bill was before the Senate at the last session. There was a long debate on the number that should be printed of the Agricultural Report. An attempt was made to amend the bill by making a popular distribution of the Agricultural Report. This bill does not provide for any popular distribution at all. It was left out. So that rests as it is now.

The bill was passed.

REPAVEMENT OF PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE.

Mr. WEST submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (S. No. 680) authorizing the repavement of Pennsylvania avenue; which was ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 2689) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Sioux City, Iowa;

A bill (H. R. No. 2479) granting an American register to the Canadian steam ferry-boat Geneva, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 2403) to extend to the port of La Crosse, in the State of Wisconsin, the privileges of sections 2990 to 2997, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2799) to amend certain sections of titles 48 and 52 of the Revised Statutes of the United States concerning commerce and navigation and the regulation of steam-vessels.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 279) to establish a land office in the southern part of Utah Territory, to be known as the Beaver district, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2450) to provide for a deficiency in the Printing and Engraving Bureau of the Treasury Department and for the issue of silver coin of the United States in place of fractional currency.

POSTAGE ON THIRD-CLASS MATTER.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 650) fixing the rate of postage on third-class mail matter, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. HARVEY.]

Mr. SHERMAN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the substitute be reported. I should like to know what it is.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, and in lieu of the words stricken out to insert:

That all mailable matter of the third class, referred to in sections 3878 and 3911 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, may weigh not exceeding four pounds for each package thereof; and postage shall be charged thereon at the rate of one cent for each two ounces or fraction thereof; that all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed; but nothing herein contained shall be held to change or amend section 3879 of said Revised Statutes.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads whether this does not restore virtually the old law as it stood previous to the act of last year, and whether it is not intended, therefore, to supersede any amendment that has been or may be proposed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads?

Mr. SARGENT. The substitute has a very decided advantage over the report of the committee in that it proposes but one rate of postage, without regard to distance in the United States. In the infancy of postal communication we had various rates, differing according to distances, upon letters and all other matter sent through the mail. I remember distinctly myself in old times when we paid some three or four times as much to get a letter in San Francisco as would be paid for one in Chicago. The system was found burdensome in many respects; and the difficulty a correspondent had in ascertaining the distance of the point to which he wished to send his letter, unless it was very much over the limit, was a great inconvenience. In the progress of postal business it was discovered that this feature was a great inconvenience and it has been discarded. No reasons are given why it should be restored; why this feature, burdensome and troublesome, should be again put in the law, and with reference to third-class matter, while it is not applied to first and second class matter. I, for one, think that there are good reasons why we should not recur to the exploded system.

If it is said that we can carry matter at a profit a thousand miles and would lose upon it if it was carried two thousand miles, and that therefore we should charge less for the shorter distance, I say we can carry matter for five hundred miles less than for one thousand miles, and that would make another discrimination, and we should make the same discrimination in reference to letters. We charge uniform postage on letters, three cents to any part of the United States. It costs as much to send a letter to our neighboring town of Alexandria as it does to send it to Yreka, in California, or to Washington Territory. Why should we not charge a quarter of a cent or an eighth of a cent or even a less sum, to get anywhere near a proportion, for sending a letter from here to Georgetown; why not charge half a cent on a letter from here to Philadelphia, provided there is any good reason for these discriminations?

I think the true rule is that there should be an average of cost based upon an average of distance; and when you make discriminations you fetter the postal service and confuse the people. If the one cent proposed by this substitute, and which was the former law, is not sufficient, make a compromise between one and two cents, make it a cent and a half, and certainly that will overcome any economic objection, and it will yield as much revenue as though it were one cent for one thousand miles and two cents for distances over one thousand miles. The only objection that could be urged would be that there would be a fraction of a cent, but as we are dealing with pounds rather than ounces the objection is specious rather than real. My own opinion, however, is that the one cent is sufficient and that the old law was satisfactory to the people. I know that the change which is now in the law, and which Senators seem to think was a reform, was put in at a very late hour of the last session and without consideration, and, so far as some features of it were concerned, it was not understood by the Senator who made the motion for this innovation. I remember that at the time of that debate. I, having charge of the sundry civil bill, on which the amendment was put, had some doubt as to its propriety. I was disposed to move to lay it on the table; but, on the urgency of my friend from Maine, I allowed him to make his explanation and submit the matter to the Senate. There was scarcely a moment for consideration, for time was our enemy; it excluded any decent consideration even of the bill as reported from the committee, and gave no opportunity whatever for fair consideration of the amendments changing the public service which were offered from various parts of the Chamber, and most of which were laid abruptly on the table. In view of these facts, it is apparent that the law as it now exists has not the merit of having been intelligently considered by Congress. It was adopted at a chance, upon the imperfect recommendation of a committee, without deliberation, and the result was very general dissatisfaction and clamor throughout the country.

If, however, it is asserted that there should be a closing up of the gap between the receipts of the Post-Office Department and its expenditures, there should be a general movement for this purpose. If no deficiency should be allowed, a bill which will prevent any deficiency should be brought forward, not one which simply deals with a single proposition, and that entirely inadequate to cover the whole matter. As I understood the Senator from Maine in his reply to a question of mine the other day, it is unknown how much good will be effected by the proposed amendment to the law.

If it is a principle established in the minds of the Post-Office Committee and of the Senate that there should be no deficiency whatever in carrying the mail, and that the mail-matter should absolutely pay all expenses of running the mail, then bring us forward a bill which the champions of it assert will have that effect.

Mr. HAMLIN. Allow me to explain.

Mr. SARGENT. I will yield to my friend with pleasure.

Mr. HAMLIN. The other day the Senator asked me, as I understood him, if I could tell him what amount of revenue this bill would yield if it became a law, and I answered substantially that I could not, for the reason that I could not tell what amount of matter would go through the mail. I did not understand the scope of the Senator's question. If I had understood the question as he propounded it, and as I read it subsequently in the RECORD, I should have said this to him, that upon a very careful examination of the subject there might be more matter going through the mail than there is at present, and I have no doubt that would be the case, and in that event the bill would yield more revenue than we get now. If there was more mail carried through the mail there would be more expense. At any rate, the bill would leave the Department without any deficiency, as it would remunerate the Department for everything that it carried. That is what I meant to suggest.

Mr. SARGENT. Do you mean that it would leave the Department without any deficiency for this matter?

Mr. HAMLIN. For this class. Let me say here another thing, because there has been a great deal of comment upon it. It is a subject that was fully discussed in committee. I did not myself agree with several of the other members, but the committee finally thought it wisest and best to take this class by itself, because it was a distinct class of mailable matter. We thought it was a class our action in regard to which would commend itself to the judgment of the Senate, and would receive their approval. If so, then it was the intention of the committee to follow it up, precisely as the Senator from California is now suggesting, with remedies of various kinds, which we believe will cover all the deficiencies in the Department. That was the reason why we took this class separate and distinct.

Mr. SARGENT. When a measure shall be brought forward which the committee can intelligently assure the Senate will prevent deficiencies in the postal service, I for one certainly will give it very great attention, and I am inclined to think that I may be induced even to vote for it, although I firmly believe that the Post-Office Department, like the Signal Service, like the light-house service, like many other services which the Government does for the people, ought not to be expected to pay its own way. I regard it as a benefit which the Government confers on the people in exchange for taxation, and that it is a very general benefit. I see that my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. HOWE] shakes his head at my proposition.

If it shall be asserted as a rule that the Government shall render no service except that which pays into its own Treasury its cost, then I am wrong. But if there is any Department where the Government should render a benefit without expecting that the benefit itself will bring back money into the Treasury sufficient to cover its cost, then I claim that the postal service is one of those. That there are such benefits I confidently assert. Our courts do not pay their expenses. The few fines which they collect for criminal matters are scarcely to be considered beside the items of their cost. It is a benefit which the Government, by means of this department of its action, confers upon the people of the United States. There are others, as for instance, the Signal Service, which renders no benefit to the Government in the return of money to its Treasury, but an incidental benefit perhaps by warnings which may be given to its ships of war, in common with those of the merchant marine. But it is, on the other hand, a benefit to the people of the United States—to the farmer in predicting the rains which may interfere with the planting of his crops or the tempests which may prevent his reaping his crops; to the merchantman upon the lakes or the Gulf or the Atlantic seaboard, by which his ships may be kept in their harbors, and not go forth to be exposed to a storm which the ordinary eye cannot detect but which electricity has taught the Signal Office to predict, and predict with certainty. I say the Government does confer these benefits on the people without expecting revenue therefrom, and I believe that the Government may confer an equal benefit, and with equal propriety, upon the people by providing the means of circulation of both intelligence and knowledge throughout the United States; that so far it may become an educator of the people, or at any rate furnish the means of education for them.

So I am not disturbed by the consideration that the Post-Office Department does not pay its expenses, and I am glad to see it extending its operations on all sides and building up its usefulness, even if the result is a still growing deficiency, for I know that the benefit is to all the people of the United States, not merely to the inhabitants of the crowded cities, but the inhabitants of the distant frontier who receive their weekly, or it may be their monthly, mail as their contribution from the Government in this direction. But I say that when a measure is brought forward which shall in good faith, in the opinion of its projectors and according to sound reason, seem to bridge over this chasm entirely and prevent any deficiency, I will certainly give it a fair and careful consideration, and it may be, notwithstanding my ideas which I have expressed, that I may give it my support; but I am not in favor of these partial measures, of this chipping at the system. Give us a consistent proposition, and wait until the committee has time to elaborate that and present it for the attention of the Senate, and not lop off these little matters which go but a little way to remedy the evil, if it is an evil at all.

For this reason I am in favor of the substitute which is offered by the Senator from Kansas. I am in favor of it because it is better than a mere partial measure, which promises reform while not covering the subject. I am in favor of it especially because it prevents the re-introduction of a discarded feature from the postal service, a feature which has been tried and found wanting, found inconvenient, and I am indisposed to have it again introduced.

Mr HOWE. Mr. President, I did not mean to say a word in this debate, and I should not if the Senator from California had not detected me in shaking my head. Having been caught in that, I want to say a word by way of convincing him that "there is nothing in it." [Laughter.]

I did not quite assent to the proposition which I understood the Senator to submit. I do not see any analogy or any very close analogy between the postal service, and the naval service, or the Army service, or the judicial service, or the Signal Service, to which I believe the Senator alluded. The Army does nothing, as a rule, for the special benefit of an individual. What it does is for the public good, and, ordinarily, as much for the good of one man of the public as for another; and so of the Navy; so of the Signal Corps; so of most branches of the public service. But it is not so with the postal service. When the mails of the United States bring me a letter, or a newspaper, or a sample of Claflin's silks, or a small package of Dow's whisky, or any other parcel the transmission of which is allowed in the mail, that service is either for my special benefit or it is for the special benefit of the sender. It may be, perhaps in a remote sense, desirable to the Senator from California that I should receive the newspaper; it may be in a very remote sense desirable to him that I should receive the silk, or the whisky; but not so much for his interest that I think he could afford to pay for the newspaper, the silk, or the whisky, or for the transmission of one or the other. If I cannot afford to pay for bringing me the newspaper, I who get it; if I cannot afford to pay for bringing me the merchandise, I who get it, or if the sender cannot afford to pay for sending it to me, how can they afford to be taxed who neither send nor get the article?

Mr. SARGENT. Will the Senator allow me to answer him?

Mr. HOWE. Certainly.

Mr. SARGENT. I will answer him by asking another question.

Mr. HOWE. No; answer the question, but do not ask another.

Mr. SARGENT. I will answer the question by asking another, which is my right by birth, being a Yankee. The Senator is not a merchant, nor a shipper of merchandise, nor an owner of ships, nor is he a farmer, or he may not be either of these; and how can he afford to pay his share of nine hundred thousand dollars, nearly a million dollars, to sustain the Signal Service, which is simply and exclusively for the benefit of the individuals engaged in those occupations? The merchant does not send his ships to sea because the Signal Service informs him that a storm is coming. Why should I or the Senator be taxed for this? We have no interest in these pursuits except the general interest of the community.

But I might answer the question directly by saying that if I pay the postage on my letters and he on his, another one who does not receive a letter this morning has an equal right to receive or send one and it is a benefit to the whole community to have that right. It is the right of the whole community to have that right. It is a privilege, though it may not be exercised. The Senator and I both have the right to vote. He or I may not see fit to vote, but is that a reason why it is less a privilege to me if I do not exercise it? There is an equality of right in that matter, and there is equality of right in the mail to send letters, and the system which is maintained is irrespective of the fact whether the particular individual receives a letter on a particular morning, but he has the right to receive it or send it.

Mr. HOWE. Well, Mr. President, I do not think the answer is satisfactory to myself; I know it is not. I do not know but that it may be to the Senate; I do not know but that it may be to the country. Mr. President, I do not raise bread nor sail ships, but I eat bread, and I help consume the commodities which ships carry; and whatever influences the cost of those articles is interesting to me, not as a producer but as a consumer, and as directly interests me as if I were a producer. So that if the Signal Service is calculated to make calculations of the movements of the atmospheric elements more certain, better known, more clearly predicted, I am as much interested, I take it, as if I cultivated a farm or as if I pursued the gains of commerce upon the ocean. Every man, every woman, every child is interested more or less in knowing whether to-morrow is to be fair or foul; and you can say with substantial accuracy that we have about the same interest in it. But the service which is rendered through the mail is of especial, and a great deal of it is of exclusive benefit to the parties who send or the parties who receive. It is not of public importance, it is not of interest to the public, that a package of goods shall be sent from A to B. It may be of interest to A and of interest to B, and undoubtedly is of interest to the one or the other, or it would not be sent; but it is not of interest to the public. But the right to have these goods go, says the Senator from California, is precious to everybody, whether he has anything to go or not. Unquestionably the mail establishment is of interest to almost all the people of the United States, but then it is of especial interest to those who use it, and it is more or less interesting in proportion to the use that is made of it. I think the Senator will agree with me that there is but a very small percentage either of his constituents or of mine who make as much use of the mail as he and as I do; it is of especial advantage to us; and I think we had better afford to pay for these especial accommodations that we receive, rather than to put the burden on our constituents, when it can be done.

There is another difficulty in the way of levying special taxes to support the Navy and Army, or the Signal Corps. Upon what portion of the people of the United States are you going to make assessments for sending an army corps, a brigade, or a regiment to the Black Hills or to Arizona, or for establishing a signal station at Du Luth, or at Mackinaw, or the Falls of Saint Mary? It cannot be done. But when you bring me a letter you know exactly who is benefited by that particular service; nay, you acknowledge who is benefited; and you not only charge the full cost for transmitting that letter, but you charge several times the cost of it; and out of that branch of the service, as I understand, you not only collect all it costs to perform it, but you actually make it pay a profit into the Treasury; and then I am told you expend those earnings in loading down the mail with carrying parcels which the people at large have no sort of interest in having carried at all. It was so far as that that I meant to dissent from my friend from California.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, the argument thus far has proceeded upon the assumption that third-class mail matter is a heavy expense to the Government. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] and the Senators from Maine have urged upon the Senate with their usual force and power this argument. Especially is that true of my friend from Maine farthest from me, [Mr. MORRILL,] to whose utterances I always listen with the utmost respect, for I know he means to be always right. I stand here in my place to-day to challenge this whole assumption. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. HOWE] asked the question yesterday of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARVEY] whether he questioned the statement that this third-class matter is a burden upon the Treasury. I do most distinctly challenge it; and from the very document on which the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads has mainly based its report I think I can demonstrate that if you strike out third-class matter entirely from the mail service you will thereby work a loss rather than a saving to the Government. I know this is a bold assertion in view of the course the argument has taken, but I think the figures before me and the report upon which the action of the committee is based fully sustain me in that statement.

I attempted to show to the Senate a few days ago by another set of statistics that it was utterly impossible for the Government to lose money by carrying third-class mail matter at sixteen cents per pound. The figures which I presented I suppose were not worth notice, for they certainly have not been honored with any attention either by the honorable chairman of the committee, or by the Senator from Massachusetts, or any one else. I assume, therefore, that I must have erred; but, if so, it illustrates almost as forcibly as does the document on which the committee bases its action that figures are not always reliable. I showed you the other day that the railroad companies only ask thirteen mills per linear foot of car per mile for carrying the mail at the highest rate of speed on their most expensive cars, and that the amount we pay for the third-class matter, allowing eight tons to the car, would be eight times as much per linear foot as the railroads demand. I was unable to see wherein the Government could lose money in paying at that rate while collecting eight times as much from the public for the same matter. I have not yet been enlightened on that point.

Mr. MERRIMON. I beg to say to the Senator from Minnesota that I listened to his argument the other day with a great deal of pleasure and interest; but I was not satisfied with it upon this ground—and I call it to his attention now, so that he may explain it, if I am mistaken in that respect—he based his calculation on four leading railroads, I do not know whether he mentioned the names of them or not; but it was based upon the charges of four leading railroads, whereas, it seemed to me, he ought to take the railroads of the country generally into the calculation; and not only that, but the cost of carrying the mails on horseback and in stages over a great portion of the country where railroads do not pass. I do not think he took that into his calculation.

Mr. WINDOM. I thought that there was an ample margin saved on the railroad carriage to pay stage carriage, and I believe it to be so if you will refer to the statute which I will read directly. The figures which I presented the other day erred, but against myself. I find, in the report of the Post-Office Department on which the committee bases its action, that instead of the mail being carried an average of a thousand miles, as I then assumed, it is only eight hundred and thirteen and one-half miles. Sixteen cents per pound gives $320 per ton; and for an average of eight hundred and thirteen and one-half miles gives thirty-nine cents per ton per mile instead of thirty-two, as I stated at that time. As my friend from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS] questioned somewhat my estimate of ten tons to the car, I will now allow five tons to the car, which I think will satisfy him. Allowing five tons per car at thirty-nine cents per ton per mile we have $1.95 per car per mile as the amount that we collect from the people upon a charge of sixteen cents a pound. Now, for a thirty-foot car, $1.95 gives six and one-half cents per linear foot of car per mile. The railroad companies, as heretofore stated, only demand one and three-tenths cents per linear foot, and we do not pay them nearly that much. The controversy between the railroad companies and the Government is because we will not pay them one and three-tenths cents per linear foot for the quantity of car used. Their compensation is much less. But if we pay them their full demand of one and three-tenths cents per linear foot, and then carry five tons of mail matter per car, we collect six and one-half cents per linear foot against one and three-tenths cents demanded by the railroad companies.

I am unable yet to see how we can lose money by carrying an article which costs us only one-fifth as much as we receive for the service. And I assert that the profits on railway transportation of third-class matter at present rates will more than cover any deficiency on the stage and horseback lines. I shall show hereafter that on the smaller railroads, which must perform the service whether they carry third-class matter or not, the entire amount received by the Government for third-class matter is clear profit.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to ask my friend a question.

Mr. WINDOM. Certainly.

Mr. SHERMAN. According to his figuring we ought to make a great deal of money in carrying postal matter. How does he account for the fact that there is an actual loss in carrying third-class matter of $4,000,000 and an actual loss to the United States of $8,000,000 on the second-class matter? In other words, how comes it that we pay a bounty to newspapers to carry their matter and a bounty to merchants to carry their matter?

Mr. WINDOM. I think the chief loss is on the second-class matter. But, to answer my friend more fully, a very large proportion of the entire cost of our mail service is for items other than transportation; while it is in the item of transportation almost exclusively that the addition of this third-class matter increases the cost to the Government. If you take all this class of matter from the mails, you will reduce the revenue much more than you will the cost of the service. I want now to call the attention of the Senate——

Mr. HARVEY. If the Senator from Minnesota will allow me, I will make a statement in response to the question of the Senator from Ohio about this four-million-dollar deficiency.

Mr. WINDOM. I have no objection.

Mr. HARVEY. I was only going to mention a matter that has probably escaped the attention of the Senator from Minnesota, that that $4,000,000 is estimated in this way; by charging as a part of the cost of the transmission of third-class matter, not only a large percentage of the necessary expense of maintaining the Post-Office Department, but the whole mail service, including the salaries of everybody employed.

Mr. WINDOM. If the Senator had permitted me to finish my sentence, he would have found that I was coming to precisely the same thing.

Mr. HARVEY. And, in addition to that, I was going to say they charge a large percentage of the cost of unproductive mail-routes, ignoring the fact that whether this matter is carried in the mails or not, the Post-Office establishment must be maintained, the officers must be paid, and there will still be unproductive mail-routes, a large number of them, if not one pound of this matter was carried.

Mr. WINDOM. There has been no time lost by the Senator's interruption, because he has made a part of the speech that I intended to make better than I could have done it.

Mr. HARVEY. I beg pardon.

Mr. DAVIS. My friend from Minnesota has stated very correctly the position of the railroads and the Government as to the linear foot of the car as I understand the question, but he has not told us that the Government pays by the pound on most of the roads and not by the linear foot in any instance.

Mr. WINDOM. Now I want to ask the Senator from West Virginia a question. Does he not know from his observation on the committee of which he and I were both members, that the railroad companies expressed themselves entirely willing to carry by weight if they could be permitted to carry this mail in ordinary cars on fast trains? They did not complain of that at all. By weight they received enough, but they complained we occupied too much space.

Mr. DAVIS. I understand that to be the case on the leading routes, such as between here and New York. I do not understand it to be the case generally upon railroads where the mail facilities go. I understand, however, that the railroads claim that the Government requires entirely too much space for the amount of pounds that are carried, but in all cases, I believe, even between here and New York, we pay by weight, and not by the linear foot. So the Senator's calculation by the linear foot cannot enter into the present cost of carrying the mails over the country, and it must be by the pound.

Mr. WINDOM. Then take it per linear foot it would be thirty-nine cents per mile run for a thirty-foot car, and, allowing five tons to be carried, would give about eight cents per ton per mile, whereas we collect from the people thirty-nine cents per ton per mile. If you allow them to carry five tons and pay them at the rate they demand you will then pay a little less than eight cents per ton per mile to the companies, while, I have shown, on the average distance you collect thirty-nine cents per ton per mile; so that there would be on that assumption a profit of thirty-one cents per ton per mile on this class of matter, taking into account the transportation only.

Mr. DAVIS. My friend has gone back to the linear foot of the car, though I stated, and I think he will recollect, that we now pay by the pound, and not by the linear foot. There is no instance in which we are paying for the car by the linear foot, or by the foot in any way that I understand, but it is by the pounds actually hauled, weighed, I believe, once a year.

Mr. WINDOM. Let me ask the Senator another question. Do not the railroad companies insist that the payment we make per pound is less than their demand of thirty-nine cents per car per mile?

Mr. DAVIS. Certain railroads have, for instance, as I have named, that between here and New York; but I have not heard of railroads outside of the particular roads between here and New York, and some other leading lines, claiming that they ought to be paid by the linear foot. They do claim, however, that where there are very few pounds going over a road on the smaller routes the Department requires too much space for the route-agent.

Mr. WINDOM. Does not the Senator believe that every railroad in the country will be willing to carry our mails at less than one-half of thirty-nine cents per ton per mile, weighing it? I have shown you that, taking the average distance, as stated in this document, at eight hundred and thirteen and one-half miles and paying sixteen cents per pound, means thirty-nine cents per ton per mile. Now, does not the Senator know that the average charge for carrying freights on the large railroads of the country is about a cent and a half per ton per mile, and on the smaller ones not over three or four cents per ton per mile? Does he not believe that every railroad in the country would be glad to accept all this mail matter at one half the amount we receive per ton for carrying it?

Mr. DAVIS. I think the Senator is wrong in saying a cent and a half a ton per mile for mail matter.

Mr. WINDOM. Not mail matter, but general freight.

Mr. DAVIS. That is another question.

Mr. WINDOM. Then I put up the cost of transportation to nineteen cents per ton per mile for mail matter as against a cent and a half ordinary freight. The Government saves one-half it collects from the people on third-class matter.

But I do not care to dwell longer on this point. I want to look at this document for a moment. In presenting my estimates of cost and profit the other day, I was answered by one or two Senators with the statement that the report of the Post-Office Department showed a loss of about $4,000,000 per annum on this class of matter, and that was assumed to be a conclusive answer to the results which I had stated.

I believe that almost every Senator who has discussed this proposition yet in the interest of economy has waxed eloquent upon the fact that we are paying out—as the Senator from Wisconsin says taxing the people—$4,000,000 per annum in order that we may carry this freight which does not properly belong in the mails; that we are taxing the letter mail and thrusting our hands into the Treasury to make up deficiencies assumed to be about $4,000,000 per annum on merchandise. I want to show what the facts are from the report on which the committee has acted and on which these eloquent economical appeals are based. Instead of $4,000,000, the loss on third-class matter, as assumed by the Department itself on existing rates of sixteen cents per pound, is only $1,361,135.41. They profess to know exactly what that loss is. Instead of being $4,000,000, it is only about one and one-third millions; and yet every Senator thus far who has spoken on this subject has told us that there was a deficiency of $4,000,000.

Mr. HAMLIN. I stated that it was on the basis of two hundred pounds.

Mr. WINDOM. But that is not the law. The Senator from Maine who sits nearest to me may have stated that, but certainly the figures generally used here have been $4,000,000. It is stated in this very document——

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President——

Mr. WINDOM. Let me finish my sentence. It is stated in this document that the loss on third-class matter payable at eight cents per pound is $4,113,915.53, but alongside of that statement is another, based upon the present rate of sixteen cents per pound, which is, as I have said, $1,361,135.41.

I merely mention that to show that the statements of the extent of our losses have been based upon the wrong figures. As my former statistics were challenged by this document, which professes to have ascertained exactly what the cost of these different classes of mail matter is, I want the attention of the Senate for a few moments while I analyze the basis upon which its calculations are made and show their utter fallacy. Let us see how they ascertain the cost of third-class matter. They divide the cost under three heads:

First. "Maintenance of the establishment."

Second. "Transportation."

Third. "Handling or distribution."

The first of these, "maintenance of the establishment," they say added 18.5 per cent. Eighteen and one-half per cent. of the cost of "maintenance of the establishment," "apportioned as per revenue," they say should be charged to this third-class matter, making $2,373,443.92. Elsewhere in the document you will see what they mean by "maintenance of the establishment;" the "salaries of postmasters," "allowances for fuel, light, and contingent expenses," "cost of non-productive roads," &c. Let me ask the honorable Senator from Maine how much this third-class matter adds to each one of these items of expense. You must maintain your Post-Office Department, you must have all your routes, you must light and warm your offices and cars whether you carry this class of matter or not. How much does it increase the compensation of postmasters? Up to $2,000 the compensation of the postmaster is fixed by his commissions, I believe; but above that, the amount of business the Post-Office Department does in the way of transmitting packages or anything else does not, as I understand it, add one iota to the salaries of postmasters. That is a very large class. Some of them receive over $2,000 salary, but the increase above that sum is wholly from box-rents, and not for commissions; so that this matter has nothing whatever to do with the increase of the compensation of postmasters above $2,000 a year. Does it add any considerable amount of fuel to the various post-offices? Does it cost any more to warm your Department here or to warm your post-offices all over the country because this third-class matter is carried? I do not believe that the committee will tell us it costs a cent more for fuel, and yet that is one of the items which is charged up as a part of the expense. Contingent expenses are charged. I am not aware that they are increased a farthing by the third-class matter. Another item is the cost of "non-productive roads." In the name of reason, if you strike out this third-class matter entirely will your non-productive railroads cost you any more or any less?

So that, taking the whole of these items which are included under the "maintenance of the establishment," there is but a very slight increase in the expense of the Government upon the third-class matter, and yet of the $8,872,559 charged up to this class $2,377,443 is added on account of increased salaries of postmasters, increased allowances for fuel and lights, contingent expenses, and increased cost of non-productive roads. Can anything be more absurd than that? I say that to make a fair showing of the cost of this class you should strike out at least three-fourths of this $2,377,443. There is some addition to the salaries of postmasters, but no material increase of expenses anywhere else.

Take the second item. They tell us that this third-class matter adds 37.9 per cent. to the cost of transportation, which amounts to $4,942,458.85. Does it do any such thing, Mr. President? I said a moment ago that the chief cost of this class was in transportation, but does it increase the cost in proportion to its weight? I say it does not, nor anywhere near it.

Let us see about that. Take the railroads alone on which the mail is carried by weight. I believe they are not weighed on the stage-routes.

Mr. HAMLIN. They are not.

Mr. WINDOM. I am informed by the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads that they are not weighed on the stage-routes. Consequently we are to look to the railroads alone to see what this increased weight costs the Government. There are seven hundred and twenty-nine of these railroad mail-routes in the country, as reported in 1874. Of those, three hundred and seventy-six are roads that receive $50 or less per mile for carrying the mail. Of the seven hundred and twenty-nine railroad mail-routes, three hundred and seventy-six are not affected at all by the increased weight. Hence more than one-half of the railway transportation in the country was not affected at all when we carried, as we did in 1874, the largest amounts of this third-class matter. This statement from which I quote was made up on the weights of 1874, when we were carrying at the reduced rate of eight cents per pound. There are but three hundred and fifty-three roads that go over the fifty-dollar rate. Every Senator knows that $50 is the minimum, and if the railroads furnish the facilities for carrying the mail at all, they receive the $50 per mile. So that the adding of this third-class matter in 1874, when it was at the low rate of eight cents per pound, did not increase the cost of transportation at all on one-half of the railroads of the country. And yet we have in this document this item:

Thirty-seven and nine-tenths per cent. of the cost of transportation, &c., included under the head of "transportation," apportioned according to weight.

They took the whole weight of the mail carried of every kind and said that this third class constituted 37.9 per cent. of it; and they charged 37.9 per cent. of the total cost to the cost of third-class matter, when it did not increase the cost at all on more than one-half of the railroads of the country, as I have shown. Instead of making that $4,942,000, it ought not to have been more than half that much, in my judgment.

Again, let us see how much loss there is by weight. Under the existing law it is provided—

That the pay per mile per annum shall not exceed the following rates, namely: On routes carrying their whole length an average weight of mails per day of two hundred pounds, $50—

And they pay them all $50 whether they carry that or not—five hundred pounds, $75.

Five hundred pounds additional to the two hundred, carried the whole length of the road, adds $25 per mile. Let us see whether we lose anything when we add that $25 per mile. I will state the case in the strongest possible light for those who advocate this bill. I will assume that the whole length of the route is equal to the average distance which the mails are carried, according to this document—that is, eight hundred and thirteen miles. When you add this third-class matter at sixteen cents per pound on five hundred pounds, you are making money by the transaction. Let us see. Average distance of mail carried, eight hundred and thirteen miles, five hundred pounds in addition to the two hundred pounds adds $25 per mile. Twenty-five dollars per mile for eight hundred and thirteen and one-half miles gives $20,337.50 that we pay to the railroad; but sixteen cents per pound on five hundred pounds gives $80 per day, and three hundred and thirteen days at $80 per day gives $25,040; so that if you add weight enough to increase the rates above $50, making it $25 per mile additional, and carry the whole average distance that the mails are carried in the United States, you gain nearly $5,000 every time you do it on each five hundred pounds during the year.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] may smile at these statements, but he would do much better to answer them. I think it is much easier, however, to answer them with a smile than in any other way; and I apprehend that is the course my honorable friend will take.

Now, then, take the third item on which they make up this cost of over $4,000,000 for carrying third-class matter. They say it is 23.3 per cent. of the cost of clerical force included under the head of "handling" or "distribution" apportioned to the number of pieces. Does anybody believe that adding this class increases the clerical force to that extent? Can any one believe that it is increased in proportion to the number of pieces handled? In three-fourths of the post-offices in the country it has not added one clerk. In some large offices it may have required a small increase. I am not good on proportion, but I will say at a rough guess in four-fifths of the mail cars of the country this third-class matter does not add one postal clerk. The force they have for distributing the mail distributes this matter also. The force in nearly all the post-offices of the country, with the exception of the larger cities, necessary to carry on the establishment distributes this matter without any additional cost. Will anybody base a vote in the Senate upon a document which purports to estimate the cost of this matter by saying that as the number of these pieces is 23.3 of the whole number of pieces carried therefore it adds 23.3 per cent. to the clerical force of the country?

If you deduct from this calculation of the Department that which is charged up to the "maintenance of the establishment," which I have shown you should be thrown out substantially, and leave the other to stand entire; that is, if you leave 37.9 per cent. of the cost of transportation, when the very reports of the Department show that on one-half the roads it does not add anything, and if you leave 23.3 per cent. for the cost of clerical force, when everybody knows it does not add one-half or one-quarter of that number, and only strikes out that absurd proposition that it adds 18½ per cent. to the "maintenance of the establishment," you would have the cost, $3,395,166; and you have from this document an acknowledgment that the receipts are $7,411,425. Then striking out these items, which everybody must admit upon any sort of consideration are not properly chargeable, you have a profit on this third-class matter of $1,016,309, and I believe that is below the actual profit that the Government realizes on it.

I believe that if you were to strike this class out entirely you would lose much more in revenue than you will save in expense. You would not reduce your cost of transportation, your cost of maintenance of establishment, your cost of increased clerical force anywhere near $7,411,425, which is the amount you now receive. I am not quite certain that the half cent per ounce proposed by the honorable Senator from Kansas will pay the full cost, but I believe it will come very near it; and, as a choice between his amendment and the bill as reported by the Senate Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, although I would prefer to leave the law as it now is, at sixteen cents per pound. But, as against the unjust discrimination of doubling the charge on all distances over a thousand miles, when I think we are making a profit at the present rates, I would prefer to take the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, and shall therefore vote for it. I should prefer, however, to vote against the bill of the committee and let the law stand as it now is.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, I listened to the statement of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] the other day in relation to the cost of transportation of freight over our railroads, and I wish to assure him that I intended no disrespect because I made no answer thereto. I did state in the commencement that I purposed not to be continually interrupting Senators as they should be discussing this subject. I believe I have kept my word; and not being aware that there is any other Senator who wishes to address the body, I now propose to answer as briefly and as well as I may the positions which the Senator from Minnesota has taken. Whether I shall be able to do it satisfactorily to the mind of my friend is one thing. That I shall do it satisfactorily to myself, I am quite certain; and I may express the hope that I shall be able to do it in a manner satisfactory to the Senate.

I begin by saying, first, that all the gentleman's figures in relation to transporting freight on railroads have no earthly connection with the subject before this body. You cannot make the two things applicable by any possibility. A contract to transport freight over a railroad is so unlike and so dissimilar to transporting mails over your railroads that they can by possibility have no connection whatever with each other.

Mr. WINDOM. Shall I interrupt the Senator if I ask him a question now and then?

Mr. HAMLIN. No, sir; I will answer.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask whether the rates charged by the railroads themselves for carrying the mails have any connection with the rates which we charge the people for carrying them?

Mr. HAMLIN. Next to none whatever; but I will come to that, and I will state precisely what they do do, and precisely what we have to pay, and precisely what we get in return, which I think will be more satisfactory to my friend than any hypothetical case he can state in relation to transporting freight. What on earth has the matter of transporting freight, as my friend stated it the other day, over railroads with cars of the capacity of ten tons and with a number of linear feet reaching I think 30,000, to do with a railroad car that runs over a railroad with one hundred pounds of weight, and what would be the cost of that hundred pounds of weight when you have reduced the ten tons of freight down to a hundred pounds? And of the linear feet which you must have in a postal car more than half, I think two-thirds, is necessarily reserved for the use and occupation of the Government Post-Office to receive and distribute the mail matter along the road. I want to tell my friend that on inquiry I learned, and I think I am authorized to say absolutely, that there are no cars that carry five tons of mail matter save the fast-express line that goes out of New York, and there they run two cars full, but with a capacity when full of only five tons, and they run two others nearly empty.

Again, the Senator makes all his estimates in relation to railroads upon cars that run twelve or fourteen miles per hour. The statements which the Senator made have application to freight trains.

Mr. WINDOM. O, no; the Senator is entirely mistaken. The demand of the railroad companies for thirty-nine cents a car per mile was for their best and fastest trains and their very best cars, expensively built and fitted up for postal cars.

Mr. HAMLIN. I am talking of what was the rate of speed made by the railroad in freight trains.

Mr. WINDOM. Twelve or fourteen miles, I suppose, but they only charge a cent and a half a ton per mile as against thirty-nine cents that we pay.

Mr. HAMLIN. But they make it on the estimate of a full car of freight or passengers all the time, while your mails will not reach five hundred pounds; they often will not reach half that; consequently the railroad gets its compensation on the bases of $50 a mile, to pay for running their car if there is but a single letter to carry.

Mr. WINDOM. As the Senator mentioned the fact that some railroads carried so small an amount for $50 a mile, I ask him whether he thinks adding this third-class matter to these roads costs anything; and, if so, how much?

Mr. HAMLIN. The universal rule is to make the contract first for $50 a mile, and that includes an obligation on the part of the railroad to run the car if there is but a single letter to transport in it. I undertake to say you could make a contract which would give them five tons to carry every day at the Senator's figures; they might be willing to take it, while they could not undertake to carry the mail at a less rate than they are carrying it now, subject to the small amount of mail and depending on the weight of that mail for their compensation.

Mr. WINDOM. I do not want to interrupt the Senator, but he and I both desire to get at the truth in this matter. He has mentioned a class of railroads that get $50 a mile and have a very small quantity of mail to carry. I have shown you that that class of roads numbers more than one-half the roads in the United States. Now, I ask the Senator if this third-class matter in 1874, when there was more than half the mail carried at $50 a mile, added anything whatever to the cost of transportation on those roads? Did we not get it just as cheap on those roads as if we had not had that matter carried at all?

Mr. HAMLIN. Did you not get your first-class matter carried just as cheap? If the Senator's argument is worth anything, would it not scale down the prices upon both those classes?

Mr. WINDOM. Would you not have to maintain all this service on all these roads if we did not carry this matter at all?

Mr. HAMLIN. I will come to that.

Mr. WINDOM. So that this is simply adding to the convenience of the people without any cost to the Government.

Mr. HAMLIN. It costs nothing to carry third-class matter, accordcording to the Senator, but everything else that goes in the mail is bound to pay. You make all the other branches of your Department pay the first and the second classes, but when the third class comes the Senator's argument, if it is worth anything, is that that shall go for nothing, because you must maintain your Department for the first and the second classes.

Mr. WINDOM. Let me ask another question. Do we not make an absolute profit on all the third-class matter that we carry on the roads that get less than $50 a mile? You would have to maintain the service, you must run it in order to maintain the railway service of the country. Now, my point is that we make more than we lose, and a great deal, out of this third-class matter; and I ask the Senator if every dollar's worth of third-class matter carried on these small railroads is not so much actual profit to the country, and had we better not carry it than lose that money?

Mr. HAMLIN. I answer no.

Mr. WINDOM. Now I should like to know why.

Mr. HAMLIN. I think I will now proceed to make the suggestions which I desired to make in relation to the Senator's proposition.

Mr. WINDOM. I will not interrupt the Senator further.

Mr. HAMLIN. First, these estimates are made on cars that run twelve or fourteen miles an hour. If you double the speed, you double the rate. Consequently the Senator must double his compensation for the increased speed; and when you come to your fast express trains you have got to more than triplicate the expenses that are incurred and which are charged by railroads for running at the increased speed. But this is the view I take, this is the view that has been submitted by the Department to the committee and to the Senate in relation to the cost of transporting these various classes of mail matter all over the country, and the Department has based its statements upon a classification of the articles sent and then a classification of the various branches which in the Department go to make up the expense, and the Senator says that it is entirely unreliable, that figures will lie; I do not know that he uses that expression, but he says they are extremely unreliable. Now I affirm that, in the theory and for the purpose of presenting just what the Department designed to present to the committee and just what the committee designed to carry out in their action, the estimates of the Department are accurate almost to a mill. I suppose we have no disagreement in the fact that it costs so many million dollars to support our Post-Office Department for the year. I suppose we have no disagreement in the fact that the receipts of that Department amount to another sum, less than its expenditures. I do not want to dispute about terms, and it is on that very point that the Senator from Minnesota has based his argument. I think it is a misunderstanding of terms. When you speak of the Government losing so much upon this class or that class, what do you mean and what did the Department mean? They meant that, if the Department was to be self-sustaining and the articles that passed through the mail should contribute enough to make it self-sustaining, then there should be added to each of these various classes, the first, the second, and the third, enough to make the Post-Office Department self-sustaining and that it should not be a charge upon the Government.

The accuracy of these figures I think I can demonstrate with a good deal of certainty. In the first place, there is the first class. I do not understand that the Senator from Minnesota denies that the revenues from the first class are in round numbers about $19,000,000 and that its cost is about $15,000,000. No matter what may be the expenses of the Government, its revenues are that amount, as we know absolutely by the receipts. That is, we know that the first and third classes do yield a revenue of about $25,000,000. We know that by the report of the Postmaster-General. We know that the second class of mail matter yields $995,000. The estimate made in these tables was $976,217. The estimate made in these tables on third-class matter was $4,658,643. Now I want to test the accuracy of these tables by an illustration. To get at what was produced in revenue by the first and the third classes it became necessary to adopt some mode of estimation. They could have at the end of the year the actual figures only of the second class. That revenue was paid by the newspaper men, was kept in a separate account, and the report of the Postmaster-General shows precisely what it was. What did the Department do in attempting to estimate what would be the revenue of the first and the third classes? In the second that 155,000,000 pounds. That is composed of newspapers, magazines, and newspapers that circulate within the county, on which no postage is received. They took from that 25 per cent. in weight, estimating that to be what would go free in the various counties, and taking out what went free through the mail left us but 1.75 cents on the pound for transmitting newspapers and periodicals; and that is all the Department gets to-day after taking out what we lose by transmitting local papers in the counties. Under that process of estimation they estimated at the Department that the revenue would be $976,217 from second-class matter. These are estimated revenues. What did the fact prove at the end of the year? It proved to be $995,000, being less than 2 per cent. in actual revenue that was received, as appears by the annual report of the Postmaster-General, over this estimate.

Pursuing the same basis and following out precisely the same calculation, they estimated for the first and the third classes, and they made their estimate on this same table which my friend from Minnesota thinks is so valueless and so unreliable. What was their estimate of what would be the revenue of the first and third classes, and what is it in the table? Twenty-five million two hundred and thirteen thousand eight hundred and sixty-five dollars. What was the actual revenue which was found at the end of the year when the Department knew to a cent how accurate or how inaccurate was this estimate? The amount proved to be $25,733,911, or, in other words, it was underestimated $478,000. Senators will bear in mind that these estimates were made for three-quarters of the year upon the old rate of postage, two ounces for one cent, and for a quarter of the year the receipts were upon the present rate of one cent an ounce. Estimating that the increased rate would give $2,000,000 additional a year, $478,000 was almost the exact sum for a quarter that showed an increase over and above the estimates.

Mr. WINDOM. Where does the Senator find his estimates in this document?

Mr. HAMLIN. They are all estimates; there is nothing but estimate. They are all based on these tables that the Senator says are so unreliable.

Mr. WINDOM. Why should it be an estimate any more than the other document here I see as late as February 8, 1876?

Mr. HAMLIN. These tables are estimated at the Department. I have given you the figures from the report of the Postmaster-General to show you how near the estimate came to actual results on all three of the classes.

Mr. WINDOM. What I cannot understand is how the Senator makes out this document to be an estimate in advance of the official figures when the document itself is dated February 8, 1876. We have not any figures later than that. This is the latest thing we have.

Mr. HAMLIN. The document itself was made and prepared at the Department before the end of the fiscal year, and, I repeat, no matter when it was sent to us, this table was made upon estimates; and I show you with what perfect results the estimates came out at the end of the year in relation to the three classes to which I have referred. If they were so almost precisely accurate in relation to these three classes, I imagine that there is the same accuracy in relation to their estimates on this table in regard to the cost. The first estimate was one of revenue; then comes the estimate of cost.

The Senator has over and over again stated, almost in words, that an increase of the transportation of this third-class matter has not increased the expenses of the Government, and virtually that it yields a net revenue, and that the expenses of the Government would be no more if it were left out, or a very little more than they are now. From 1850 to 1855, if you will take the expenses of your Department for those five years and add them together, you will find that they increased 75 per cent. In those five years the business of the Office increased 60 per cent. From 1855 to 1860 the expenses increased 60 per cent.; the business 40 per cent. In 1852 you began to get this heavy matter on your hands. From 1865 to 1870 the expenses increased 70 per cent. and the business 40 per cent. From 1870 to 1875 (and this heavy mail matter went extensively into your mail in 1872) the expenses of your Department increased 45 per cent., while your business increased 55.

I present this compilation of figures for the purpose of showing to the Senate that as all this matter has gone into the mail, the expenditures have gone up almost pari passu. Your clerical force has been increased, your postal force has been increased, everything has been increased in the same ratio as your mail service has increased, showing, as I say, conclusively that as you have added this heavy matter to your mail service you have added to the expense of the Department. It cannot be otherwise.

These estimates are made for the purpose of showing in what way and manner your Post-Office revenues should be increased to supply the deficiency, and I ask if that is not an equitable rule which compels them to share their proportion of all the three classes that go to make up the Post-Office Department, to wit, the maintenance of the establishment; the transportation; and the handling or distribution. When the evidence is that all the expenses of your Post-Office Department are increasing in almost the precise proportion that the business of the Department increases, and when you see in the last five years when all this heavy matter has gone into the mails that the increase of the force exceeds a little in proportion what it had in anterior years, I ask if we may not assume, as they did in making these estimates beyond a doubt, that in ascertaining what is the cost of carrying the third-class matter they should tax to it its relative proportion of maintenance, transportation, and handling? The rule which they did adopt charged the same for handling a letter that they did for handling a package of merchandise; and figures which they have given us in other tables are so nearly accurate that I accept them. While every Senator knows that in handling a package of merchandise there is more of labor and more of cost to the Government than there is in handling a single letter, yet when you go to the handling part of the table, you see they only charge the handling of one package as they charge to letters the handling of one letter. When you go to transportation they do precisely the same thing there. They estimate your mail upon weight as the nearest approximate method of ascertaining what it may be, and then charge to the third-class transportation according to the amount which is transported; and tested by the figures which I have mentioned, I say it must necessarily be very nearly mathematically correct.

So in relation to the maintenance of the establishment. I do not say that on some minor points there may not have been very little increase, on others more; but taking the three together, it is a fair, it is a just, it is an equitable rule, and it is one upon which we may rely. It is a rule by which it was designed to ascertain what each class ought to pay to support the Department and to make it self-sustaining. You may call it a deficiency; you may call it whatever else you please; the object of it was to ascertain what fairly, justly, and equitably third-class matter should pay to contribute its proportion relatively with the other classes.

Now, suppose that it can be transmitted through the mails at figures lower than the Senator from Minnesota would transport freight, and the Government gets its one cent an ounce to-day. Suppose it could be done, what are the facts? You have got a deficiency; we have no disagreement about that. The Senator from Minnesota asked me the other day where it comes from? Strictly speaking, you might say that five millions of it come from post-routes that do not pay their expenses, but that has never been regarded as a deficiency; and I do not think the Senator from Minnesota will join with me, either from the condition of his own State or my own, in dispensing with the service on those routes that do not pay. They were established for legitimate mail purposes; and what the community have a right to complain of is that when they are non-paying, when many of our States do not contribute as much of revenue as we receive in the support of our mail service, we should in addition to that ask the Government to contribute to carry third-class matter or any class of mail matter.

Mr. WINDOM. I agree with the Senator fully; and on all these small routes that are not paying I want to get the profit of carrying this third-class matter. We have got to run those routes any way; and all the third-class matter we carry on them is clear benefit, and I want to make something out of it.

Mr. HAMLIN. The Senator may perhaps to his own satisfaction figure out an actual profit on those routes; but if he is right in his figures, it is more than doubly absorbed in the large routes that have got above the fifty-dollar limit.

Mr. WINDOM. No. I have shown that the additional pounds we add we make money out of. Now, I say as to all the little routes where we pay $50 a mile—and we have got to pay the $50 anyhow on more than half the roads in the United States now—all the third-class matter we carry and get pay for on those roads is so much clear profit and harvest over the expense of those roads. I think the Senator cannot get out of that conclusion.

Mr. HAMLIN. If the Senator's argument is worth anything, it surely proves too much. If we make a profit by transporting matter over roads that get only the minimum of compensation, why is it that all the classes, the first and second, are not remunerative?

Mr. WINDOM. I will answer the Senator. If we are compelled to maintain those roads in order to carry the mails, as I insist we are, then the second class-matter is remunerative to the extent that it pays anything; and so is the third-class matter.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the Senator be kind enough to go one step further, and tell me how the deficiency in the Department happens—where it comes from?

Mr. WINDOM. The deficiency in the Department happens from various causes. It happens from the fact that you must maintain your mail service all over the country. But that does not answer the question. Let us look at this step by step. Here is a State in which there are no railroads except the small ones that get $50 a mile, and they will get that $50 whether you carry second-class matter at all or third-class matter at all; and you are bound to give the people this service by keeping up those roads. Now I ask the Senator if adding the second-class and third-class matter on those roads, which does not put them above $50 a mile, as I have shown by the report of 1874, is not a clear profit to the extent of all we get out of the second and third class matter on those roads?

Mr. HAMLIN. The answer first is that the great amount of all the second and third class matter does not go in any considerable portion over the little roads, but over the large roads. That is true almost entirely of the second class, consisting of newspapers and magazines.

Mr. WINDOM. Is it not true of third-class matter?

Mr. HAMLIN. It is not so true of the third-class matter; but the proposition which I want to submit to the Senate, and with that I shall leave the subject, is simply this: We know the fact that we are taxing our people for social and business correspondence $1.46 on every pound of letters that goes through the mail; we know that we are receiving to-day but sixteen cents a pound upon merchandise which legitimately has no standing in the mail, and has gone in as a special favor. The estimates to which I have referred were made upon a basis and calculation that should enable us to find that sum which would compel the third class to contribute that portion to the revenues of the Department which would be equivalent to its proportion of the expenses for the service it receives. What is the aspect that we present to the world? What is the light in which we stand? To-day, if we vote to restore this rate of postage to two ounces for the cent, we are going to declare that we are willing to continue to burden the mail with this matter, with five millions of money required to pay railroads that are non-remunerative, and with a surplus of more than $4,000,000 from social and business correspondence, and then following it demand that your Treasury shall contribute $7,000,000 more. I ask the Senator from Minnesota, aside from all his figures, if that single statement (and that is a statement which cannot be denied in any way) does not show that we are required to devise some mode by which this third-class matter shall contribute, irrespective of what it may or may not cost to go through the mail, its due proportion of what is required to sustain the mail service?

Mr. President, I have said I think once before that I wish this service could be performed much cheaper; but we must take our whole postal service as it is, and we must supply the sinews, the revenues as they are required, and I as one individual am not willing to be made a figure in that picture that seeks to grasp from an indigent widowed mother, who may write but her four letters annually to her son, a tribute of one-fourth of the sum she so pays to put into my pocket to aid me in transmitting rattlesnakes and centipedes, ox-horns and bowie-knives. Nor am I willing to be made a figure in that picture with the other end resting upon the Treasury of the United States and demanding its revenues to supply the balance of the deficiency and that revenue contributed by the labor of our country.

Mr. HARVEY. Mr. President, I desire to say but a few words to show the spirit of this crusade against third-class matter. The Senator from Minnesota, though making a very conclusive argument against this system of estimates, omitted to mention one very important fact. I contend that neither the Post-Office Department, nor the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, nor any one else can show that the cost of transportation of 55,783,832 pounds of second-class matter is only $7,969,240.97, while 42,351,308 pounds of third-class matter cost $8,772,599.41. That calculation would assume that for carrying 13,432,524 pounds less of third-class matter than of second-class matter the cost was $803,319 more—nearly a million dollars more for carrying and handling 13,432,524 pounds less—and this in the face of the fact that nothing is involved here except the transportation and the handling, and the transportation is done by the pound, and a pound of second-class matter costs the same as a pound of third-class matter, and as to the handling there is no material difference. The statistics of the Department say that the average size of the packages of third-class matter is three and one-half ounces. It is as easy to handle a package of three and one-half ounces as it is a single letter.

I think enough has been said and shown to satisfy the Senate that the United States can afford to transport third-class mail matter anywhere within its boundaries at the rate that this amendment proposes. It has been shown that the postage charged upon fractions of ounces makes the Department realize about twelve cents per pound for the carriage of this matter at the rate we propose to go back to. If we cannot carry it for this, in what position does it place us before the world? The Dominion of Canada, having a population of about four millions, having mail lines as long as any of ours, carries such matter for four cents a pound, a uniform rate. What is the ground on which we can justify ourselves for charging such a rate as this?

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to offer an amendment to the pending amendment, and for that purpose I will ask the Secretary to read the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas.

The Chief Clerk read Mr. HARVEY'S amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have received letters, and I suppose every Senator has, from a great many of my constituents, complaining about the change of the postage on printed circulars and articles of that kind, various descriptions of printed matter which weigh less than an ounce. They complain that the act of last session injuriously affected the transmission of circulars and printed matter of that kind to the people in carrying on their business. I think there was a good deal of ground for this complaint. Probably that effect was brought about by a misapprehension, in the haste of the closing scenes of the last session. That ought to be corrected, in my opinion, and circulars ought to be sent as before, at the rates formerly provided by law.

The difficulty occurred with the larger packages which were more than one ounce, and the old law fixed the rate at one cent for two ounces and a proportionate rate for all amounts up to four pounds. It is shown very clearly by the Senator from Maine, and by all the Senators who have participated in the debate that that is doing work for nothing or for less than half-price, and that the result has been to cause a deficiency in the revenues of the Post-Office Department for this class of service to the amount of $4,000,000. True there is some difference of opinion as to whether this four million is overstated or not. The Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Minnesota differ from the Senator from Maine as to the amount, but that it does create a large deficiency there can be no doubt. That is shown by the documents admitted by these Senators themselves.

The Senator from California also objects to the proposition of the committee inasmuch as it establishes two rates of postage, and he says that it will be difficult to distinguish between where the thousand-mile line begins and where it ends. There is much force in that. That consideration led to the adoption of a uniform rate both for letters and printed matter. I can see the force of it.

It seems to me we ought promptly to repair the injury we did, without going further until there is a general system provided for the regulation of mail matter, so as to make the Department self-sustaining, as near as may be. It seems to me the best thing we can do under all the circumstances (unless we take up the House bill sent to us a long while ago and pass it) would be now to establish a uniform rate per ounce. This would restore the old law so far as circulars are concerned and allow circulars to be sent at one cent, because they weigh almost uniformly less than an ounce. As the proposition of the Senator from Kansas restores the old law and continues the old deficiency and rather adds to it if anything, I propose to amend his amendment by striking out the word "two" in line 8, so that it shall read "and postage shall be charged thereon at the rate of one cent for each ounce or fraction thereof." Even then I should feel disinclined to vote for the amendment, because I should be rather disposed to follow the committee, who propose to fix the rate at one cent per ounce. I want to leave it at one cent an ounce, which was the old law. One cent was the rate of a circular because the weight was under an ounce. It went all over the country for one cent an ounce, and hence the complaint made now by my constituents. Almost uniformly the complaint has been that by defect of the law the rate has been changed so as to advance the rate on these light matters, which they send as a matter of business, and they say it cripples business operations and interferes with the dissemination of intelligence in regard to trade.

It seems to me, therefore, we can accomplish the purpose by providing that the rate shall be one cent for each ounce or fraction thereof. The only difficulty in the way of this proposition would be in regard to transient newspapers, such as are sent through the mails by private persons to private persons. As they weigh more than an ounce, it might not be wise to raise the rate formerly established on that kind of matter. Transient newspapers are sent usually by a person receiving a paper to a friend or neighbor. That practice is carried on to some extent. I would not desire to change it. This amendment probably might raise the rate a little on transient newspapers, but it could very easily be managed by adopting the fifth section of the committee's report, which declares—

That transient newspapers and magazines shall be admitted to, and transmitted in, the mails at the rate of one cent for every three ounces or fractional part thereof, and one cent for each two additional ounces or fractional part thereof.

That I have no objection to, because it is impossible to tell the exact weight of this transient matter, and to make two rates, requiring two cents for two ounces, three cents for three ounces, &c., would make it obscure and difficult. Persons mailing these papers have not facilities to weigh them. That is a comparatively small matter, but as to merchandise and the various articles named in the old law and named in this bill, there is no question but what it costs the Government of the United States more than one cent for two ounces to transport them. It seems to me that that evil ought to be corrected, and that the most we can accomplish now, especially if this amendment is to be adopted, is to raise the rate on all matter to one cent per ounce. That will tend to lessen the deficiency that now exists in the postal establishment. It seems to me the Senator from Kansas ought to be satisfied with this. It is a reasonable rate, and it will cover the case of circulars weighing under one ounce, so that they can be carried as before at one cent.

Mr. HARVEY. Will the Senator permit me to state that according to my understanding the amendment proposed by him is simply to make the law as it stands now, and to meet the objection which he urged in the beginning in regard to circulars and the hasty legislation of last winter.

Mr. SHERMAN. I want circulars to go for one cent an ounce. I want to make a distinction. I do not either state my opinion clearly, or the Senator does not. I say there ought to be a distinction, that one cent ought to cover the postage on one ounce. The amendment of the Senator makes the postage one cent for two ounces, and there is the evil. I think one cent for one ounce and all under is a reasonable rate. That would cover circulars, the great body of business communications between man and man; but when you go above one ounce then you reach a class of articles not circulars, not merely printed information sent out by manufacturers to dealers to get trade. They are useful, but they are something in the nature of merchandise, packages, goods, all sorts of stuff. They ought to pay certainly one cent an ounce.

Mr. PADDOCK. Do I understand the Senator from Ohio to say that he proposes to make that the uniform rate for all distances?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; that is the amendment.

Mr. PADDOCK. Having no dividing line of distances?

Mr. SHERMAN. I present nothing of that kind. I see some argument against it. I listened to the statement of the Senator from California and I listened to the statement of the chairman of the committee. In equity the longer the distance the greater should be the rate.

Mr. PADDOCK. I sought in committee to make an amendment in regard to the dividing line of distances, and reserved the right to do the same thing in the Senate; but if the Senator's amendment prevails, I need not do it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I inferred, but perhaps I am mistaken, that there was a disposition in the Senate to adopt the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, which would be simply to go back and restore the old law. I do not think we ought to restore the old law altogether, but we ought to restore it so far as light circulars are concerned, weighing one ounce or less. Ordinary circulars would not weigh more than half an ounce. There is no propriety in charging these circulars one cent when you only charge a package of merchandise at the rate of one cent for two ounces. I hope, if the amendment of the Senator from Kansas is to be adopted, that the Senate will be willing by general consent to increase the rate to one cent an ounce for all packages weighing over an ounce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. OGLESBY in the chair.) The Senator from Ohio proposes an amendment to the amendment, which will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed in line 8 of the amendment to strike out "two ounces" and insert "ounce;" so as to read:

And postage shall be charged thereon at the rate of one cent for each ounce or fraction thereof.

Mr. DAWES. I do not know but that after the remark that has just been made by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK] I am about to anticipate something that he proposes to do. I was about to move an amendment to the text suggested by the remark of the Senator from Nebraska. If the Senator desires to make that amendment I will not interfere.

Mr. PADDOCK. I am satisfied with the amendment of the Senator from Ohio to the amendment, and therefore I shall not offer mine.

Mr. DAWES. It is the simple desire of the committee to get such a bill as will contribute as much as is practicable to the relief of the Treasury and at the same time make as little burden upon the people as possible. They do not desire to see this anomaly in the Post-Office Department, the main feature of the Department, the letter-carrying, being at such a high rate as to produce a large profit, and that profit all consumed by the carrying of third-class matter. That has been the struggle in the committee and in the Department. The Department thought the service would be best maintained by having three different rates, one for a short distance, one for longer distances, and another rate for all matter over a prescribed limit. The committee, feeling the force of the argument urged so well by the Senator from California and by other members of the Senate, yielded to that argument so much as to make but two rates. Still the objection exists. Uniformity is desirable in everything. I do not see any more reason why there should be a distinction in distances here than in the horse-railroad cars of this city, or anything of that kind. While in justice and in point of fact, as the Senator from Ohio has stated, it costs more to carry a long distance than it does a shorter distance, and it ought to pay more, yet uniformity is so much more desirable that on the whole it has come to be the practice of the entire business community to yield to that element. Therefore, and upon consultation with the committee—I have the approval of the committee—I shall venture to adapt this bill itself to that principle by moving to strike out of it the distinction of distances, and make it one uniform rate of one cent an ounce. I think the bill will then be more acceptable.

Mr. LOGAN. What will be the effect of that?

Mr. DAWES. That will be the rate of last year modified by arranging and defining what is third-class matter, making transient newspapers cheaper, which was the main objection to the bill of last year. With that end in view, I move to strike out of the sixth line of the second section the words "of one thousand miles or less," and to strike out the eighth and ninth lines. If this amendment shall prevail it will be necessary to have a letter stricken out of a word in another line.

Mr. WEST. How would that part of the bill read if amended as the Senator now suggests?

Mr. DAWES. It would then read:

For all distances, one cent for each ounce or fractional part thereof.

That will meet the objection of the Senator from California, and I think will make the bill acceptable, with perhaps the modification suggested by the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator propose this as an amendment to perfect the text of the bill?

Mr. DAWES. I move this amendment to the text of the bill, which will be first in order, before the amendment of the Senator from Kansas and the amendment to that amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SARGENT. I entirely concur with the Senator from Massachusetts that the principal complaint which arose on the law of last year was from persons who had been accustomed to send transient newspapers, substituting them in a certain sense for letters, and who suddenly found that the postage was doubled, or what was a greater inconvenience yet, they, not knowing this change had been made, that their papers were detained in the post-offices. I remember seeing at the San Francisco post-office last summer, a month or two after the law passed, a very large pile of papers sufficiently stamped under the old law, transient newspapers, which were detained for postage. I have no doubt that was the case in a great many of the post-offices of the country, especially the principal ones. A large number of our people are accustomed to send these papers, giving an account of a death or a marriage, or of some circumstance of family interest or even of party interest, to some friend at a distance. So far as the newspapers themselves are concerned, those papers have discharged their functions. They are not any part of the trade, but they come in the possession of individuals who use them for this purpose, and send them to their friends. It is certainly a diffusion of intelligence, and it is not in the nature of business. It is simply a convenience, and not a business. I think that the law should be reformed in this particular. I believe, if the discrimination had been made at that time, and perhaps in reference to manuscript proofs and a few things of that kind, there would have been no particular clamor raised against the law.

I desire, before I sit down, to say a word or two with reference to the position taken by my friend from Wisconsin, [Mr. HOWE.] I advanced the opinion, which is somewhat firm with me, that the Post-Office Department may properly bear certain deficiencies in consideration of the great public good done, and that it is a public good as well as an individual advantage. The Senator replies to me that the letter which he receives or sends is a matter of interest only to him or to the individual who receives or sends the letter; and that any package he may send or receive falls under exactly the same category; that consequently it is not a public advantage at all; that it is a matter in which the public have no interest. I say to him it is of public interest in the same manner as the observation of storms is of public interest and of particular individual interest at the same time. Although he may not be a merchant and may not have any risk upon goods or ships which are sent to sea, and although he may not be a farmer whose interest it is to be told of the weather for the benefit of his crops, yet, notwithstanding, as an individual in the community he is interested; and the community are properly taxed, if it is useful, to keep it up. The Senator says that he eats bread, and therefore has an interest in common with the farmer. His children have the benefit of intelligence which is circulated through the mail, if he does not take a newspaper himself or if one should not be taken in his family. Of course it is inconceivable to suppose that, for I know he takes a great many. This intelligence is distributed through the mails and illuminates the community in which he lives, makes property safer, makes less crime, and reflects an indirect advantage upon him as an individual. Therefore the mail is of as much advantage to him as an individual and also as a member of society in the community as is the observation of storms. It is more important, perhaps, as the benefit of intelligence is above that of mere animal food. It is food of the mind rather than that of the body.

If the Senator is correct in his assumption that each particular letter and each particular package is of interest only to the individual to whom it is sent, and that there is no general public benefit in the privilege which each one has to send it, then each particular letter and package ought to pay its full expense, and a State wherein the receipts from the Post-Office Department are greater than the expenses ought certainly not to be called upon to make up deficiencies in other States. In the State of Wisconsin alone, as my friend will find by examing the Sixth Auditor's report, there is a deficiency of $150,000 between the receipts and expenditures, while in the State of Massachusetts there is a very large excess of receipts over expenditures. Why should Massachusetts be taxed, why should money be taken out of the general revenue which taxes Massachusetts in order to pay for that particular package of silks which, he says, he might receive by mail? So New York and New Jersey pay, each of them, a considerable excess over the amount of expenditures caused by the mail service within their borders. My own State has a deficiency of about one-third that of Wisconsin. Why should they be taxed in order to pay the deficiency in my State? The answer comes at once, because there is a public advantage in the mail system, because it is not merely of advantage to the individual who sends or receives a letter or sends or receives a package, but on account of the public benefit. Upon that principle we forbid by law any person carrying mailable matter as a business outside of the mail. Why interfere with the business on any other principle except that it is a system beneficial to the public which must be protected and which is liable to be broken down, provided the express companies are allowed to come in competition with it? For that reason you require an express company carrying a letter to put upon it the full amount of postage the same as though it went through the mail. That can only be excused upon the ground that the letters sent and received are not merely for the particular benefit of the individual sending or reeicving them, but that there is a benefit to the public like that received from the observations of storms or like that received from the printing of the decisions of courts which administer justice. If this were not so, then all deficiencies made on account of postal service and paid out of the Treasury would be entirely unjust; it is the duty of everything going or coming to pay its own way. Most certainly, if the Senator's view is correct, it would be requisite that the inequality between sections should be corrected and that letters should be carried more cheaply from one New England State to another where there is no deficiency in the postal service, but rather an excess, than they should be carried between Wisconsin and California or Wisconsin and Michigan, in both of which there is a deficiency in postage.

I do not believe that is the true theory. This service is a public benefit, and I think the Treasury may be well called upon to make up deficiences which arise from conferring this benefit upon the people.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] to the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the bill by striking out in line 6 of the second section the words "of one thousand miles or less;" so as to make the clause read:

For all distances, one cent for each ounce or fractional part thereof.

And then to strike out in lines 8 and 9 the following words:

For all distances over one thousand miles, two cents for each ounce or fractional part thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. In the fourth line of the second section I move to strike out the letter "s" in postages; so as to read "postage."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I ask the Senator from Ohio to suggest his amendment in reference to circulars.

Mr. SHERMAN. Circulars are already included in the bill. They are in the bill all right.

Mr. DAWES. The bill is satisfactory to the Senator?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir. I desired to amend the amendment of the Senator from Kansas so that if his substitute were adopted the rate should be one cent per ounce. My own amendment is to the substitute.

Mr. HARVEY. Then the Senator from Ohio withdraws the amendment which he offered to my amendment?

Mr. SHERMAN. If it is to be adopted, I prefer to have it amended before it is voted on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio insist on his amendment to the amendment?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, which the Secretary will read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 8 of the amendment it is proposed to strike out the words "two ounces" and insert "ounce," so as to read:

Postage shall be charged thereon at the rate of one cent for each ounce or fraction thereof.

Mr. SHERMAN. In order to save time and not delay the Senate any longer, I withdraw the amendment and will allow the vote to be taken on the proposition of the Senator from Kansas, believing now that it will be voted down.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment is withdrawn, and the question recurs on the substitute proposed by the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. HARVEY.]

Mr. HARVEY. I wish simply to state that I voted for the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts as it was in the nature of an amendment to perfect the text of the bill, the question coming up on perfecting the text before a vote could be taken on the amendment which I had offered. I voted for it simply because of the fact that if my substitute failed the bill of the committee as amended would be less objectionable in some degree than if passed as reported from the committee. I urge the adoption of the substitute for reasons which I stated at the time I offered it.

It is admitted on all hands that the amendment to the law which was made on the 3d of March last year was made hurriedly and was made without understanding. The change then made in the law was very badly received by the country. The people of the country are very much dissatisfied with the rates imposed by that law, as well as dissatisfied with the manner in which it was made.

As I stated at the time I offered my amendment, it is simply a transcript of a bill which passed the House of Representatives on the 26th of January of the present year, going back and restoring the rates that existed prior to our mistake of last year. That, I think, is the proper way to settle the difficulty in which we find ourselves placed. Let us go back to the rates which were satisfactory to the whole country; and then, after giving the Department time, the committee time, and the people of the country time to examine into this question, if there are any reasons why the old rates should be changed, let a comprehensive measure be reported with a view to righting whatever wrongs may exist, not taking a single class of mail matter and attempting to impose upon it such rates and such aggravating exactions as to virtually drive it from the mails. The effect of the bill reported by the committee would not be, as the Senator from Maine claims, to relieve the Post-Office Department from any deficiency which has occurred; for it has been shown conclusively that the mail may be carried at the old rates and afford a remunerative return. According to the doctrine the Senator from Maine advanced a while ago, if you drive third-class matter out you would reduce the expenses of the Department proportionately. If you carry out that doctrine and drive all mail matter out, you would have the cost of maintaining the establishment without any revenue coming in at all. The Senator says the expenses increase in proportion to the amount of business done by the Department; but I am sure that when this matter is investigated the Postmaster-General himself will become satisfied that, after he roots out the straw-bidders and the job printing that is done in the Post-Office Department, and the manufacture of envelopes, and a good many other abuses, the revenue will be found to be very much increased, if the rates on third-class matter are left as they were prior to the 3d of March, 1875. I am well convinced that the people of the country would be much better satisfied if that were done.

Mr. PADDOCK. In the interest of agriculture, which is the basis of all our wealth and prosperity, I move to insert at the end of the amendment of the Senator from Kansas the words:

But the postage on seeds, cuttings, bulbs, roots, scions, State and county fair premium lists, and State agricultural reports, shall be at one-half the rates hereinbefore established for other mail matter of the third class.

Mr. HARVEY. I suggest to my friend, the Senator from Nebraska, that his amendment can be offered after the substitute is adopted; and if the substitute is not adopted it can then be offered as an amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Nebraska is now in order.

Mr. PADDOCK. It is in order as I understand, but I do not care to stand in the way of a direct vote upon the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let us take the vote on the substitute first.

Mr. PADDOCK. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska withdraws the amendment to the amendment. The question before the Senate is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. HARVEY,] which will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

That all mailable matter of the third class, referred to in sections 3878 and 3911 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, may weigh not exceeding four pounds for each package thereof; and postage shall be charged thereon at the rate of one cent for each two ounces or fraction thereof; that all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed; but nothing herein contained shall be held o change or amend section 3879 of said Revised Statutes.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I will take the liberty of renewing the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska, to insert after the word "thereof," in the seventh line of the amendment, the following:

But the postage on seeds, cuttings, bulbs, roots, scions, State and county fair premium lists, and State agricultural reports shall be at one-half the rates hereinbefore established for other mail matter of the third class.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected—ayes 14, noes not counted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARVEY] as a substitute for the bill reported from the committee. The yeas and nays have been ordered upon the amendment, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLAYTON, (when Mr. DORSEY'S name was called.) I desire to say that I am paired with my colleague, Mr. DORSEY, on this question. I would vote for the amendment, and he would vote against it if he were here.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the call of the roll; which resulted—yeas 25, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bogy, Booth, Burnside, Cameron of Wisconsin, Cockrell, Dennis, Edmunds, Harvey, Hitchcock, Ingalls, Jones of Florida, Kelly, McCreery, McDonald, McMillan, Merrimon, Mitchell, Oglesby, Paddock, Ransom, Sargent, Wadleigh, Whyte, Withers, and Wright—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Bayard, Boutwell, Caperton, Cooper, Cragin, Davis, Dawes, Eaton, English, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Hamilton, Hamlin, Howe, Kernan, Key, Logan, Maxey, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Norwood, Sharon, Sherman, and Windom—25.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Bruce, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Christiancy, Clayton, Conkling, Conover, Dorsey, Ferry, Gordon, Johnston, Jones of Nevada, Morton, Patterson, Randolph, Robertson, Saulsbury, Spencer, Stevenson, Thurman, Wallace, and West—23.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. PADDOCK. I now renew my amendment, adding the word "catalogue" to the words which I proposed before. After the word "thereof," in the seventh line of the second section of the bill, I move to insert:

But the postage on seeds, cuttings, bulbs, roots, scions, State and county fair premium lists, and State agricultural reports, shall be at one-half the rates hereinbefore established for other mail matter of the third class.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. PADDOCK. Upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WITHERS. Will the Senator from Nebraska accept an addition to his amendment?

Mr PADDOCK. If it is a good one, I will.

Mr. WITHERS. Will he agree to add school-books to the list? I would then vote for his amendment.

Mr. PADDOCK. I think that would be putting on too much.

Mr. WITHERS. I move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska by adding "school-books" after the word "catalogues."

Mr. SHERMAN. It is pretty hard to tell what a school-book is. I should like to know who is to decide that question.

Mr. PADDOCK. My only objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia is that it would cumber up and load down my amendment. It is impossible to define exactly what school-books are. They may embrace all the educational books that are printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia moves to insert after the word "catalogues," in the third line of the amendment, the words "school-books." The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I call for the yeas and nays on the amendment to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WITHERS. I will state that it has been suggested to me that the term "school-books" is rather too indefinite and includes more than I designed when I offered it. I designed to restrict it to school-books used in the common schools. I did not design to make it apply to scientific works used in colleges, universities, and high schools, but to books used in the common schools of the country.

Mr. KERNAN. I want to say to my friend from Virginia that among the books used in the common schools of the State of New York are classical books in Latin and Greek. We teach those languages in the common schools of New York.

Mr. PADDOCK. I hope the Senator from Virginia will withdraw his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia modify his amendment?

Mr. WITHERS. Instead of school-books I would say "books used in common schools."

Mr. BURNSIDE. I suggest to the Senator from Virginia to make it apply to reading, spelling, and the ordinary school-books.

Mr. WITHERS. I will state very frankly that I am in favor myself of the transmission of all these things at low rates, but I think there are arguments in favor of permitting books used in primary schools particularly, which do not apply perhaps to other books. If I cannot get all books transmitted through the mails at low rates, I want to get as many as possible, and especially those in which the poorer people of the country, and of my State especially, are very much interested; that is, such books as are used in the primary public schools.

Mr. LOGAN. I merely desire to ask the Senator from Virginia a question. I have not taken any part in this discussion, and I do not desire to do so now. I wish to know if the Senator can say that his constituents will obtain those books any cheaper if we reduce the postage on them?

Mr. WITHERS. Yes, sir; I know they can.

Mr. LOGAN. I wish the Senator would explain in what way.

Mr. WITHERS. By ordering them from the publishers and getting them at first prices, without paying the profits which have to be paid to the intermediate hands through which they pass.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not know anything about it myself, but I have been told, and I presume it is true to some extent at least, that the difference is about this: I believe the usual rule is that when books are sold by agents in the country they are allowed about 30 per cent. by the publishers, the large book houses in New York and other places. The only difference is that the publishers would get the cheap rate and save that percentage for themselves, and it would not be a saving to the purchaser. That is what I have been told; I do not know how true it is. I expect it works a good deal like it did when we took off the tariff on coffee. We took it off at one end and put on the price at the other end, and the consumer gets it now at the same price. That will be about the result so far as books are concerned. At least that is my information in reference to it.

While I am up, I will say in reference to the vote that has just been taken, which was the difference between eight cents a pound and sixteen cents a pound on these packages, that I voted for sixteen cents a pound for several reasons. I want to give one reason that induced me to do it. I have been told, and truthfully, that hames used on horses for plowing and other purposes are shipped through the post-office, because by putting a pair of hames together, and calling each pair of hames a package, they weigh less than four pounds; and that hames have absolutely been shipped from New York to Arizona Territory through the post-office. I was told that by a man who runs the mail cars, and who knows it to be a fact. I voted as I did for the reason that advantage is taken of this privilege by shipping every character of articles. I do not think it is any cheaper to the consumer, even with reference to books, to reduce the cost of carrying these packages lower than sixteen cents a pound.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I sympathize with the purpose of the Senator from Virginia in order to obtain books for the use of the poor of the country at a less price; but I venture to assure him that his proposition here will not secure that object. No matter what the postage may be, there is not a publisher in all the country who will not send books and pay the postage prior to mailing them and deliver them at the retail price, and that is the lowest price which you can obtain them for, either from the publisher or from the retail dealer at home. Therefore, to reduce the postage upon books with any expectation that the purchaser will receive a book at any less cost is entirely erroneous. You may look at the advertisements of all these publishers and you will find a foot-note to almost all of them that all of the books advertised will be sent by mail upon the receipt of the published price.

It seems to me that the object of the Senator, which is a good one, cannot be accomplished in this way. It merely enables the publisher to get a little greater profit by reducing a small percentage of the cost in the mail. Further than this, the description of school-books is a broad one, and would, of course, include the large editions of Webster's, Richardson's, and other dictionaries.

Mr. WITHERS. That is not the school edition.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. They would be so considered. The description of the books to be sent by mail when confined merely to public-school books would include vastly too much. At all events, nothing is to be gained by it. As the Senator will see, it is only increasing the profit of the publishers.

Mr. WITHERS. A word or two in reply to both the Senators who have addressed the Senate in reference to the amendment which I have just offered. There is a good deal of truth in what has been said by both, I am aware, but I also think that I am fully cognizant of what I speak and of my motive in offering the amendment. Notwithstanding the confident declaration of both of those Senators, I am still inclined to the opinion that the adoption of the amendment which I propose will enable the people to procure the books which are included in the amendment at a less price than they would otherwise procure them. It is true, as has been stated by the Senator from Illinois and also by the Senator from Vermont, that the publishers have a retail price at which they will furnish their books, and that the agents of publishers, traveling through the country, will furnish those books at the same price, receiving themselves from the publishers a percentage varying from 10 to 40 per cent. upon the retail price as published; but, in many of the States, and notably in my own, a different arrangement for supplying schools prevails. There an arrangement has been made by the public-school board of the State with the different publishers to furnish at a certain discount certain dealers who themselves, store-keepers, country store-keepers, are to be allowed a certain percentage upon the books which they buy for their customers. I do not refer to cities or places where the facilities for communication with commercial centers are great, but out in remote country neighborhoods the person who wishes to buy a reader or speller or a primary arithmetic can procure the book at a cheaper rate by sending directly to the publisher than he can by purchasing from the country merchant at the nearest cross-road, because he gets the benefit of the percentage which is allowed to that merchant. Although, as I said yesterday, the amount saved to each of the individuals is small, it is a matter to them of considerable importance, as I know by the repeated representations which have been made to me in numberless instances of those who had been accustomed, prior to the change in the law which took place a little over a year ago, to purchase books directly from the publisher and who complain of the increased cost and difficulty arising out of the present law. To remedy that evil and enable them to get these books at the lowest cost, I have offered the amendment, and it is for the Senate to decide whether they will adopt it or not.

Mr. WRIGHT. I would be very glad if the amendment to the amendment as proposed now be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the bill by inserting after "thereof," in line 7 of section 2, the following:

But the postage on seeds, cuttings, bulbs, roots, scions, State and county fair premium-lists, catalogues, and State agricultural reports shall be at one-half the rates hereinbefore established for other mail matter of the third class.

It is proposed to amend the amendment by inserting after the word "catalogues" the words "books used in primary public schools."

Mr. WRIGHT. While I sympathize entirely with the motive influencing the Senator from Virginia in offering this amendment, I am opposed to it in the first place for the reason that I think in the language used in all our enactments we ought to use such words as will leave as little as possible open to construction. It is always dangerous and, as I think, vicious in our legislation, when langnage shall be employed that is indefinite and uncertain. I think that the language here proposed to be employed is open to this objection. It is utterly impossible to tell, when you come to the construction of the language, what is or is not included in it. It has already been suggested by the Senator from New York [Mr. KERNAN] that in their public schools in that State they teach the classics, that they use the Greek and the Latin text-books. They do not use those so much in my State, and yet it is done to a certain extent.

Mr. ALLISON. They are used in all our high schools.

Mr. WRIGHT. In all of our high schools connected with our public schools, a part of our system, they do use them. It is suggested that the unabridged dictionaries would come in under this language. It is said again that that would not be the case. That is just as much a book that is used in our public schools as the primer is. It is not used by so many scholars, and yet it is used, and is just as much a necessity in the schools as the spelling-book. It is consulted every day by those in the advanced classes and by teachers, and in my State it is provided by law that it shall be furnished to the several schools and paid for out of the public fund. If you adopt this amendment you enter a field that is as wide and as uncertain as you can possibly imagine in legislative language.

Again, the experience in the States of the West, and in other tates as well, I think, is that these books are furnished largely upon contracts by the purchaser; that they are sent out in large numbers, in large packages, in boxes, in sacks, the publishers making a contract with the school officers. They are sent out in this way, with a contract to pay them so much at the publishing house; and by making such an arrangement as is proposed by the amendment you do not reduce the cost of the books one cent, in my judgment.

I think then, in the first place, because it is uncertain as to what it includes and, in the next place, because, in my judgment, it will reduce the cost, but is actually entering on a system of legislation in the language employed that ought always to be avoided, it is best to leave this amendment and not press it.

Mr. WITHERS. I would say that the objections urged by the Senator from New York, and also some of those urged by the Senator who has just taken his seat, are fully met, I think, by the modification of the amendment which has just been accepted by me and reported. It could scarcely be alleged, for example, that classical works come properly under the denomination of "books used in primary public schools;" and I think the same answer might apply to the objection raised by the Senator from Iowa with regard to the unabridged dictionaries. While in some States they may be required to be purchased for the use of the public schools, a different provision exists in other States, and in no proper sense can they be called primary public-school books. There is an edition of Webster's Dictionary, as well as of Worcester's, which is known as the school dictionary, and which is the book used in schools. I was under the impression also that the term "primary common schools" carried with it as specific a signification as any other term which can be used in connection with the subject; but if the Senator from Iowa can suggest a more specific designation, so as to define more clearly and unequivocally the particular class of books to which I design to allude, and which I am sure he understands as fully as I do, I am perfectly willing to accept it in lieu of the amendment I have offered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. WITHERS] to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. PADDOCK,] upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 22, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Bogy, Boutwell, Burnside, Cameron of Wisconsin, Cockrell, Conkling Cooper, Davis, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Jones of Florida, Kelly, McDonald, Merrimon, Norwood, Paddock, Ransom, Sargent, Whyte, and Withers—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Clayton, Cragin, Dawes, Dennis, Eaton, English, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Hamilton, Hamlin, Kernan, Logan, McMillan, Maxey, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Sharon, Sherman, Windom, and Wright—24.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Booth, Bruce, Caperton, Christiancy, Conover, Dorsey, Edmunds, Gordon, Ingalls, Johnston, Jones of Nevada, Key, McCreery, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Oglesby, Patterson, Randolph, Robertson, Saulsbury, Spencer, Stevenson, Thurman, Wadleigh, Wallace, and West—27.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. PADDOCK,] upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. DAVIS. For information, I should like to ask the Senator from Maine who has charge of the bill whether I am correct in my thought that newspapers sent from the regular office of publication are not affected in any way by the bill or by the substitute?

Mr. HAMLIN. They are not.

Mr. DAVIS. Again, by the bill transient newspapers and pamphlets will go at a less rate per ounce than by the substitute?

Mr. HAMLIN. A little.

Mr. DAVIS. I am correct in that?

Mr. HAMLIN. By the bill reported from the committee a paper weighing three ounces will go all over the country for one cent. By the substitute that sum would only carry a paper of two ounces. By the present bill if two additional ounces were added to the weight of the paper, it would be two cents. There it would be just like the other, only the other would be two cents for four ounces and the committee's bill would be two cents for five ounces. So it is a little better than the old law.

Mr. DAVIS. The bill, as I understand, for transient matter is less?

Mr. HAMLIN. A little less.

Mr. DAVIS. A little less than the amendment; and that has no reference to distance?

Mr. HAMLIN. None.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. PADDOCK.]

The question being taken by yeas and nays resulted—yeas 20, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Bogy, Booth, Burnside, Cameron of Wisconsin, Cockrell, Frelinghuysen, Harvey, Hitchcock, McDonald, McMillan, Merrimon, Oglesby, Paddock, Ransom, Sargent, Wadleigh, Windom, Withers, and Wright—20

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Boutwell, Conkling, Cooper, Cragin, Davis, Dawes, Dennis, Eaton, English, Ferry, Goldthwaite, Hamilton, Hamlin, Howe, Kernan, Key, Logan, Maxey, Morrill of Maine, Norwood, Sharon, Sherman, and Whyte—24.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Bruce, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Caperton, Christiancy, Clayton, Conover, Dorsey, Edmunds, Gordon, Ingalls, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Kelly, McCreery, Mitchell, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Patterson, Randolph, Robertson, Saulsbury, Spencer, Stevenson, Thurman, Wallace, and West—29.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WRIGHT. I call the attention of the Senator from Maine to an amendment that I propose in the fifth section, and I trust he will not object to it. I propose to add after the word "magazines," in the first line of the fifth section, the words "and also reports made by charitable or benevolent associations or boards;" so that the section will read:

That transient newspapers and magazines, and also reports made by charitable or benevolent associations or boards, shall be admitted to and transmitted in the mails at the rate of one cent for every three ounces, &c.

I will state the object I have in offering this amendment. I intend this to refer to the annual reports that are made by our charitable and benevolent institutions. They are of course made and circulated without compensation, as far as the boards are concerned, intended to give to the public information of their transactions during the year; and inasmuch as they receive no compensation for them, as it is a mere charitable or benevolent work, it occurred to me that they ought to be put as low as the lowest of any of the articles that are put upon this list. My attention has been called to this by several letters from persons connected with these associations; and it is really, as the law stands now and as proposed here, a very heavy tax upon them from year to year to meet this postage. Inasmuch as the means that they raise they obtain from voluntary contributions of the people to aid and assist in these benevolent and charitable works and enterprises, it seems to me but fair and just that this reduction should be made.

Mr. HAMLIN. I cannot conceive that there is any ample or good reason why this clause should go in here beyond a hundred others just like it. It is said to be exceptional. If you except this, you may find a hundred others just like it; it only makes the difference between two cents for five ounces and a cent an ounce. I am sorry the Senator has thought it his duty to offer the amendment. There are many other things which might go in with as much propriety; these belong in the other class in my judgment, and should remain there.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That mailable matter of the third class shall embrace all pamphlets, occasional publications, regular publications devoted primarily to advertising purposes, or for free circulation or for circulation at nominal subscription rates, prices-current, catalogues, annuals, handbills, posters, unsealed circulars, prospectuses, books bound or unbound, book-manuscripts, proof-sheets, maps, prints, engravings, blanks, flexible patterns, samples, merchandise, sample cards, phono-graphic paper, letter envelopes, postal envelopes and wrappers, cards, plain and ornamental paper, photographic representations, seeds, cuttings, bulbs, roots, scions, and all other matter which may be declared mailable by law as third-class matter, and all other articles, not above the weight prescribed by law, which are not from their form or nature liable to destroy, deface, or otherwise injure the contents of the mail bags or the person of any one engaged in the postal service. All liquids, poisons, glass, explosive materials, and obscene books or papers shall be excluded from the mails.

SEC. 2. That packages of matter of the third class shall not exceed four pounds in weight, and shall be subject to examination and rates of postage as hereinafter provided:

The postage on mail matter of the third class shall be at the following rates:

For all distances, one cent for each ounce or fractional part thereof.

Every package of the third class of mail matter shall bear the post-mark of the office at which the same shall be mailed for transportation.

SEC. 3. That postages on third-class matter shall be prepaid by stamps. If, however, the postage on third-class matter mailed at an office shall be less than the full amount above prescribed, in cases where the sender is known such sender shall be notified of the fact, and the amount of postage due shall be collected from such sender before the same shall be transmitted by mail. In case the sender is not known, and where it has not been the evident intention of the party so depositing the package to place less than full postage thereon, such package shall be forwarded, and double the amount of deficient postage shall be collected from the party to whom it is addressed or delivered at its proper destination.

SEC. 4. That the sender of any article of the third class of mail matter may write his or her name and address therein or on the outside thereof, with the word "from" above or preceding the same; or may write briefly or print on any package the number and names of the articles inclosed. Publishers of newspapers and periodicals may print on the wrappers of newspapers or magazines sent from the office of publication to regular subscribers the time to which subscription therefor has been paid.

SEC. 5. That transient newspapers and magazines shall be admitted to, and transmitted in, the mails at the rate of one cent for every three ounces or fractional part thereof, and one cent for each two additional ounces or fractional part thereof.

SEC. 6. That this act shall take effect on and after the 1st day of July, 1876.

Mr. HARVEY. I desire to renew the amendment which I offered in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, and insert the following:

That all mailable matter of the third class, referred to in sections 3878 and 3911 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, may weigh not exceeding four pounds for each package thereof; and postage shall be charged thereon at the rate of one cent for each two ounces or fraction thereof; that all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed; but nothing herein contained shall be held to change or amend section 3879 of said Revised Statutes.

Mr. McDONALD. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CLAYTON. On this question I am paired with my colleague, [Mr. DORSEY.] If he were present I should vote "yea" and he would vote "nay" on this amendment.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 23, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bogy, Booth, Burnside, Cameron of Wisconsin, Dennis, Harvey, Hitchcock, Ingalls, Kelly, McCreery, Mc Donald, McMillan, Merrimon, Oglesby, Paddock, Randolph, Sargent, Stevenson, Wadleigh, Wallace, Whyte, Windom, Withers, and Wright—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Bayard, Boutwell, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Caperton, Cooper, Cragin, Davis, Dawes, Eaton, English, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Hamilton, Hamlin, Howe, Kernan, Key, Logan, Maxey, Morrill of Maine, Norwood, Sharon, Sherman, and Windom—26.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Bruce, Christiancy, Clayton, Cockrell, Conkling, Conover, Dorsey, Edmunds, Gordon, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Mitchell, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Patterson, Ransom, Robertson, Saulsbury, Spencer, Thurman, and West—24.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DAVIS. I believe the bill is now open to amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. DAVIS. I believe that merchandise of all kinds ought to pay its own expense in the mail. At the same time I think that the third-class matter according to this bill embraces a number of articles which ought not to be embraced with merchandise. With that view I move to strike out all after the word "of" in the third line of section 1 down to the word "proof-sheets" in line 9, and in section 5 after the word "newspapers" to insert what I propose to strike out in section 1. Then a number of articles that are now in the third-class by the bill, including circulars, prices-current, catalogues, annuals, handbills, posters, &c., will go in as what are known as transient newspapers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from West Virginia will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out in section 1 the following words:

All pamphlets, occasional publications, regular publications devoted primarily to advertising purposes, or for free circulation or for circulation at nominal subscription rates, prices-current, catalogues, annuals, hand-bills, posters, unsealed circulars, prospectuses, books bound or unbound, book manuscripts, proof-sheets; and to insert those words after the word "newspapers," in section 5 line 1.

Mr. DAVIS. It will be noticed that my amendment is intended to transfer a number of articles now in the first section, under third-class matter, over to the fifth section, which covers transient newspapers, making the postage on the articles named there less than it would be if they remained in their present classification in the bill.

Mr. HAMLIN. I hope the amendment will not be adopted, and I hope my friend from West Virginia will not press it. That matter has long been embraced in the third class, and I think it unwise to change it. It certainly does not come within that category of intelligence which is of a general character. It does not come, I think, within any rule which has governed or should govern us in settling the principles involved in this bill. I hope the Senator will not press the amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. I am firmly of the opinion that merchandise should pay what it costs to transport it; but there are a number of other articles in the third class, such as hand-bills, posters, and circulars, that are of general advantage, and I believe that they ought to go at less postage than merchandise. For that reason, in good faith I have offered the amendment and hope that it will be adopted.

Mr. HAMLIN. One word more. I think they are all matters of a business character affording an individual an opportunity, who may be engaged in any of the various businesses to which these subjects relate, to do his business through the post-office less than other people. They do not come within the category of circulating information. The section to which the Senator refers—the fifth section—applies to newspapers and magazines which are of that character. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us have the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

Mr. SARGENT. It is better than the present law. Withdraw the call.

Mr. COCKRELL. Very well.

The bill was passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

A bill (H. R. No. 2689) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Sioux City, Iowa;

A bill (H. R. No. 2479) granting American registry to the Canadian steam ferry-boat Geneva, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 2403) to extend to the port of La Crosse, in the State of Wisconsin, the privileges of sections 2930 to 2997, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2799) to amend certain sections of titles 48 and 52 of the Revised Statutes of the United States concerning commerce and navigation and the regulation of steam-vessels.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. EATON, it was Ordered, That the original papers relating to the claim of H. and S. Sayles against the United States be taken from the files of the Senate, copies of the same being filed with the Secretary.

On motion of Mr. HITCHCOCK, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of James Millinger be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPAVEMENT OF PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 680) authorizing the repavement of Pennsylvania avenue was made the special order to be considered at the conclusion of the bill just passed. That bill is now before the Senate.

Mr. LOGAN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I hope the Senator will allow us to have an executive session.

Mr. LOGAN. I withdraw my motion for that purpose.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seven minutes spent in executive session, the doors were re-opened, and (at four o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, April 12, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

MINNESOTA CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I am directed by the Committee of Elections, to whom was referred the case of E. St. Julien Cox, claiming to be elected to a seat in this House for the second congressional district of Minnesota, to report the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Horace B. Strait was duly elected and is entitled to retain his seat which he now holds for the second congressional district of Minnesota.

The SPEAKER. Is there a minority report?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. This is a unanimous report.

The report was laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

MEMBER SWORN.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has received the certificate of the governor of the State of Connecticut, certifying the election of Hon. John T. Wait for the third congressional district in that State, for the unexpired term of Hon. Henry H. Starkweather, deceased.

The certificate was read by the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. These credentials being in due form of law, the member-elect will present himself at the bar of the House and take the oath of office.

Mr. WAIT appeared at the bar and duly qualified by taking the oath of office prescribed by section 1756 of the Revised Statutes.

RETURN OF BILL TO THE SENATE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to direct the attention of the House to the fact that some days ago the Senate returned to the House the House bill No. 700 rejected, and that yesterday the Senate sent a request that the House would return the bill to the Senate. Is it the pleasure of the House that that request be granted and the bill returned? The Chair hears no objection, and that order is made.

Mr. COX. What bill is that?

The SPEAKER. It is the bill (H. R. No. 700) to incorporate the Mutual Fire-Insurance Company of the District of Columbia.

The Chair now desires to lay before the House a matter of privilege.

Mr. HOAR. If the Chair will permit me to make a remark, I desire to say that it seems to me that the request of the Senate for the return of the bill indicated raises a very serious question. This bill, as I understand, has passed the House and then been rejected by the other branch of the Government and has been returned with a certificate of that fact to the House. Now, if that be true, how can the House return it to the Senate? Suppose the Senate should now pass it, unless the House passes it all over again as from the beginning, it cannot take effect as law.

I take the liberty of calling the attention of the Chair to the fact that there have been two or three requests, certainly one previous request of the Senate of this kind. One was a request to return to the Senate a bill which had already been signed by the Speaker and any change in which would therefore have changed the effect of the Speaker's certificate of the action of this House. That request was afterward withdrawn. But it seems to me we are getting into a very loose practice in regard to making these requests between the two bodies. I object to granting the request of the Senate in this case, and move that it be referred to the Committee on Rules. They can report upon it in a very short time.

The SPEAKER. In the judgment of the Chair, the objection of the gentleman from Massachusetts comes too late.

Mr. HOAR. I move to reconsider the action of the House in granting the request of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say that there will be other opportunities for considering this matter, and at any rate the general question may be referred to the Committee on Rules. He also desires to say that, governing ourselves by the considerations of high courtesy that always have prevailed between the two Houses, it seems to the Chair that it is the duty of the House to assume that the Senate in making this request understood itself and did it with the distinct purpose of considering its previous action, and to take thereafter such other and further action as would be consistent with its duty and with our privileges. The Chair prefers that this matter shall stand upon the present order.

Mr. HOAR. In compliance with the suggestion of the Chair, I will withdraw the motion to reconsider and let this pass by unanimous consent. But the Chair will pardon me for saying that the other day, on the suggestion that the courtesy between the two bodies required it, the House let pass an application—which was afterward reconsidered—to return to the Senate a bill which had already passed both Houses and been signed by the Speaker and was out of our power for any such purpose. I do not wish to interpose any objection, but merely to call the attention of the House to the great gravity of these requests.

Mr. RANDALL. I think this case is somewhat different from the one to which the gentleman from Massachusetts has just referred. That was a case where the Senate probably desired to make a correction in a bill passed and about to become a law. But this, as I understand the facts, is a bill that passed the House, was sent to the Senate and defeated there, and a notification was sent here that the bill was defeated. The Senate however, as I am informed, have reconsidered their action.

HALLET KILBOURN.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House a communication from the Sergeant-at-Arms, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., April 11, 1876.

SIR: I respectfully report to you, and through you to the House of Representatives, that on this day a writ of habeas corpus has been served upon me, commanding me as the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives to have the body of Hallet Kilbourn, who is now in my custody, before one of the justices of the supreme court of the District of Columbia at ten o'clock in the forenoon on the 12th day of April, 1876, to do and receive whatever shall then and there be considered in that behalf. Said Hallet Kilbourn is now detained in my custody by the order and judgment of the House of Representatives, because of an adjudged contempt of its authority.

I respectfully ask the instructions of the House as to what my action in the premises shall be.

A copy of said writ is attached hereto.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

JOHN G. THOMPSON,
Sergeant-at-Arms House of Representatives.

Hon. M. C. KERR,
Speaker House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read the writ.

The Clerk read as follows:

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, to wit:

The President of the United States to John G. Thompson, Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America, greeting:

You are hereby commanded to have the body of Hallet Kilbourn, detained under your custody, as it is said, together with the day and cause of his being taken and detained, by whatever name he may be called in the same, before one of the justices of the supreme court of the said District, at the court-house, in the city of Washington, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of the 12th day of this instant, to do and receive whatever shall then and there be considered of in this behalf, and have then and there this writ.

Witness, D. K. Cartter, chief justice of said court, the 11th day of April, 1876.

A true copy:

R. J. MEIGS, Clerk, &c.,
By R. J. MEIGS, JR., Assistant.

Mr. NEW. Mr. Speaker, in view of the gravity of the matter involved in this communication from the Sergeant-at-Arms, I offer for adoption the following resolution, upon which I demand the previous question:

Resolved, That the matter of habeas corpus relating to Hallet Kilbourn, a recusant witness, as just called to the attention of the House, through the Speaker, by the Sergeant-at-Arms, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary for their examination and opinion as to what should be the action of the Sergeant-at-Arms in reference thereto, and that said committee report to the House on Saturday next.

Mr. KASSON. I would suggest to the gentleman that he say "as soon as possible." This is a question affecting the liberty of a citizen, and I think it better to say "as soon as possible" than to fix a day.

Mr. NEW. I will modify the resolution so that it will end with the words "as soon as possible; not later than Saturday next."

Mr. KASSON. That would be satisfactory.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was agreed to.

INTERNAL IMPROVEMENT IN WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War transmitting, in compliance with the provisions of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1875, a report on the examination of a route to connect the waters of Shoalwater Bay with those of Columbia River, Washington Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

F. H. E. EBSTEIN.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the petition of Lieutenant F. H. E. Ebstein, for relief from responsibility for $400 of lost funds; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

INFRINGEMENT OF A PATENT.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter, &c., from the Chief of Ordnance on the bill (H. R. No. 2865) relating to an infringement of a patent; which was referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

BREAKWATER AT PORT HENRY.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with the act of March 3, 1875, a report on the location of the breakwater at Port Henry, Lake Champlain; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report upon the bill (H. R. No. 175) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at Nebraska City; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

EDUCATION OF INDIAN CHILDREN.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the report of Lieutenant R. H. Pratt on the progress of education of young Indian children; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

LANDS AT FORT READING.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War relating to the value of lands at the Fort Reading Indian reservation; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CARRYING OF THE MAILS.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Postmaster-General, transmitting, in compliance with the eighth section of an act to revise, consolidate, and amend the statutes relating to the Post-Office Department, approved June 8, 1872, report of offers for carrying the mails, &c.; which, with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

STEAMER GENEVA.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, inclosing a petition of citizens of Jefferson County, New York, protesting against the passage of the bill to grant an American register to the steamer Geneva, of Kingston, Canada; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

ELECTION CONTEST—LEE VS. RAINEY.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House additional testimony in the contested-election case of Lee vs. Rainey, from South Carolina; which was referred to the Committee on Elections.

SUBSIDIARY SILVER COIN.

The SPEAKER. The next business in order this morning is the unfinished business at the close of the day session of yesterday, which is the consideration of the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2450) to provide for a deficiency in the Printing and Engraving Bureau of the Treasury Department, and for the issue of silver coin of the United States in place of fractional currency.

The position of the question when the recess took place was as follows: A vote had been taken on concurring in the amendment of the Senate striking out what is known as the Reagan section, or the third section of the bill, as follows:

That the silver coins of the United States of the denomination of $1 shall be a legal tender at their nominal value for any amount not exceeding $50 in any one payment and silver coins of the United States of denominations less than $1 shall be a legal tender at their nominal value for any amount not exceeding $25 in any one payment.

Upon that question the ayes were 96 and the noes 55. Thereupon the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] demanded tellers, and at that point the session was discontinued. The question now is upon ordering tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

Mr. BRIGHT. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, there being on a division—ayes 31, noes 125.

So the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. It is the understanding of the Chair (and if in this understanding he is wrong he desires to be corrected) that the other amendments of the Senate to this bill were concurred in by the House on yesterday.

Mr. RANDALL. By reference to the RECORD, the action of the House on yesterday can be ascertained.

The SPEAKER. From the RECORD there seems to have been no action taken upon the other amendments of the Senate.

Mr. RANDALL. The safe way will be to take the question now upon concurrence in the other amendments of the Senate. I believe there was no objection in the Committee on Appropriations to the amendments of the Senate, except the one striking out the third section of the bill.

The question was taken upon concurring in the amendments of the Senate; and they were concurred in.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. HOAR, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary inquire and report what steps have been taken for properly representing the interests of the United States in the suit instituted against the Credit Mobilier and others, under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1873, and also whether the Union Pacific Railroad has not forfeited its charter, and whether the same should not be repealed, by reason that said railroad has resisted the recovery in its behalf of its capital stock, wrongfully withdrawn by means of fictitious construction contracts or illegal dividends.

Mr. HOAR moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BUILDINGS RENTED BY THE GOVERNMENT IN WASHINGTON.

Mr. WALSH, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be instructed to examine the buildings rented by the different Departments of the Government in the city of Washington and to ascertain the necessity of continuing the occupation of such buildings, or any of them, and the present rental value of the same.

MARY E. BRACKENRIDGE.

Mr. EDEN, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 2909) for the relief of Mary E. Brackenridge; and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be referred to the Committee of Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

DENNISON B. WILLARD.

Mr. EDEN also, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 1373) for the relief of Dennison B. Willard, and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

ANN HENSLEY.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. I ask unanimous consent to introduce and have considered at this time a bill to amend an act granting a pension to Ann Hensley, approved March 3, 1873.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which objections will be in order.

The bill provides that the act approved March 3, 1873, granting a pension to Ann Hensley, mother of William Hensley, late a sergeant of the First Provisional Regiment of Missouri Volunteers, shall read: "Ann Hensley, mother of William Hensley, late a sergeant in Company C, First Provisional Regiment enrolled Missouri Militia."

Mr. O'BRIEN. Is there any report from a committee on this subject? If not, I think the bill should take the usual course and be referred to a committee for consideration.

Mr. RUSK. There is a letter here from the Commissioner of Pensions. This woman was placed on the pension-rolls by a special act of Congress, but in that act the command to which her son belonged was not correctly stated. This bill is to correct that error; that is all.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I have no objection.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 3129) was received, read three times, and passed.

MESSENGER FOR COMMITTEE FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BUCKNER, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee of Accounts:

Resolved, That the Committee for the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized to employ a messenger at such compensation as may be fixed by the Committee of Accounts, and that he be paid from the date at which he may be sworn in, provided his services commence at said date.

MARGARET R. COLONEY.

Mr. O'BRIEN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3130) granting a pension to Margaret R. Coloney, widow of the late Major Jesse B. Coloney, First Maryland Infantry Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

RECEPTION OF EMPEROR OF BRAZIL AND PRESIDENT OF PERU.

Mr. COX. I ask unanimous consent to submit for consideration at this time the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Affairs be requested to consider and report what action, if any, should be taken to enable the President properly to receive and entertain the Emperor of Brazil and the President of Peru, who are soon to arrive in this country.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Let that resolution be referred to the committee.

Mr. COX. Why not adopt it?

Mr. HOLMAN. I object to adopting the resolution; I have no objection to its reference.

Mr. COX. The Emperor of Brazil is expected to arrive in this country within two or three days.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Let it be referred to the committee for their action without any instructions.

There being no objection, the resolution was received and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour begins at one o'clock. The first business in order during the morning hour of to-day is the call of committees for reports of a public nature. At the conclusion of the morning hour of yesterday the call rested with the Committee on Commerce.

COMPULSORY PILOTAGE.

Mr. PIERCE, from the Committee on Commerce, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 381, a bill (H. R. No. 3131) to relieve certain ships and vessels from compulsory pilot fees; which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed, and recommitted to the Committee on Commerce.

LAND DISTRICT IN UTAH.

Mr. SAYLER, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back, with a recommendation that the same do pass, a bill (S. No. 279) to establish a land office in the southern part of Utah Territory, to be known as the Beaver district, and for other purposes.

The bill was read. It provides that so much of the public lands of the United States in the Territory of Utah, beginning at the southwestern boundary of the Territory, thence running north on the line between the Territory and the State of Nevada to the fourth standard parallel of latitude, thence easterly along that line to the eastern boundary of the Territory, thence southerly to the southern boundary of the Territory, thence westerly to the place of beginning, be formed into a land district, to be called the Beaver land district, the land office for which shall be located at such point as the President may direct, and may be removed from time to time to other points within the district whenever, in his opinion, it may be expedient.

The second section authorizes the President to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a register and a receiver for the district, who shall respectively be required to reside at the site of the office, and who are to have the same powers, perform the same duties, and be entitled to the same compensation as are or may be prescribed by law in relation to the land office now established at Salt Lake City.

Mr. SAYLER. In the large Territory of Utah, there is now but a single land office—that at Salt Lake City; and it is almost impossible for settlers in the southern portion of the Territory to go to that land office. There is a distance of probably three hundred miles between Salt Lake and Beaver City in the southern portion of the Territory where we now propose to establish another office. I will state that this bill is recommended by the Department; it has passed the Senate without objection; and I hope it will be passed by this House.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

Mr. SAYLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LAND OFFICE AT COLFAX, WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

Mr. SAYLER, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 351) to create an additional land office at Colfax, in Whitman County, Washington Territory.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to establish an additional land district in the Territory of Washington, which district shall be bounded as follows, namely: Commencing at a point where the Columbia guide-meridian intersects the third standard parallel in said Territory; thence east along the line of said standard parallel to where the same intersects Snake River; thence along said Snake River to where the same intersects the boundary-line between Washington Territory and Idaho Territory; thence north on said boundary-line to where the same intersects the boundary-line between Washington Territory and British Columbia; thence west along said line to where the same intersects the aforementioned Columbia guide-meridian; thence south along the line of said meridian to the place of beginning. Said district, as above bounded, shall be known and designated as the Whitman district, and the office of said district shall be located at the town of Colfax, or at such place as the President may direct, in the Territory of Washington; and the President of the United States shall have power to change the location of said land office, in said Territory, from time to time, as the public interests may seem to require.

SEC. 2. That the President is hereby authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, or during the recess thereof, a register and a receiver for the district hereby created, who shall each reside in the place where said land office is located, and shall have the same powers, responsibilities, and emoluments, and be subject to the same acts and penalties which are or may be prescribed by law in relation to other land-officers in said Territory.

SEC. 3. That the public lands in said district shall be subject to sale and disposal upon the same terms and conditions as other public lands of the United States: Provided, That all sales and locations made at the office of the old district of land situated within the limits of the new district, which shall be valid and right in other respects up to the day on which the new office shall go into operation, be, and the same are hereby, confirmed.

Mr. SAYLER. In regard to this bill I desire only to state that it is asked for by the Legislature of Washington Territory and recommended by the Land Department. It proposes to establish an additional office east of the Cascade Mountains and north of the Snake River, where there is now a large population of settlers. The only office at all accessible to them at present is the office at Walla Walla City, a distance of about two hundred miles. I ask the Clerk to read the memorial of the Legislature of Washington Territory, setting forth the facts.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Washington, would respectfully represent that the establishment of a land office at Colfax, Washington Territory, is a matter of great importance to all the settlers north of Snake River and east of the Cascade Mountains, and that Congress in justice ought to act in this matter for the following reasons, to wit: The only land office east of the Cascade Mountains is located at Walla Walla City, near the southern boundary of said Territory, and distant about two hundred miles from a majority of the settlers in said portion of the Territory.

Therefore we, the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Washington, do earnestly request you to pass an act establishing a land office at the town of Colfax, the district to be composed of Whitman and Stevens Counties, as now bounded; and, as in duty bound, your memorialists will ever pray.

TERRITORY OF WASHINGTON,
Office of the Secretary:

I, Henry G. Struve, secretary of said Territory, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a true and correct copy of a memorial praying for the establishment of a land office at Colfax, Washington Territory, passed by the Legislative Assembly of said Territory at its session of 1875, now deposited for record in this office.

Witness my hand and the great seal of said Territory this 29th day of October, 1875.

[SEAL.] HENRY G. STRUVE, Secretary.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Olympia, Washington Territory, October 30, 1875.

I heartily concur in the above memorial.

ELISHA P. JONES, Governor.

Mr. SAYLER. I will ask the Clerk to read also a brief communication from the Commissioner of the Land Office.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 14, 1876.

SIR: I am in receipt, by reference from the clerk of your committee for report, of a bill (H. R. No. 351) to create an additional land office at Colfax, in Whitman County, Washington Territory.

In reply I have to state, that while the amount of business now transacted at the Walla Walla office (from which district it is proposed to take the new district) is hardly sufficient to warrant me in recommending the measure, yet in view of the representations made by the Legislature of the Territory and the great benefit that would result to the settlers, I am not disposed to offer any objections to the passage of the bill in question.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. S. BURDETT, Commissioner.

Hon. MILTON SAYLER,
Chairman Committee on Public Lands,
House of Representatives.

Mr. SAYLER. I propose now to call the previous question.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not rise to object to this bill, although it is subject to a point of order. But I wish to say to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SAYLER,] the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, that it is quite manifest that in creating these new land districts quite a number of old ones may be dispensed with. There is a tendency in the land system to perpetuate land districts when once established, so that such districts are still in existence as far east as the State of Indiana and in every State west of that, although the lands are substantially all disposed of and the districts might well be abolished. The keeping up of these districts is of course attended with some expense. I wish to inquire of the chairman of this committee whether it is not proposed, as has been urged now for some years, that quite a number of the land districts which have now become unimportant shall be dispensed with?

Mr. SAYLER. In answer to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] I will say that the view he has just expressed has the entire concurrence of the committee; and we propose to look into the matter which he suggests. So far, however, as regards these offices in the Territories of the far West, where great distances have to be traveled at such great expense, while of course these offices may not exactly pay in the sense of bringing in revenue, (for that we cannot expect,) yet they really cost the Government very little; and it is only fair to the people who go to those far western Territories and settle them that the land offices should be within reasonable distance. Now, in this instance, and in each instance in which we have reported or propose to report a bill, the majority of the inhabitants of the district have had to travel from two to three hundred miles. Now, traveling two or three hundred miles by wagon or by stage through that country is a very expensive business. I hope the bill will pass.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that the creation of these new districts seems to be inevitable as the tide of emigration tends toward different sections of our unsettled territory; and the practice has been of late years to create two or three new land districts in the progress of a session of Congress. For a while, on account of their being an increased expense to the Treasury, there was a tendency to suspend the creation of new land districts, which resulted, of course, in great hardships to many settlers. I do not think objection should be made to the creation of a reasonable number of land offices in the settled sections of the country; but at the same time I must insist that, while we are creating at every session of Congress two or three new districts, a large number of old districts ought to be dispensed with. When once established, these districts seem to become a fixture. They are of course attended with some expense; although no great amount, yet enough to require some measure of reform. I am very glad that the Committee on Public Lands are considering this subject.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SAYLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NEW LAND DISTRICT IN WYOMING TERRITORY.

Mr. SAYLER also, from the same committee, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 1336) to establish a new land district in the Territory of Wyoming, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill, which was read, in the first section provides that all the public lands in the Territory of Wyoming lying west of the thirty-first meridian of longitude west from Washington shall constitute a new land district, to be called the Evanston district.

The second section provides that the President be, and he is thereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, or during the recess thereof and until the next session after such appointment, a register and a receiver for said district, who shall be required to reside in the town of Evanston, Wyoming Territory, until such time as the President may in his discretion remove the site of said land office from said town, be subject to the same laws and be entitled to the same compensation as is or may hereafter be provided by law in relation to the existing land offices and officers in said Territory.

Mr. SAYLER. I am glad to be able to assure my friend from Indiana this is the only other land office bill we have.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am glad to hear that.

Mr. SAYLER. Or at least that we consider of sufficient importance to present to the House.

There is, however, very great reason why this land office should be established. The only land office now existing in the Territory of Wyoming is in the extreme southeastern corner of the Territory. The northern portion of that Territory is not much settled. All along the line of the Union Pacific Railroad, to a distance of about four hundred miles—I believe the Territory is four hundred miles from east to west——

Mr. STEELE. This will be four hundred and thirty miles distant from the other.

Mr. SAYLER. Then the Territory must be five or six hundred miles across. The enormous distance from Cheyenne, the present office, to the proposed new office at Evanston, certainly justifies its establishment. I have a letter to that effect from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, but as it is much in the same terms with the letter I had read a moment ago in regard to Washington Territory, I will not detain the House with it. If there be no objection, I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SAYLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EXCHANGE OF LANDS AT WALLABOUT BAY, NEW YORK.

Mr. SAYLER. I am also instructed by the Committee on Public Lands to report back to the House the petitions of sundry persons to exchange lands at Wallabout Bay, Brooklyn, New York, and to ask that they be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, where they properly belong.

SURVEY IN MICHIGAN.

Mr. GOODIN, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 967) authorizing the survey of certain townships in Michigan, and making an appropriation therefor, with amendments.

The bill, which was read, directs the Commissioner of the General Land Office to cause to be surveyed townships numbered 18 and 19 north, of range 1 west, these townships having never been properly surveyed; and that there be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum sufficient to pay the expense thereof, not exceeding $5,000.

The amendments of the committee were read, as follows:

In line 5, after the word "west," insert "in the State of Michigan;" so it will read: "range 1 west, in the State of Michigan."

Strike out in the last line the words "$5,000," and in lieu thereof insert "$2,500;" so it will read: "and that there be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum sufficient to pay the expense thereof, not exceeding $2,500."

Mr. HOLMAN. I will have to reserve the point of order on this bill, although I do not object to the gentleman from Kansas making a statement. I do not understand that last item of $2,500.

Mr. GOODIN. That is an amendment proposed by the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HOLMAN. Reducing the amount from $5,000 to $2,500.

Mr. GOODIN. That is it. I think, Mr. Speaker, when the gentleman from Indiana hears the explanation of this bill which I now propose to make he will not insist upon his point of order. It seems in the year 1849 certain representations were made to the Interior Department of defective surveys in the State of Michigan. In view of those suspected defective surveys in that State an examination was made in the field of the townships described in this bill, as well also of adjacent townships. It appears from the report of the surveyor-general of the State of Michigan it was ascertained that more than three-fourths of the lines were never run or marked, and that where corners were established they were not in the proper places, and his recommendation was that an entirely new survey should be made of those townships.

Accordingly many of the townships were resurveyed, but before the two townships embraced in this bill were reached in the survey, the office of surveyor-general for the State of Michigan was abolished. The result is that those lands remain unsurveyed; or, if they have ever been surveyed, there are no monuments, no indications whatever of such survey upon the field. They are valuable lands. Individuals desire them for settlement, but the exact locations cannot be ascertained and titles cannot be acquired in consequence of the failure to mark these surveys upon the field and designate the same by proper monuments and marks, if indeed surveys were ever actually made, which is somewhat doubtful.

The appropriation asked for the survey of these two townships in the original bill was the sum of $5,000. Upon conference with the Commissioner of the General Land Office, whose letter I hold in my hand, and who believes that one-half of that amount would be sufficient for the purpose, the committee made the amendment striking out $5,000 and inserting $2,500. The Commissioner in the letter I have referred to says:

In view of these facts the provisions of the bill are fully approved.

He having mentioned substantially the facts which I have related to the House.

The committee then, acting upon the recommendation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, have reported this bill favorably, and it seems to me, after the explanation that I have made, that the gentleman from Indiana will not insist on his point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to ask the gentleman from Kansas, inasmuch as this state of things has existed for a great many years, how it occurs that this survey has not been made years ago, before the abolition of the office of surveyor-general of that State, and how it comes to be matter of pressing moment now?

Mr. GOODIN. To the first interrogatory propounded by the gentleman from Indiana I may say, while possessing no definite knowledge upon the subject, that I presume the reason why the survey has not been made since the year 1849 has been that these lands were not perhaps required for settlement. But now the fact of settlers desiring to take them, or of persons wishing to purchase them and desiring some accurate description of them, makes a necessity which did not previously exist for pressing the matter of this survey.

Mr. HOLMAN. Perhaps those lands are within the limits of some of those numerous land grants which have been made to railroad corporations in that State.

Mr. GOODIN. I believe not. I have not learned of any land grants made in that section of the country at all. It is a case of omission to cause the survey to be made, and requiring now congressional action on the subject. I do not know definitely why it has been deferred so long. Perhaps the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BRADLEY] who introduced the bill can explain in reference to this. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan for that purpose if he so desires.

Mr. BRADLEY. The necessity for this bill arises from the fact that the lands have been purchased, or at least a large portion of them, by individuals. They are not within the land grants, and the question of railroad lands is not raised here. Settlers have been upon the lands in some cases for several years, and have made improvements, and other parties having purchased adjacent thereto, a conflict is now raised as to where the lines should be, and whole towns are now in uproar regarding the lines.

Now, if the question was one as between two or three individuals merely, they might perhaps apply to the court and get a competent surveyor appointed, and have the line run. But inasmuch as these lands are owned by individuals throughout the different States it is a matter of impossibility to reach them all, to have them enter into an agreement and abide the result of the survey by any authority that can be reached that will be short of authority emanating from the General Land Office. The gentleman from Indiana will see how suits may arise between a poor settler, perchance, who has improved his farm and been living upon it, and a man of much larger means; and as there are some parties owning pine lands near these towns, some portion of these settlers' places may have some timber, and the party owning adjacent thereto may attempt to get that timber away from the settler. These questions have been raised within the last year or two, and have caused so much feeling that it is plain that it becomes necessary that a competent authority shall step in and survey these lands and designate where the lines shall be.

Mr. HOLMAN. The difficulty which the gentleman mentions is a very common one all over the country. In new sections of the country the interior lines are found to be improperly run.

Mr. BRADLEY. If the gentleman from Indiana will allow me to make another remark there, I desire to state that no lines have ever been run in this instance. This is one of those cases—and the officers of the Land Office tell me they find indications of its being so—where undoubtedly there was a rainy day, and the surveyor sat in his tent, and took his plat, and surveyed upon his plat, and did not enter upon the field at all.

There are no corners, no lines, no blazed trees, and it is all timber land, where, if ever, a line may be perfectly plain and easily distinguished.

Mr. HOLMAN. Are there no field-notes?

Mr. BRADLEY. Yes, I think the field-notes are upon the Land Office books; but they are only imaginary.

Mr. HOLMAN. Have the lands been actually sold?

Mr. BRADLEY. The lands have been sold, but no lines have ever been run. Now, the gentleman from Indiana, I trust, can easily understand how a surveyor, if he is disposed to defraud the Government, can make up field-notes, make up plats, make up lines and report them, and until parties go on the lands and make examination the discovery would not be made of his failure to perform his duties.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is rather an extraordinary case where there has been an actual sale of lands by the usual subdivisions and the parties have taken possession that the Government is called upon to survey the lands; but I understood the gentleman to say that none of these lands were within any railroad grant or any other public grant.

Mr. BRADLEY. They are not within any railroad grant.

Mr. HOLMAN. Although it is a very extraordinary case, I will not press the point of order.

Mr. BRADLEY. The bill is simply in the interest of poor men.

Mr. GOODIN. I will not add anything further, but send to the Clerk's desk the letter of the Commissioner of the General Land Office before spoken of, and ask that it be printed as a part of my remarks.

The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., March 15, 1876.

SIR: At the request of Hon. N. B. BRADLEY I have the honor to inclose herewith a copy of House bill No. 967, "authorizing the survey of certain townships in Michigan and making an appropriation therefor."

In regard to the proposed survey I have to state that, upon an examination of the records of this Office, it appears that in 1849, in view of suspected defective surveys, an examination was made in the field of the townships described in the bill (townships 18 and 19 north, range 1 west, Michigan) and other adjoining townships, and the surveyor-general, on the 10th of July, 1849, reported that the surveys were fictitious and fraudulent; that in many of the townships examined more than three-fourths of the lines were never run or marked, and that where corners were established they were not in proper place, and he recommended an entire new survey. Accordingly many of the townships thus reported were resurveyed between 1849 and 1857, when the office of surveyor-general for the district of Michigan was closed.

In view of these facts, the provisions of the bill are fully approved by this Office. I would state, however, that in my opinion the sum of $2,500 will be amply sufficient to defray all expenses connected with the survey.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

L. K. LIPPINCOTT,
Acting Commissioner.

Hon. JOHN R. GOODIN,
House of Representatives.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GOODIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SETTLERS ON THE KANSAS RESERVATION, KANSAS.

Mr. GOODIN, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1959) for the relief of certain settlers on the Kansas Indian reservation in Kansas.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas certain bona fide settlers upon the Kansas Indian reservation in Kansas have applied at the local land office at Topeka, Kansas, to purchase tracts of said reserve, not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres to any one person, and have tendered the amount supposed to be the first payment on such tracts, and have made lasting and valuable improvements thereon; and whereas in some cases such tracts, instead of constituting a single Government quarter section, embraces portions of contiguous quarter sections; and whereas it being impossible for the local land office to determine what the proportionate value of such portions of quarter sections is where the quarter section is appraised as an entirety: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in cases where parties have applied to purchase tracts of land on the Kansas Indian reservation in amounts not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres to any one person, said tracts being made up of legal subdivisions of contiguous quarter sections, have tendered the supposed price of the first payment for the same, and gone on and made lasting improvements thereon, the register and the receiver of the land office at Topeka may take evidence as to the value of the tracts so proposed to be purchased, and the improvements thereon, as compared with the entire quarter section, and so apportion the value of the quarter section and improvements thereon, between the portion so proposed to be purchased and the remaining portion thereof, as shall be just and right, and shall make the value of all portions and improvements taken together equal to the appraised value of the entire quarter section and improvements thereon; and the settlers shall be allowed to purchase the tracts so originally filed upon, upon the same terms and conditions as if the land had consisted of entire quarter sections.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman from Kansas will explain the purport of that bill.

Mr. GOODIN. I will do so. We have in my State a tract of land known as the Kaw or Kansas Indian reservation, upon which reservation a large number of settlers went several years ago. Upon the 8th day of May, 1872, an act of Congress was passed directing the Secretary of the Interior to cause the lands occupied by actual settlers to be appraised, together with the improvements thereon, and that the settlers then residing upon the same should be entitled to purchase at the appraised value a tract not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres each.

The law provided that the appraisement should be made in tracts of one hundred and sixty acres or less, including the improvements. The appraisers went upon those lands and appraised them in tracts of one hundred and sixty acres, according to the regular legal subdivisions; but in some instances it was found—and there was no law to prevent the settlement in that manner—that settlers had occupied, say, for instance, eighty acres in one quarter section and eighty acres in another quarter of the same section, or of still a different section.

The settlers, acting under the provisions of that law, went to the local land office for the purpose of purchasing their lands, and they paid the first installment, or what they supposed would be the first installment, of the purchase-money. Finally application was made by several of them, not a great number, however, to make their final proof and receive title, but the register and receiver of the local land office refused to hear their final proof and give them their certificates of purchase because they could not apportion the value of the land sought to be purchased and the value of the improvements thereon. This bill is to authorize the register and receiver to apportion the value of the improvements and the value of the lands occupied by the settlers, having in view the valuation made by these appraisers. That is the sole purpose of this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. How was the appraisement of these improvements made?

Mr. GOODIN. The gentleman from Indiana asks me a question in relation to the appraisement of these improvements. I will state that a number of years ago the Government of the United States, having in view the civilization of this tribe of Kansas Indians, caused to be erected buildings all over these lands, which the Indians, by the way, never occupied, and there were also some meager improvements made from time to time by the Indians themselves.

Mr. HOLMAN. These improvements had been made at the time the settlements took place?

Mr. GOODIN. Yes; and it was provided that when settlers went upon the lands to occupy them they must pay for the value of the land, including the value of the improvements, and the improvements were so valued by the appraising board.

I understand that there are but few individuals who will be affected by this proposed legislation. These persons, many of whom are quite poor, went upon these lands and occupied them for years in good faith. The register and receiver refused their final proof, for the reason only that the manner in which the appraisement was made by the board of appraisers would not permit them to hear this proof. This bill provides, as I have said, that they may apportion the appraisement according to the value as fixed by the board in such a manner as to do justice and right between the settlers and the Indians who are entitled to receive the money paid for these lands. I hope the bill may meet with the favorable consideration of the House.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. GOODIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SALINE LANDS.

Mr. GAUSE, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back, with a recommendation that the same do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 2260) providing for the sale of saline lands.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That whenever it shall be made to appear to the register and receiver of any land office of the United States that any lands within their district are saline in character, it shall be the duty of said register and receiver, under the regulations of the General Land Office, to take testimony in reference to such lands to ascertain their true character, and to report the same to the General Land Office; and if, upon such testimony, the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall find that such lands are saline and incapable of being purchased under any of the laws of the United States relative to the public domain, then, and in such case, such lands shall be offered for sale by public auction at the local land office of the district in which the same shall be situated, under such regulations as shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and sold to the highest bidder, for cash, at a price not less than $1.25 per acre; and in case said lands fail to sell when so offered, then the same shall be subject to private sale, at such land office, for cash, at a price not less than $1.25 per acre, in the same manner as other lands of the United States are sold.

Mr. GAUSE. This bill is to correct what is believed to be an error of omission in the laws of the United States relating to public lands. As the bill was introduced at the instance of the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. BROWN,] I will yield to him to explain it.

Mr. BROWN, of Kansas. The only object of this bill is to remedy what is believed to be an error of omission in the land laws of the United States. It is known by gentlemen that under the homestead and pre-emption laws saline lands cannot be taken, nor do they come under the provisions of law in regard to the sale of mineral lands. The matter was called to my attention by some parties in my own State who desired to purchase a salt marsh there. I brought the matter to the attention of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and he informed me it would require some additional legislation by Congress in order to enable any party to obtain title to any land containing salt deposits. I drew up this bill and submitted it to him, and it met his approval. I think there can be no objection to its passage.

Mr. HOLMAN. Are these lands fit for cultivation?

Mr. BROWN, of Kansas. Some of them are and some are not. But it has been decided again and again that if there is a salt spring upon the land it cannot be sold, for the law provides that no land can be taken either under the pre-emption or homestead laws upon which there are any salt springs, coal mines, or other minerals.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am aware of that provision of the law. The motive for preserving from entry the saline lands does not seem to be of sufficient importance to require us to continue that system. This bill contemplates the sale in open market, at public sale, of all the lands heretofore reserved as saline lands; and if not so sold at public sale they are to be subject to entry at $1.25 an acre. That is merely a nominal price. If they are adapted to cultivation, they certainly should come in under the homestead policy of the United States. The effect of such a law as this will be to enable men of capital to monopolize large portions of the public lands at a merely nominal price. It seems to me it would be a much wiser policy to extend the homestead laws over these lands, unless they are unadapted to cultivation. I do not myself believe in the sale of public lands adapted for cultivation; I think they should be reserved for the benefit of settlers, of landless people, under the homestead laws.

Mr. BROWN, of Kansas. I know of only one body of land of this character, and that is a salt marsh in my own State of eight hundred or a thousand acres, which is totally unfit for cultivation. It is on account of that one parcel of land that I have brought in this bill. I know of no other lands of this character, and the Commissioner of the General Land Office said he knew of no other such lands. He said it was possible that after the twelve salt springs allowed to each new State had been selected, there might be some other land with salt springs on it. He thought this bill was a good one.

Mr. HOLMAN. This bill is not confined to the State of Kansas.

Mr. BROWN, of Kansas. It is not. It was thought better to make it a general bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. The saline lands in some of the States east of the Mississippi cover large portions of the country and embrace valuable agricultural lands. I believe that to be the case in other States besides Indiana. If this bill applies only to lands not adapted to cultivation, I have no objection to it.

Mr. BROWN, of Kansas. That is the way I understand it.

Mr. GAUSE. I understand that no lands susceptible of cultivation are included in this bill. I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GAUSE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MILITARY RESERVATIONS IN ARIZONA.

Mr. LANE, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 2545) authorizing the Secretary of War to relinquish and turn over to the Interior Department certain military reservations in the Territory of Arizona.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to relinquish and turn over to the Department of the Interior, for restoration to the public domain, what is known as old Camp Grant and Camp Crittenden, in the Territory of Arizona, the same being reported as no longer required for military purposes.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

Insert after the word "domain," in the fifth line, the words "and declared to be a part thereof subject to entry under the homestead and pre-emption laws of the United States."

Strike out in the fifth and sixth lines the words "old Camp Grant and."

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust that the first amendment of the committee will be amended by striking out the words "and pre-emption."

Mr. LANE. I just as earnestly trust that those words will not be struck out. I can see no reason why we should make any particular tract of land in the country an exception from the general laws governing the disposition of the public domain. I do not think any sufficient reason can be given for such an exception. I trust the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will not prevail. All our public lands not embraced in certain excepted portions in the Southern States are subject to entry under the pre-emption and homestead laws. I must confess, after seeing the operation of both systems, that I like better the operation of the pre-emption law than of the homestead law.

Mr. HURLBUT. Has the gentleman a report from the Secretary of War on this subject?

Mr. LANE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust that the gentleman from Oregon will consent to strike out the word "pre-emption." This amendment will not make a discrimination in this case against a particular region of country, but on the contrary it is simply continuing and carrying out a policy which has been universal in the legislation of Congress for a number of years past. Very few bills for restoring lands to the public domain have been passed without a limitation making them expressly subject to the homestead laws. The drift of public sentiment is certainly in that direction. There is a growing and just public opinion against the sale of public lands. The spirit of our people is in favor of that humane policy which seeks to secure the public lands to our landless people under the homestead policy. The price, $1.25 per acre, which pre-emptors pay for the land, is a mere bagatelle; it bears no relation to the actual value of the land; yet that system as a general thing inures to the benefit of speculators. My friend from Oregon will remember that in many of the new States and Territories the pre-emption law has been found the most available means by which men of capital might secure large portions of the public lands at the nominal price of $1.25 an acre. It seems far better for the prosperity of the country and in harmony with the genius of our institutions to secure these lands to landless settlers and nobody else.

Mr. LANE. My experience does not support the view indicated by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.] On the contrary, having watched carefully the operation of both the pre emption and homestead system, I regard the pre-emption law as the better of the two. That is now the general system, and I do not see any good reason why we should except a little tract of land not exceeding in area six thousand acres from the operation of the general laws of the United States. To except here and there a little tract from the general operation of the law governing the public domain confuses our whole landed system. I think that the purpose of the gentleman from Indiana, if his argument is of any value at all, would be better subserved by a general bill abolishing at once the pre-emption law, or consolidating the pre-emption and homestead laws. I do not think he should make an exception in this particular instance.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman makes a mistake as to the drift of our legislation in regard to the public lands. The bill reported by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. TOWNSEND] in the last Congress provided, if I remember aright, for the application of the principle of the homestead law to all our public domain; and we have had assurances, I think, during the present session that there will be general legislation presented upon that subject. There has not been an act of Congress passed for years (unless it might have been in some accidental instances, which did not receive the special attention of Congress) which contained the principle of pre-emption. Indeed, the general drift of our legislation has been right the other way, to secure the appropriation of the whole public domain to the benefit of actual settlers.

Mr. LANE. Then why not abolish the pre-emption law?

Mr. HOLMAN. The tendency of the pre-emption law is to monopolize the public lands in the hands of speculators at a nominal price. I admit that if our lands were being sold at a price commensurate with their value, which would go into the public Treasury, there might be some argument for the perpetuation of that system. But while on the one hand you deprive multitudes of landless people of opportunities of obtaining homes, you on the other hand, for a trifling sum realized to the Treasury as the price of the lands, establish a land monopoly in various portions of the country. I trust that the great reform which I regard as the most worthy and creditable that Congress has entered upon for years, that of securing lands for the benefit of landless settlers, will not be departed from in a single instance, whether the law be applied to six thousand acres or six hundred thousand acres.

Mr. KASSON. Did not the gentleman from Indiana understand the other day, in a discussion we had here, that the Committee on Public Lands would report a general bill having in view the policy he now advocates?

Mr. HOLMAN. I so understood.

Mr. KASSON. And with that view one bill on the subject was sent back to the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. The bill reported by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, in the last Congress, contained such a provision. This has been the entire drift of legislation for years, and this is an exception from the general rules instead of any attempt on my part to establish an exception.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to ask the gentleman from Oregon to put in the word "only" after the word "subject," because by general law they may be disposed of in this way.

Mr. LANE. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have an amendment pending to strike out the word pre-emption; so it will read, "and declared to be a part thereof, subject only to entry under the homestead laws of the United States."

The House divided; and there were—ayes 47, noes 39.

So (no further count being demanded) the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LANE. I now demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendments reported from the committee were agreed to, and the bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LANE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HURLBUT. The title of the bill should be amended. It speaks of military reservations, and should be amended so as to read:

A bill authorizing the Secretary of War to relinquish and turn over to the Interior Department a certain military reservation in the Territory of Arizona.

I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to, and the title, as amended, was adopted.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SCALES. The special order for this day in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union is the bill (H. R. No. 2677) to transfer the Office of Indian Affairs from the Interior to the War Department; and I therefore move the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of taking up and proceeding with that order.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I gave notice yesterday when I reported from the Committee on Appropriations a bill (H. R. No. 3128) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for prior years, and for other purposes, that I would immediately after the expiration of the morning hour move to go into Committee of the Whole, for the purpose of taking up and considering that bill. It is one of the general appropriation bills, and ought to be passed at once.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the House will permit this deficiency bill to be considered at this time. We can consider it in the House as in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule. We cannot reach any result to-day by going on with the bill to transfer the Office of Indian Affairs from the Interior to the War Department, while if we take up this deficiency bill, which it is important to pass now, we can dispose of it before the recess.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. GARFIELD in the chair.) Does the gentleman raise the question of consideration?

Mr. RANDALL. I do.

Mr. SCALES. I hope the House will not further postpone the special order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question of consideration having been raised, the Chair will first put the question on the motion of the gentlemen from North Carolina, [Mr. SCALES,] that the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the bill (H. R. No. 2577) to transfer the Office of Indian Affairs from the Interior to the War Department. If that shall fail the question will recur on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri to go into Committee of the Whole on the deficiency appropriation bill.

The motion of Mr. SCALES was disagreed to, only 42 voting in favor thereof.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. I now ask for a vote on my motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to take up and consider at this time the bill (H. R. No. 3128) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOLMAN. Instead of going into Committee of the Whole I suggest to the gentleman to ask unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule.

Mr. HALE. Let me suggest it may take up more time, as there will be in the House records of votes by yeas and nays, which would not occur in committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think not.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think there is anything in this bill which is exceptionable.

Mr. HALE. If gentlemen on the other side think there is no objection, I have none.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. I make the motion then that we proceed with the consideration of that bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the first reading of the bill for information be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I will state briefly that the total amount appropriated by this bill is $632,315.07. Last year the deficiency appropriation bill, as reported from the Committee on Appriations, amounted to $2,496,556.58. When the bill finally became a law the appropriations were increased to $4,703,699.18. It will be seen by the House, therefore, that the Committee on Appropriations reporting this bill have cut down these deficiencies to the lowest possible figure.

The total amount re-appropriated and rendered available from unexpended balances, under act of June 20, 1874, (see Executive Document No. 152, Forty-fourth Congress, first session,) is $2,073,481.43.

I will not detain the House further at this time, but will explain the different items as occasion may require.

The Clerk read as follows:

For miscellaneous items, $60,000.

Mr. BUCKNER. I offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of line 18, page 2.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That witnesses residing in the District of Columbia, and not in the service of said District or of the United States, who shall be summoned to give testimony before any committee of the House of Representatives, shall not be allowed exceeding $2 for each day's attendance before said committee.

Mr. BUCKNER. I desire to say that the rule heretofore has been to allow witnesses residing in the District summoned before the House, and I believe also the Senate, $4 a day. Now, under the direction of the Committee of Accounts, the amount may have been reduced to $3. I desire to make this rule certain that, so far as witnesses in the District of Columbia not in the service of the District government or the Government of the United States are concerned, they shall be allowed uniformly $2 a day for their attendance on committees.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. I have no objection to that on the part of the committee. I ask that the amendment may be again reported.

The amendment was again read.

The question being taken on Mr. BUCKNER'S amendment, it was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I move to strike out the last word in the pending paragraph, for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Missouri what this appropriation of $60,000 for miscellaneous items is for.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. I hold in my hand a communication from the Clerk of this House asking for the several items here. And among them is this, "for miscellaneous items, $60,000," for the purpose of paying the witnesses who have been summoned before committees of the House. The communication gives a list in detail of what is required for each committee. These witnesses are paid out of the miscellaneous appropriation. If there be no objection I will have the communication read.

Mr. HALE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Is not this an entirely unexpected call and demand for an appropriation not at all considered last year?

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. It is so understood by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HALE. For the payment of the numerous witnesses that have either been summoned here or have come here, and are either testifying or are waiting in attendance on the committees of this House?

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. I may state further that I am informed by the Clerk of the House in person that these items are made up in accordance with the suggestions of the respective chairmen of the committees. He called on them officially to ascertain the amounts they would require for the payment of their witnesses, and the amount, according to the list, is over $50,000.

Mr. HALE. I desire to ask another question of the gentleman, as he has looked into this matter more than I have done. Does he know that in some cases in reference to some of the committees these charges or estimates have been largely swollen by the fact that witnesses have been about here for days and weeks without being examined, and claiming to draw pay all the while for attendance?

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. I have no such knowledge myself, but I have no doubt it is so. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire that the letter to which I have referred shall be read?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

The Clerk read as follows:

CLERK'S OFFICE, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., March 13, 1876.

SIR: There will be required to be appropriated to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for contingent expenses of the House of Representatives for the service of the present fiscal year the following sums, namely:

For cartage	$737 50
For folding documents, including pay of folders and materials, ($15,000 off)	20,000 00
For furniture, and repairs of the same, ($1,000 off)	1,750 00
For miscellaneous items	60,000 00

The appropriation for folding documents being $25,000 only, against $70,166 appropriated for the last fiscal year, of which $49,000 was expended, has proved insufficient; and this year being that of the presidential election, a much larger sum will be required.

The appropriation of $10,000 for furniture and repairs has been exhausted, and the estimated sum of $2,750 will be required to meet actual expenses and to refurnish the Hall with mattings, &c., for summer use.

The appropriation for miscellaneous items will be required to pay expenses of the several committees of the House of Representatives engaged in investigation. In further explanation hereof I transmit a list of the estimates furnished this office by the investigating committees.

Very respectfully,

GEO. M. ADAMS,
Clerk House of Representatives United States.

Hon. SAML. J. RANDALL,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to oppose the formal amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Missouri, who has more knowledge of these matters than I have, as I have been absent from the committee part of the time lately, whether he has made any such examination of these estimates as to the expenses of witnesses before committees as leads him to know or believe that this item of $60,000 in the bill is all that we will be asked to appropriate for this service this session?

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. I have not the information which the gentleman desires. It is impossible for me to tell how much will be required to pay these witnesses.

Mr. HALE. I suppose this is mainly the reckoning of this expenditure cast up to the present time. I do not know whether it is so, but I have been informed by gentlemen on some of these committees that the expenses of a single committee for witnesses amount to more than $10,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I think each committee was called upon to make estimates. I ask the gentleman to state if this is not the fact?

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. In the communication from the Clerk of the House there is a memorandum of the amount asked for by each committee.

Mr. RANDALL. That will answer the question of the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. Let that list be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

List of estimates.

Committee on Indian Affairs	$6,218
Committee on Expenditures in the War Department	5,000
Committee on Naval Affairs	3,500
Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice	3,000
Committee on the Freedman's Bank	2,750
Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department	2,500
Committee for the District of Columbia	2,000
Committee of Ways and Means	2,000
Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads	2,000
Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department	1,500
Select Committee on Texan Frontier Troubles	1,400
Committee on Printing	1,200
Committee on Reform in the Civil Service	1,000
Committee on Foreign Affairs	1,000
Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department	1,000
Committee on Expenditures in the State Department	500
Committee on Expenditures on Public Buildings	300
Committee on Military Affairs	2,000
Committee on Public Expenditures	1,000
Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department	1,500
Committee on the Judiciary	10,000
Total	51,363

Mr. RANDALL. This is an estimate at best, but we think it a safe one, and the committee examined the amounts heretofore expended in such and similar cases of investigation.

Mr. HALE. Does the chairman of the committee believe that this will carry us through?

Mr. RANDALL. I hope so; but I would not like to state positively it would. It depends entirely upon how much scope the committees take and how much is required to be investigated.

Mr. HALE. I do not think, on the policy which has been pursued on this side of the House of objecting to nothing in the shape of an investigation, the scope of the committees can be added to.

Mr. RANDALL. I have made no statement of that kind. Does the gentleman from Maine design to offer an amendment to this bill making an appropriation of $10,000 for an investigation into the affairs of Mississippi?

Mr. HALE. I believe the gentleman in charge of the bill intends to do that.

Mr. RANDALL. The sum of $60,000 for all these committees bears no comparison with the sum of $10,000 for a single investigation.

Mr. HALE. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will take the same course in reference to that as we have taken with reference to the other investigations.

Mr. RANDALL. I certainly shall.

Mr. HOAR'S formal amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For amount due William M. Long for services under the Doorkeeper during the months of July and August, 1874, $223.20.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move to strike out "$223.20."

I desire for a moment the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. I held in my hand a few weeks ago an account found due by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department to a detective during the late war for $174. I presented that account to the Committee on Appropriations, and was told that it must go to the Committee of Claims. Now I find in this bill a large number of similar claims. I do not know why this man should be compelled to go to the Committee of Claims any more than Mr. William M. Long.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. Of how long standing has been this claim to which the gentleman from Minnesota refers?

Mr. DUNNELL. It arose during the war.

Mr. RANDALL. In this bill we only touch matters of the past year. Long was a doorkeeper of this House, and no provision was made for the payment of his services actually performed as an officer of the House.

Mr. DUNNELL. Further on I observe that there is provision made for accounts certified to be due in 1871 and previous years.

Mr. RANDALL. In every instance we have endeavored to confine these appropriations to cases occurring during the year.

Mr. DUNNELL. I trust the committee will allow me at the proper point in the bill to introduce an amendment to provide for the case to which I have referred. I withdraw my amendment.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

To pay the assistant disbursing clerk of the House of Representatives the amount due him to the 30th of June, 1876, under a resolution of the House of June 20, 1874, $898.33.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. I offer the following amendment, to come in after the last line of the paragraph just read as a new paragraph:

To defray the expenses of the investigation into the late election in Mississippi, as authorized by a resolution of the Senate adopted March 31, 1876, $10,000.

Mr. Speaker, in explanation of that amendment I will state that the Senate have passed a bill, which is now on the Speaker's table, appropriating $10,000 to defray the expenses of the committee to investigate the Mississippi election. I suppose there will be no objection to the insertion of this amendment here, instead of passing the Senate bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. In regard to the paragraph to which this is an amendment, I wish to ask the gentleman having charge of the bill to pass it over for the present so that I may have a right at any time to recur to it if it be necessary.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk had commenced to read the next paragraph, and it requires unanimous consent to go back.

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir; the Chair is mistaken. The gentleman from Missouri moved an amendment to come in immediately after that paragraph, so that that paragraph is not disposed of. I suppose there will be no objection to passing it over for the present, in order to enable me to make inquiry in regard to this appropriation.

Mr. HOSKINS. I do not rise to object to that, but it strikes me that it might as well be considered now as at any time, if the gentleman has any amendment to offer.

Mr. HOLMAN. My only object is to make some inquiry as to whether this appropriation is necessary and proper.

Mr. HOSKINS. The Committee on Appropriations appear to have thought it proper.

Mr. HOLMAN. I know all that the Committee on Appropriations knew about it, and I presume that it is all right enough, and if I do not call attention to it hereafter, of course it will be understood that it is concurred in. But I ask unanimous consent that it be passed over for the present.

No objection was made, and the paragraph was passed over informally.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

And hereafter payment of salaries of all officers of the Territories of the United States appointed by the President shall commence only when the person appointed to any such office shall take the proper oath and shall enter upon the duties of such office in such Territory, and said oath shall hereafter be administered in the Territory in which such office is held.

Mr. FORT. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend that paragraph by adding thereto the following proviso:

Provided, That all officers appointed by the President for the Territories shall be bona fide residents of the Territories respectively for which they shall be appointed.

I suppose, Mr. Speaker, there will be no objection to this amendment. It is certainly a very proper provision. There has ever been great complaint made by the people of the Territories of the officers appointed and sent to rule over them, and I think not without cause. It has been said that broken-down politicians from the States are sent to the Territories to hold official position and control the interests and destinies of a people to whom they are strangers and who are strangers to them, and with whom they have no common feeling or desire for the public welfare.

In most instances they seek these appointments to official place for the mere purpose of speculation. In nine cases out of ten they do not seek such offices with any purpose of becoming bona fide residents there. They merely go there for the purpose of drawing their salaries and looking after whatever of private interest may turn up, and are generally and principally engaged in mending their fortunes, and when convenient they abandon their offices and return to the States or enter into some speculations or enterprise and neglect public duties. Some of their transactions are not very creditable to themselves, to the Territory, or to the country. Of course many territorial officers are excellent men, who adorn the positions they hold. But they are not of, and too often are not in sympathy with, the people whose offices they hold. I can see no reason why the rule should not be applied to the Territories that is and ought to be applied to the States. All officers should be residents of and citizens of the State or Territory where the office is to be executed, if possible. Now, sir, I say that, if any Territory of the United States has not within its boundaries citizens of sufficient intelligence, honesty, and integrity to fill the offices of that Territory, that Territory clearly never ought to have been organized and ought to be disorganized and placed under some other authority. There is no question but what the people of the Territories have a moral right to be ruled over by their own neighbors and their own citizens the same as the people of the States; by men who help bear the burdens and who share the privations of the frontier; by men who have common interest with them; by men who are identified with the country and desire the future prosperity of the Territory. They should feel some sort of responsibility to the people among whom they live and whose authority they exercise and whose rights they adjudicate. They are sent there by a power, by an administration in the choice of which they have no part. These officers are thus sent there, and serve only so long as they may find it convenient or profitable to themselves.

The principle of appointing officers from a distant part of the country and from among strangers is neither democratic nor republican. In my judgment, a great deal of the discontent and a great deal of the complaint that comes to us from the Territories and a great deal of the anxious desire of the people of the Territories to be early admitted as States arise from the fact that officers are appointed and sent there to administrate their laws who have no common interest with them. What objection can there be to this principle of selecting officers? Are there not as good men in the Territories as elsewhere? I think it will be found upon reflection that the very best talent, the very best energy, is found in the Territories, and the citizens of the Territories are as fully competent and in every way qualified for officers and as well fitted to manage the affairs of the people with whom they live as those found elsewhere.

Unless there be valid objection to this amendment, I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. HUBBELL. Does not the gentleman wish to except from the operation of his amendment soldiers who served in the late war against the rebellion?

Mr. FORT. No; I will not except anybody. The Territories are full of Union soldiers. If the Executive seeks soldiers for appointment he will find as many of them in the Territories as in the States, and as gallant.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. FORT. Certainly.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I would ask the gentleman what authority the legislative department of this Government has to interfere with the President, the executive department, in the exercise of the constitutional function with which he is charged in making appointments to office?

Mr. FORT. This is no interference with his constitutional prerogative. That question has been fully discussed on other occasions and settled, and it has been held to be no limitation upon the appointing power to restrict the appointments to a certain class of citizens or to citizens of a certain state. That is no sort of objection to this provision. It has been held by the most eminent of our statesmen that the appointing power could be constitutionally limited to persons found to have certain qualifications, and that other branches of the Government may pass upon such qualifications.

Mr. MAGINNIS. If the gentleman will yield to me right here, I will say, in answer to several remarks that I hear from gentlemen on the republican side, intimating that this will be an interference with the Executive, that I do not think so. A few years ago all the Delegates representing the Territories on this floor, at that time, waited upon the President, and, presenting to him the abuses that resulted from the appointment of strangers to these positions in the Territories, preferred a request that all appointments to office in any Territory should be made from the citizens thereof. The President agreed with them and promised relief, and, in order to remedy the evil, made an announcement that thereafter he would make all appointments to office in the Territories from bona fide residents of the Territory in which the office was to be filled. I have no doubt that the President faithfully tried to carry out that promised policy of reform; but the political pressure from all parts of the Union for these places was so great that he was obliged to abandon it.

Mr. FORT. The politicians were stronger than the President.

Mr. MAGINNIS. If that be so, then I presume that no one would be better satisfied with this provision than the President. Ever since the days of ancient Rome, Mr. Speaker, the pro-consular system of government has been regarded, and rightfully regarded, as wretched and oppressive at the best. In our system of territorial government all its evils have been aggravated by our wretched system of appointments to offices in the Territories. Rarely if ever can our home citizens, even of the ruling party—citizens identified with our interests, understanding our wants, and known to our people—get appointments to offices among us. These appointments are made from strangers, and generally consist of broken-down politicians or inefficient and unworthy persons; or, if occasionally an abler man is chosen, it is not so much in the interests of the people which he is to govern as to get him temporarily out of the way of some political rival. They come among our people with no acquaintance with our people or our interests, no sympathy with our aspirations, our hopes, and our endeavors to develop the country, and depend for their continuance in office upon the favor of those who originally sent them to us, rather than upon the good-will, the affection, or confidence of the people of the Territories.

Governors have been sent to the Territories without honesty or character, men who not only disgraced the Government, but used their official positions to borrow all the money they could obtain from respectable citizens and then decamped to the places from which they came. We have had secretaries who squandered the appropriations and defiantly disgraced their positions. We have had judges who could not pass an examination for admission to the bar and could never earn a living in competition with our local bar; and these have not been exceptions, but the rule.

The committee in their bill attempt to reform one abuse; that is, where officers are appointed and qualify at home and draw their pay without ever going to the Territories at all. The committee have in their bill attempted to remedy this abuse, and I hope the House will adopt the further reform proposed by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. FORT,] from the Committee on the Territories. It is certainly a long step in the right direction.

Mr. BENNETT. I indorse every word which has been said by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. FORT.] I have had some experience in these Territories as a Federal officer. I believe it would give much more satisfaction to the people of the Territories in every way to have these appointments confined to the citizens of the Territories. I know such a provision would meet the approval of the President.

Mr. PATTERSON. If there is any measure that will be popular with the people of the Territories, it is that measure which will give to them as their officers their own citizens. They feel that it is bad enough to live under officers in whose appointment they have no voice. More especially do they feel it to be an imposition and outrage to have men sent to their Territories to take charge of and control their dearest interests who have no interest whatever in the welfare of the Territory save so far as it will redound to their own personal profit.

I know as a fact that in one of the Territories there is now an individual holding the high position of supreme judge who, when he received that appointment, was holding the office of a mere justice of the peace in the State of Pennsylvania. I have seen the evil effects of sending men from outside States and Territories to control our affairs, more especially in the matter of judges than anything else. Each Territory has its own judicial system. Very frequently men are sent there to act as judges with no judicial capacity in the first place, and then with no experience whatever in the particular judicial system that is existing in the Territories. The result of that has been that for years the whole judicial system is in chaos; cases pending in the courts are determined ill-advisedly; they are not and cannot be properly considered. The system that has been in force there since the formation of the Territory is virtually set aside and abandoned, on account of the incompetency and want of familiarity of the judges with the system in vogue in the Territories.

It seems to me, therefore, that as an act of common justice to the people of the Territories, who have great interest there, there should at least be none appointed to fill offices in the Territories unless they are actual, bona fide residents of the Territory at the time of their appointment.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the words "bona fide residents" and inserting "citizens." As the amendment now stands it will not meet the difficulty referred to by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. FORT.]

Mr. FORT. I do not suppose the gentleman wants to strike out the words "bona fide," but merely to strike out "residents" and insert "citizens."

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. That will be the same thing. I am willing to leave in the words "bona fide," and strike out "residents" and insert "citizens."

Mr. FORT. I accept the amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. A man may be a bona fide resident and have taken up his residence yesterday or immediately preceding his appointment. I think, therefore, the word "citizens" would be better than "residents." I approve of the amendment most heartily, because it is in furtherance of home rule and local government, which of late years have been so much violated.

Mr. FORT. Let the amendment as modified be now read.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Provided, That all officers appointed by the President for the Territories shall be bona fide citizens of the Territories, respectively, for which they shall be appointed.

Mr. RUSK. I hope the gentleman will make an exception in favor of the soldiers; he has been the champion of the soldiers all the way through.

Mr. FORT. I will stand by the soldiers as long as the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. RUSK.]

Mr. RUSK. If you will make an exception in favor of the soldiers, I will not oppose the amendment.

Mr. MAGINNIS. You can find as many Union soldiers in the Territories as in other portions of the country.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. FORT as modified, it was agreed to; there being ayes 75, noes not counted.

The Clerk read as follows:

JUDICIAL.

For defraying the expenses of the Supreme Court and circuit and district courts of the United States, including the District of Columbia; and also for jurors and witnesses, and expenses of suits in which the United States are concerned, of prosecutions for offenses committed against the United States for the safe-keeping of prisoners, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1875, $65,000.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. I move to amend by inserting after the paragraph just read the following:

For the defraying of the expenses and fees of the United States marshal of the Territory of Utah and of summoning jurors and witnesses, of keeping and transporting prisoners and caring for the penitentiary, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For payment of amounts that may be certified to be due by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department, for expenses of recruiting and transportation of recruits, being for the service of the fiscal year 1871 and prior years, $243.94.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move to amend by adding after the paragraph just read the following:

For payment of J. A. Murray, of Minnesota, $174, the amount found due him by the proper accounting officers for services and expenses as detective in 1865.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall have to reserve a point of order on this claim.

Mr. DUNNELL. Before I make my remarks upon this amendment, I ask the Clerk to read a letter from the Treasury Department.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, THIRD AUDITOR'S OFFICE,
Washington D. C., May 24, 1875.

Sir: The claim of Mr. J. A. Murray for services, &c., in 1865 has been reported to the Second Comptroller, and, in accordance with his decision, so much thereof as has relation to the re-imbursement of Mr. Murray's expenses in May and June, amounting to $174, has been approved for payment. As, however, there are no funds in the Treasury available for the payment of accounts arising prior to July, 1870, the claim cannot be paid until Congress shall have made the necessary appropriation.

Very respectfully,

A. M. GANGEWER,
Acting Auditor.

Hon. M. H. DUNNELL, M. C.,
Owatonna, Minnesota.

Mr. DUNNELL. It will be seen at once that this amount of $174 was disbursed by this man for expenses in 1865, eleven years ago. The Treasury Department finds that this amount in due him. I had been led to suppose that provision would be made in this bill for the payment of this item; and I respectfully submit that the item to which I have offered it as an amendment must be of a like character. Some individual of course is to receive the amount named in that item.

Now, the person named in my amendment is a poor man, and has been unfortunate. He came to me and asked that I would look after this item. I had supposed it would be provided for in the deficiency bill. I am told by the Committee on Appropriations that I must go to the Committee of Claims. Now, everybody knows that that is very poor encouragement. The Committee of Claims may not have an opportunity to report it, and this Congress cannot be expected to pass one out of ten bills that may be favorably acted upon by that committee. I hope there will be no objection on the part of the Committee on Appropriations to providing in this bill for the payment of this amount found due by the proper accounting officers. It is for disbursements, money already paid out, about which there can be no doubt. It is not in the nature of a claim; it is in the nature of a liquidated amount. I trust there will be no objection to this amendment. It will increase the amount of the bill only $174, and will be a godsend to this poor man, to whom the amount is undoubtedly due.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. I have no doubt in my own mind that the friend of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] has been provided for in this appropriation bill. I hold in my hand Executive Document No. 152, which asks that $906,679 be re-appropriated to meet expenditures already appropriated for, but the fund to pay which has been covered into the Treasury. This $906,000 refers to the same class of claims as that which the gentleman here presents; and I have no doubt that if he will go to the Treasury Department he will find that his claim is here included.

Mr. DUNNELL. I do not find the name of this gentleman in that statement.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. No, it gives the name of nobody, or of very few persons. Here, for instance, is one item of $609,946 which the Department asks to be re-appropriated to pay claims to officers and enlisted men of the volunteer service for arrears of pay.

Mr. DUNNELL. That would not cover this man's case.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. Then there is an item for officers of the regular Army for transportation. There are many other items too numerous to mention, some of them running back a number of years, the money heretofore appropriated having been covered in the Treasury at the end of two years from the original appropriation. It appears by this statement that the amount carried to the surplus fund was $21,956,000; and we are asked to re-appropriate $906,679.

Mr. DUNNELL. I have looked over all these subdivisions, and I find none that will cover a case of this kind. I will, however, modify my amendment by adding to it these words:

In case said amount is not provided for in some other portion of this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. That would be very unsafe. Without waiving the point of order, I desire to say that a very large number of claims of this class which accrued prior to 1870 have gone to the Committee on Appropriations, but they have all been reported back for reference to the Committee of Claims with the exception of two amounting in the aggregate to less than $50, which by some means have found their way into this bill. It seems to be impossible for the Committee on Appropriations to consider this great body of small balances on the adjustment of small accounts which arose years ago. While the Committee on Appropriations may properly be called upon to provide for deficiencies occurring in the regular administration of the Government, everything in the nature of a claim ought to go to the proper committee.

Mr. DUNNELL. I respectfully submit that this is in the nature of a deficiency; that it is not properly to be regarded as a claim. Now, take the item which I find on the nineteenth page of this bill, "for settlement of the account of Major James A. Hearn, late Indian agent." To be sure, the amount is only $5.13.

Mr. HOLMAN. It ought not to be in the bill, I agree.

Mr. DUNNELL. Still it is there. I trust the Committee on Appropriations will make no opposition to the insertion of my amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. The House will see at once that to adopt an amendment of this kind is to put on an appropriation bill an appropriation which our committee has no means of examining. Besides, if I am not misinformed, this subject is now before a committee of this House—the Committee of Claims. Is it not?

Mr. DUNNELL. The case has been before the Committee of Claims.

Mr. RANDALL. That committee has power to pass upon it. The Committee on Appropriations has no means, and never had the means, to examine such cases properly.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. DUNNELL, it was not agreed to; there being ayes 44, noes not counted.

The Clerk read as follows:

To adjust the settled accounts of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, Treasury Department, being amount found due said Bureau for counting, trimming, sealing, and numbering national currency, involving no expenditure of money from the Treasury, being for the fiscal year 1875, $5,011.50, a transfer entry is hereby authorized.

Mr. STEELE. I move to amend by adding after line 147 the following:

The Clerk read as follows:

For payment of amount due Henry Housman for supplies furnished the Red Cloud agency in December, 1873, and January, 1874, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874, $339.66;

Amount due E. Nagle for oats, &c., furnished the Red Cloud agency in December, 1873, and April, 1874, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874, $180;

Amount due H. Haas for supplies furnished the Red Cloud agency in November and December, 1873, and January and February, 1874, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874, $377.11;

Amount due Jules Ecoffey & Co. for supplies furnished the Red Cloud agency in August and September, 1873, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874, $94.85;

Amount due Jules Ecoffey for the delivery at the Red Cloud agency, under contract, 119,000 feet of sawed lumber in March, 1874, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874, $1,779.05;

Amount due Todd Randall for one hundred tons of hay delivered at the Red Cloud agency, Dakota, in October, 1873, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874, $1,650;

Being in all the amount of $4,420.67.

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point of order on that amendment that it is a claim, and not in order to an appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman from Wyoming has any authority of law for this, he will send it to the Chair.

Mr. STEELE. I desire to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. I am willing to hear the statement of the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. STEELE. I wish to speak to the point of order. The measure now under consideration by the House is a bill making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for prior years, and for other purposes. This, then, is a bill making appropriations for deficiencies in the service of the Government, and I find here Executive Document No. 151, from the Treasury Department, certifying to this House certain amounts as deficiencies, for the payment of which appropriations are required by the various Departments of the Government to meet the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for prior years. It is an estimate of appropriations to meet deficiencies in the service of the Government. In this estimate of deficiencies certified to this House by the Secretary of the Treasury I find these amounts in the exact form and language in which I have submitted this amendment. Therefore I say, this being a bill making appropriations for deficiencies in the service of the Government, and these amounts being certified, not as claims, Mr. Speaker, but as adjudicated accounts, passed upon by the proper accounting officer and certified to this House as being due from the Government, the point of order will not justly lie against the pending amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I claim this is not only not in obedience to any law, but these sums are in violation of law, for they are expenditures in excess of appropriations. The Committee on Appropriations, as the gentleman has alluded to this document No. 151, I will say deemed all accounts of a like character in this document, and there are a great many of them, to be claims, and have instructed one of their members, who is ready at the proper time, to move their reference to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. STEELE. I desire to say if Congress does not propose to pay these claims that it ought to say so at once, and that will save gentlemen representing these districts all further trouble in reference to them.

Mr. RANDALL. We propose to pay them when the proper committee so determines they are debts due from the Government.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is compelled to overrule the point of order, upon the ground that these are estimates for carrying on the Government and have been certified from the proper Department as such.

Mr. STEELE. I simply desire to say, in reference to this amendment, that it embraces a class of claims which are very troublesome to all parties who have anything to do with the representation of the districts where they arise.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania says these expenditures are in violation of law; that they are expenditures beyond the appropriation. Nevertheless they are expenditures that have been incurred by various officers of this Government who have gone out among these people and purchased their property upon the implied promise that the Government would pay for it. Sir, one of these men, whose claim I make, and the payment of which I now seek for him, amounting to $1,800, has had his property sold on execution to pay for the very supplies which he furnished this Government two years ago, and for which the Government will not pay him. Sir, if you authorized these officers to go out and purchase these things, the Government certainly ought to pay for them. If the officer exceeded his authority, the person who sold him the supplies is not accountable for that. I understand the rule to be that an agent acting within the scope of his authority binds his principal, unless the party he deals with has knowledge that the agent is exceeding his authority. Now, sir, what knowledge did these tradesmen have when these men went to them to purchase these supplies for the Government that the appropriation was exhausted? If you make that a rule, no officer of this Government can purchase on credit one dollar's worth of supplies for the Government until he comes here to the Treasury and makes an examination to find out whether the appropriation is exhausted.

Mr. Speaker, every one of these claims is just. I venture to say not one of them is the claim of an Indian contractor. If it was, he would not be here now asking to be paid in a deficiency bill. On the contrary, they are the claims of tradesmen, men who deal in a small way, and who furnish supplies to the Government which to them are cash, and ought to be paid for as soon as possible.

Mr. RANDALL. The Committee on Appropriations have not the means to know whether these claims are just claims or unjust claims. They are sent to us. There are here twenty pages of closely-printed matter occupied with claims covering half a million of dollars. Now it is manifest that it is both physically and mentally impossible for the Committee on Appropriations to investigate these claims. They are claims; nothing but claims. The gentleman from Wyoming practically admits it. Therefore we did what we thought was next best, we referred the whole of them from our own committee to the appropriate committee of this House, whose duty it is to investigate such matters. If we had done anything different from that we should have been trenching upon the duties of another committee, besides inserting in the bill half a million of dollars about which we knew nothing.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. Will the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations allow me to ask him a question for information: whether or not these accounts have been presented to any proper tribunal or Department of the Government for examination and settlement?

Mr. RANDALL. I take it that they have been, and that there is no appropriation to pay them. But they are in the nature of claims nevertheless, and, as I am reminded by the gentleman from Indiana, in excess of law.

Mr. STEELE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if these accounts are not all certified here by the Secretary of the Treasury as being due?

Mr. RANDALL. Undoubtedly they are certified, and they cover in amount half a million of dollars. But I would not like to stand here and give my consent that half a millon of dollars shall be taken out of the Treasury without due and proper investigation by the proper committee of this House.

Mr. BRADLEY. I move to strike out the last two words. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if these claims that he speaks of, amounting to half a million of dollars——

Mr. RANDALL. Or thereabouts.

Mr. BRADLEY. Were not claims reported to the House from the proper Department?

Mr. RANDALL. I have said so.

Mr. BRADLEY. And by the House referred to the Committee on Appropriations. Then, I do not see, Mr. Speaker, but these claims stand in the same condition before the Committee on Appropriations as claims of a like nature that have been referred by the House to the Committee of Claims, and also to the Committee on War Claims for which bills have been recently reported by those committees.

Now if these are claims that have been passed upon by the Departments, a large number of them, amounting in the aggregate to nearly half a million of dollars, as the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations says, I would like to ask the gentleman what committee of this House is going into the details of all these claims to re-examine them? And I would like to call his attention to the fact that the bill which was passed here only last Friday, coming from the Committee on War Claims and opposed by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. NEAL,] comprised a large number of claims, I understand, of a similar nature. Then why is it not competent for the Committee on Appropriations to take cognizance of these claims, and to embrace them in some appropriation bill? And it strikes me that there is no more appropriate bill to put them into than this appropriation bill. Certainly it would seem to be advisable and to be the duty of this House to provide for these claims in some manner, and I hope the committee will consent to incorporate in this bill, or in some other to be soon reported, an amount sufficient to cover these claims, if they have been properly examined; for it is perfectly plain that no committee of this House can take up these claims in detail and re-examine all the evidence which has been once thoroughly examined by the Departments, and by officers who have had the testimony before them and were perfectly competent to go into the merits of the cases and determine whether they should be allowed or not.

Mr. RANDALL. We had no papers before us in the Committee on Appropriations in reference to these claims at all. There they stand on the statement of the Department. I do not think these claims should be paid unless they are each one investigated and found to be just.

Mr. BRADLEY. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on War Claims, the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. EDEN,] whether the claims in the bill reported by him a short time since and acted upon last Friday by the House, and for which provision was made by that bill, were not of a nature similar to this, and whether the evidence in detail in support of the various claims was examined by his committee?

Mr. EDEN. I cannot answer the gentleman's question fully, for the reason that I have not examined the claims now in question at all. The claims reported in the bill under consideration on Friday last were claims passed upon by the Quartermaster's Department and the accounting officers of the Treasury, particularly the Third Auditor, under the law giving them jurisdiction to hear testimony and examine the cases, and determine whether or not they were just claims against the Government.

Mr. BRADLEY. Now I understand these claims referred to by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations stand in the same condition before his committee, having been passed upon by the Department.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman allow me to make this statement: The claims in the bill considered last Friday were before the last Congress, were before the Committee on War Claims, were referred to a subcommittee of the Committee on War Claims, of which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] was chairman, and were all carefully examined into. The committee of this Congress reported on the strength of that examination.

Mr. RANDALL. Under the act of June 16, 1874.

Mr. STEELE. I desire to say a word. One thing is certain, unless an appropriation is made to pay these claims they cannot and they will not be paid. To refer them to a committee for examination is virtually to repudiate these claims.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I had the honor, in the last Congress, on the 3d of March, 1875, to move this same appropriation. These accounts were then a deficiency. They were adjudicated accounts against the Government, certified by the Indian Bureau and the Treasury Department to be due. They were not paid then; they have not been paid since, and are no nearer payment than they were at that time. One thing is certain, that unless Congress makes an appropriation to pay them, they never can and never will be paid.

I do not ask, Mr. Speaker, I assure the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that the House should pass an appropriation amounting to half a million dollars without any knowledge in reference to it. The only thing I ask is the payment of these four or five claims which I know to be just and which I know to be right, which the Treasury Department and the Indian Department have passed, audited, and declared to be proper accounts against the Government, amounting in the aggregate to $4,400.

Mr. HOLMAN. I presume that the point under discussion is well understood by the House. The House understands that the Committee on Appropriations have not made any examination of these claims at all; on the contrary, they have directed one of their members to report them back to the House with the recommendation that they be referred to the Committee of Claims. I now call the previous question.

Mr. MAGINNIS. Before the gentleman calls the previous question will he allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. HOLMAN. I will hear the question.

Mr. MAGINNIS. Has not this money been expended just as all other money is expended by the Government?

Mr. HOLMAN. We do not know anything about that. We have not examined the subject; but we do know this, that if these contracts were made and there was no money on hand to meet them, they were not made in conformity with law.

Mr. MAGINNIS. Then the whole deficiency bill is not in conformity with law. The point the gentleman makes against this amendment is good against the whole bill.

Mr. KASSON. I ask the gentleman from Indiana to allow me to offer the following as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming, [Mr. STEELE:]

The same to be paid only when ascertained by the proper accounting officers to have been expenditures of the class provided for by law, and to be justly due.

Mr. HOLMAN. O, I cannot yield for that.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. STEELE, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I offer the following amendment, to come in after line 147:

For payment of amount due as allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department of a voucher issued in payment for the delivery of one hundred and seventy-five head of beef-cattle at Fort Peck agency, in May, 1875, under contract of May 11, 1874, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1875, $4,032.

That amendment stands upon almost a similar basis as the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming, except that it is one year later, and is not included in the half million of dollars of claims referred to by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

This is the case of a man who, in pursuance of his contract, made under law, delivered one hundred and seventy-five head of beef-cattle to an agent on the requisition of that agent. He was obliged to do it. The agent called for the cattle, and he had to deliver them under his contract. He received a voucher. It came on to Washington, and went to the Interior Department, and was there audited and allowed; from there it went to the peace commission, by whom it was examined, audited, and allowed; from there it went to the Third Auditor's Office, and was there examined and pronounced correct; from there it went to the Comptroller's Office, where it was examined and ordered to be paid. When the order for payment was presented it was found that there was no money in the Treasury to pay it, and the Secretary of the Treasury certified that fact to the House. Now, how can that be called a claim? How can the Committee of Claims have any jurisdiction over it whatever? It is not a claim in any sense of the word. It is an adjudicated account, a deficiency made in accordance with law. I beg to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to the bad position in which he is placing the democratic party, of which I am a humble member not enfranchised by the fifteenth amendment, so far as a vote in the House is concerned. Of course the republican party are not only responsible for the general appropriations of last year, but also for all that is contained in this deficiency bill; the whole amount is charged up against them. Now, if you take this out of the deficiency bill and put it before the Committee of Claims, where it has no business whatever, and that committee allow it, and it be passed, then it will be charged to the democratic party, instead of to the republican party. I hope the gentleman will see the mistake he is making, and allow this amendment to be adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. It would be a very bad example to set.

Mr. MAGINNIS. O, no! it is a good democratic principle to pay just debts.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. MAGINNIS, and it was not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

For payment of amount found due by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department on settlement of the account of Major James A. Hearn, late Indian agent, on account of maintaining peace among and with the various tribes, bands, and parties of Indians, being for the service of the fiscal year 1871 and prior years, $5.13.

Mr. DUNNELL. I think the Committee on Appropriations should give us some explanation of this claim.

Mr. HOLMAN. Move to strike it out.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move to strike out that paragraph.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no objection to that.

Mr. DUNNELL. This claim ought certainly to go to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. I will say that this claim came before the House in Executive Document No. 152, which names this claim especially; the account was audited and the amount appropriated, and this is simply a re-appropriation, the money already appropriated having been covered into the Treasury.

Mr. DUNNELL. It is difficult for a man who is not on the Committee on Appropriations to see where the re-appropriation comes in. I move to strike out this clause.

The motion to strike out was not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. I now call the previous question upon the bill as amended.

Mr. HOLMAN. I reserved the right to go back to the paragraph embraced between lines 26 and 30.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. I will withdraw my call for the previous question for the present.

The paragraph referred to by Mr. HOLMAN was as follows:

To pay the assistant disbursing clerk of the House of Representatives the amount due him to the 30th of June, 1876, under a resolution of the House of June 20, 1874, $828.33.

Mr. HOLMAN. I presume it is not too late to raise the point of order on this paragraph, that it is not properly in this appropriation bill. I ask the Clerk to read the resolution of the House upon which this paragraph is based.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the salary of the assistant disbursing clerk of the House be fixed at the same rate with the assistant journal clerk, and that the Committee on Appropriations provide for the payment of the same.

Mr. HOLMAN. That resolution seems to be the only foundation for this clause. This clause is intended to make an appropriation to cover the additional salary for two years, by authority of that simple resolution of the House. I raise the point of order that there is no authority of law for this proposed appropriation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is inclined to believe that the point of order is made too late. No point was made when the paragraph was first read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rose to make the point of order as soon as the paragraph was read, but a member arose and moved an amendment to come in immediately after the paragraph.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman says that he made the point of order in time——

Mr. HOLMAN. I did not make the point of order, for I had no opportunity to do so. But, as soon as I could, I arose and asked to have this paragraph passed over without prejudice, so that I might ascertain the real facts before I called the attention of the House to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman says he reserved all the rights that would originally have pertained to him——

Mr. HOLMAN. I intended to do so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the Chair will sustain the point of order that there is no law authorizing this appropriation, and the clause is therefore ruled out.

Mr. ELKINS. I desire to move an amendment to this bill, if it is not too late.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. I call now for the previous question on the bill.

Mr. FORT. Can that be done while there is an amendment to be offered?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is in the House, not in Committee of the Whole, and the majority of the House can determine whether the previous question shall now be ordered or not.

Mr. ELKINS. I desire to offer my amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the previous question shall not be ordered, then the Chair will recognize the gentleman to move his amendment.

The previous question was seconded and the main question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TARIFF AND TAXATION.

Mr. MORRISON, from the Committee of Ways and Means, to which had been referred the bill (H. R. No. 1711) to revise and simplify existing laws imposing duties on imports and to reduce taxation, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3132) as a substitute therefor and moved that the same be printed, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and made a special order for two weeks from to-day, and from day to day until disposed of.

The bill was received, and read a first and second time.

The motion of Mr. MORRISON was agreed to.

Mr. COX. I move that an additional number of copies of this bill be printed for the use of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

TRANSFER OF THE INDIAN BUREAU.

Mr. SCALES. I now move that the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the special order, the bill transferring the Indian Bureau to the War Department.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will now resume the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2677) to provide for the transfer of the Office of Indian Affairs from the Interior to the War Department, upon which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COOK] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. COOK. "Give them hell" was the thrilling if not classic language with which the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] opened his speech upon this question the other day. If he intended that remark to apply to the Army, as no doubt he did, those who heard the speech, and the public who have read it, must be satisfied that it was a success.

The gentleman offered some explanation, or rather some apology, for the very earnest and zealous manner in which he defended the Indians and denounced the Army, whom he regarded as their greatest enemies. The explanation he offered for the earnest manner in which he delivered himself was that he was some Indian himself. He told us that he belonged to the great Tammany tribe, and passed a high eulogium upon the character of his Indian ancestors. I looked through the list of Indian names in order to see if I could find among them the name of my distinguished friend from New York, [Mr. COX.] I was astonished when I ascertained that his name was not there. I found Spotted Tail, Sitting Bear, Sitting Bull, Big Indian, Crooked Indian, and a great many other names, but among them all I could not find his name; his name seems to have been omitted entirely from the catalogue of distinguished Indian chiefs. [Laughter.]

The gentleman, in alluding to the peace policy and the character and conduct of Indian agents, subagents, and supervisors, must have drawn his morals and his ethics from his Tammany Hall notion of what was right and proper; and he certainly studied the Indian policy when he went up into the mountain of Algeria and looked down upon 600,000 Kabyles below him.

This question is one of deep interest to the country. Upon the discovery of our continent the Indians were estimated at 3,000,000; they are now estimated at 279,000. Of this number we are told 105,000 wear citizen's dress; the other 174,000 dress in their native costume, shave their heads, and paint their faces. They have lived upon game and the products of the earth such as they could find. They have been driven across the country before the tide of civilization and development, until the Pacific coast now turns them back. The Indians now occupy but a small and insignificant portion of this country, and are surrounded on all sides by the civilizing or demoralizing influences of the white man.

How are we to dispose of these Indians? How are we to provide for them? That is the great question. I shall argue this question not from the view which would be taken of it by the gentleman from Tammany Hall looking down upon it from the mountains of Algeria, but from a common-sense view of it. I shall discuss it as a man bound by the obligations of his oath to deal with this question in such a manner as to do justice to the Government and also to these people, to administer in good faith the treaty obligations which have been imposed upon us from time to time through generations in the most sacred and binding manner. I shall consider the question, first, as a matter of economy—of simple dollars and cents to the tax-payers of this country. I shall consider it next as a question of justice to the Indians—a matter of integrity in reference to the payments due to them. Finally, I shall consider the peace policy.

Taking first the economical view of this question, I find on looking at the records that up to 1849, when the Interior Department was organized and the care of the Indians transferred to it, from 1840 to 1850 the expense of caring for the Indians was $13,079,000. The annual appropriations ranged from $1,000,000 in 1840 to $1,799,000 in 1849. From 1850 to 1860 the expenses grew to $19,627,000. From 1865 to 1876, under the peace policy which we are now pursuing, the expenses of the maintenance of these Indians, outside of treaty stipulations, amounted to $57,242,295. Last year we expended for the support of the Indians more than $7,500,000; and for the current fiscal year the appropriation is $5,780,000. It will be thus seen that during this period of thirty years the Government has paid for the support of these Indians, outside of treaty stipulations, $39,949,000. This is an extraordinary sum to be contributed by the Government mostly as charity. We have a right to look into and scrutinize these expenditures. As we are the donors and the Indians the beneficiaries, we have a right to examine this question and to pass upon it as a matter of dollars and cents. When we make these people our wards and bestow this bounty upon them, we have a right to scrutinize the expenditure and see that they get the benefit of it.

From the evidence of officers of the Army, from the testimony of the Indians, and even of the Indian agents themselves, I am prepared to satisfy every man in this House who will examine the subject that year by year the Indians have never received one-half of the amount which has been appropriated for them. Of the appropriations made and the annuities provided for two years ago the evidence is that a large part has never been received by the Indians. A few years back the governors of Territories were ex officio the Indian agents; the money for the Indians in the Territories went into their hands; and we have the sworn testimony of a civilian, one of these peace men, that in one of those Territories only 25 per cent. of the amount appropriated by Congress could be traced to the hands of the Indians; that 75 per cent. of it was used by the governor for political purposes—for the purpose of organizing his Territory in the interest of the dominant party. That testimony is corroborated by every witness who testifies on the subject. The peace commission in 1868 was composed of as able and honest men as ever served this Government; yet when they looked into the frauds and rascalities perpetrated upon the Indians they recommended that every Indian agent should be removed or required to resign. The same thing occurred in the report made within the past year. The Secretary of the Interior was obliged to require all these new agents to resign; and the President became so well satisfied that he could not select men who would honestly and properly disburse the money appropriated for the benefit of the Indians, that he turned them over to the religious denominations of the country to see what they could do with them.

The Committee on Military Affairs have reported a bill which at a proper time I shall offer as a substitute for the bill reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, because it is much more elaborate and perfect in its details. The Military Committee examined some seventy or eighty gentlemen, officers and civilians. They examined them without knowing when they commenced the examination what were their views upon this question. Among those examined were gentlemen of long service in the Indian country, one of them having had twenty years' experience, and others eight, ten, and fifteen years, among the Indians, in various positions, entitling their views to the respectful consideration of the country. The civilians whom we had before us trembled at the thought that the Army was to take control of these ignorant savages, who they apprehended would be turned back in their progress toward civilization. I believe myself that the Indian is capable of great advancement in civilization and education.

I would vote for no measure which would retard or in any degree interfere with or destroy or neutralize any efforts the Government may see proper to make, or which religious societies of the country may make. But we have seen a gross failure in this policy. We have seen the money wasted. We have seen the Indians not benefited by it. We have seen the people of the country taxed year by year. And now what is the spectacle presented by this bill? We are asked, Mr. Chairman, to appropriate to the various Sioux tribes from a million and a half to two million dollars, not one dollar of which do we owe. By the eighth article of the treaty of 1868 those Indians were to be clothed for thirty years and fed for four years. The four years are expired, and not having any further claims upon the Government, they have to depend for their subsistence upon what they can steal from the citizens in the Territories where they live, or what is given them.

Look at the peace policy and read what it has been, so far as the Sioux tribe of Indians are concerned. They have removed these Sioux Indians from the Missouri River to the Red Cloud and Spotted Tail agency, two hundred and fifty or three hundred miles from navigation. They have located them in a country which Sherman and Sheridan and Hancock and Ord and every man who has seen it, as well as the Indian agents themselves, say is wholly and entirely unfit for cultivation. They say that the sterility of the soil renders it impossible under the most skilled agriculture for these people to maintain themselves upon it. Your peace commissioners did this. Your Indian agencies did it.

I wish this House to remember one fact, that all these Indian agencies are established irrespective of the Army. They are established without any conference or consultation with the Indian Department. The Indian agent takes his tribe, the Indians committed to his charge, locates his agency, and then calls upon the Government to build a fort and send troops to protect him.

The gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] however, says they do not want these soldiers there. General Sheridan in his testimony says that he has four applications now pending before him, pressing for the establishment of four agencies and to send troops to those agencies to protect them. He had those four applications before him when he testified before a committee of this House. One of these agencies was at Devil's Lake. I do not know where it is, but it ought to be close by Hell Gate, near which the gentleman from New York lives. [Laughter.] The names of the two places have a fitness, at all events. [Laughter.]

One witness testified they found a little tribe on the borders of New Mexico, somewhere beyond the Rocky Mountains, and that the Indian agent gathered them up, established an agency, and called upon the Government to build a fort, and the cost of that fort to the Government of the United States was over $400,000.

Now at that time they had in their regulations a provision that you could not establish an agency with less than fifteen hundred Indians. In the case just referred to, however, the Indian agent counted fifteen hundred and twelve; and Captain Thompson, an officer of the United States Army, who was there, swore that he and his whole command had counted these Indians repeatedly, and they never did find more than seven hundred and fifty.

Captain Thompson also testified to another fact; that the money appropriated for seed and for agricultural implements was wasted, as neither seed nor agricultural implements were sent to them until the season had passed, but that these cruel, harsh Army officers, out of their own money, bought seeds and the Indians scratched them into the earth with their fingers.

The great expense to the Government from the peace policy grows out of the fact that these agencies are established in this loose way. Sheridan says that on the Missouri River they built forts costing the Government about $60,000, and then, without any good reason for so doing which anybody could give, the agent gathered the Indians together and moved them about sixty miles farther, to which place he asked the removal of the forts. General Sheridan refused to do it, when the Interior Department appealed to the War Department, and he was compelled to do it at an additional expense of from $60,000 to $80,000.

The gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. YOUNG,] the other day when the question was discussed, asked whether we had heard from the Indians. I wish he was here now; I would like to tell him that we have heard from several of them. Here is what the commissioners say. I refer to the seventh page of the annual report of the commissioners; and this goes to illustrate how the money appropriated to civilize the Indians is expended. I want gentlemen to listen:

> Each of these agencies has a butcher who is paid $900 per annum for his services. There are also several employés at each agency who have little to do, and are paid $40 or $50 a month.

This is the wise and just policy under which you are paying $900 to have a butcher slaughter cattle for the Indian who has been killing buffalo beeves for all the years of his life! In addition you pay $40 or $50 a month to others to aid the butcher. Here is your economy. There are thousands of citizens in this city begging for what? Not for money; not for clothes; but begging for labor, employment, that they may earn an honest living. Yet here you are voting $900 a year to a butcher upon the distant plains, and $40 or $50 a month for his assistants, to slaughter cattle for the Indians!

In the minority report, and I wish to call especial attention to it, we are told the Indian Bureau furnishes the Indians with less valuable clothing than the soldiers, therefore costing less, and that it would be better, so far as economy is concerned, to abide by the present system.

Well, now, here is what the Indians say about the clothing. I ask the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts, of the Committee on Indian Affairs, to this. This is from Mr. Blackfoot's speech made to the Indian agent, and this is what he says about the clothing the Indians get:

> We sell our land, and what do we get for it? We get a pair of stockings, and when we put them on they go to pieces. They get some old shirts and have them washed and give them to us; we put them on and our elbows go right through them. They send us tin kettles; we go to get water to carry to our lodges; we dip the water up, but it all runs out again. That is what we get for our land. Why do they not send us annuity goods?

That is the testimony of one of the Indians delivered to the Indian agent and recorded in the report of the Commissioner for 1873. There were several other Indians who gave similar testimony. I wish my friend from Tennessee [Mr. YOUNG] was here, that he might listen to it. This is what Napoleon said:

> We never saw any man as agent on the reservation who had pity on the Indians; they all frightened them. As soon as the new agent comes on the reservation the Indians go away; they wander all over the country, get whisky, and are killed.

These are the pious gentlemen that are going to civilize and christianize them.

> When some of our agents who are gone were here, there were many Indians on the reservation. The agents brought whisky on the reservation and drank it; the Indians thought it must be good and now they drink it. That is what killed the Indians, and we feel sad; that is what I want to tell you; that is what makes the Indians leave the reservation. There is no farm because there are no Indians to make it.

I ask the attention of gentlemen over there to this passage. This is another Indian's testimony:

> When the white people come as agents or superintendents they get rich. When the President sends a poor white man as agent, he says you must go to the Indians and work with them. The President sends the money, but the Indians never get a cent of it. We do not know where the money goes; perhaps it is drowned on the way. All these tribes receive no money from the President. We cannot say anything else; this is true. Listen to what we say, and take it to the President, and write back to us from Washington. You see these old Indians; they cannot go to school; they are too old. I was sorry when Father Chirouse went to the woods. I am not a priest; I am an Indian, not a white man.

He rejoiced that he was an Indian. Here is the testimony of another Indian. All these testimonies were given at a council of the Indians at which the Commissioner of Indian Affairs had a representative:

> Perhaps the President thinks all the Indians are good as they were to be under the treaty. But they are not; they are Indians still. I think there was plenty of money sent by the President, but I think much did not come here. Perhaps it gets scattered; really think it does not come. When it comes it is in calico; but I know there is more sent than gets here. Every agent gets rich that comes here.

Mark that. "Every agent gets rich that comes here;" and "perhaps it gets scattered."

> Mr. Hale, the superintendent, got rich off our money.

Perhaps somebody knows Mr. Hale.

He bought a steamboat with it. If all your white men knew how poor the Indian is, your hearts would ache; but they feel better when they see you. They tell their complaints, and they will go to the President. All the Indians are glad that you came. These old Indians never came before.

That is Frank who is speaking. The next is Spar. Here is what he says:

When the agents came they never taught us anything; never said, Go and fix your places. All they think of is to steal, to sell the reservation cattle and the reservation hay, to sell the fruit and get all they can, to go and log and sell them.

I do not understand that Indian phrase. Perhaps the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] does.

Mr. COX. What is the gentleman reading from?

Mr. COOK. From the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for 1871.

Mr. GLOVER. It means selling timber.

Mr. COOK. There is a member of this House, and perhaps he is within the sound of my voice, who lives in one of the Eastern States, and who told me the other day that a young man went out from his State as an Indian agent who was not worth a dollar on a salary of $1,500, and at the end of four years he returned to his native place and invested $150,000 in property. These people to take care of the Indian! They know that money is the root of all evil, and that if an Indian gets it it will ruin him; so they take care of it for him, I suppose.

I have not got much from the treaty—a blanket or two at a time. My people don't like this; they know the President sends more than we get. Governor Stevens said at the close of the treaty we would get rifles and shot-guns. Perhaps what Governor Stevens said was not true. Governor Stevens promised us a schooner. From this day I have heard some of the words Governor Stevens said. Hereafter I want you white men to find me work, so that I can earn something.

Mr. SCALES. The time having arrived when the House takes a recess, if my friend from Georgia will yield to me I will move that the committee rise.

The motion that the committee rise was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. GARFIELD having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. BLACKBURN reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the special order, the bill (H. R. No. 2677) to transfer the Office of Indian Affairs from the Interior to the War Department, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ADMISSION OF NEW MEXICO.

Mr. SOUTHARD, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Territories, reported back the bill (S. No. 229) to enable the people of New Mexico to form a constitution and State government, and for the admission of said State into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, with amendments; and moved that the bill and amendments be printed and recommitted.

Mr. RANDALL. Not to come back on a motion to reconsider.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced to the House that the Senate agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 417) for continuing the work of improving the Capitol grounds.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 563) to provide for the sale of extra copies of public documents and for the distribution of the regular official editions thereof; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana, by unanimous consent, obtained indefinite leave of absence, to date from Monday last.

S. S. TURNER.

On motion of Mr. HOAR, by unanimous consent, leave was given to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the matter of the petition of S. S. Turner, on which there was no adverse report.

The hour of half past four having arrived, the House, pursuant to order, took a recess until half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House re-assembled at half past seven o'clock, and was called to order by Mr. BLACKBURN as Speaker pro tempore.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. COX in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2571) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the pending paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

For detecting and bringing to trial and punishment persons guilty of violating the internal-revenue laws, or conniving in such crime, including payments for information and detection, $60,000.

Mr. FOSTER. I move in line 635 to strike out "60" and insert in lieu thereof "100," so as to make the amount of the appropriation $100,000.

Mr. RANDALL. Does the gentleman desire to speak to that amendment?

Mr. FOSTER. Just a moment, Mr. Chairman. This clause appropriating for the Department a sum of money for detecting and bringing to punishment parties who are guilty of crimes against the internal-revenue laws originated in the repeal of the detective system, or the moiety system. It is true, sir, that for the last year or two the sum expended for this purpose has not exceeded $60,000; that is to say, that a portion of this appropriation made by Congress has annually been covered into the Treasury; but I think it is unwise to reduce this appropriation to the lowest possible amount that the Department has in previous years expended. I would leave it at $100,000, fearing that circumstances may be such as to require that amount.

Mr. RANDALL. There remains unexpended, as I am informed, of the amount that was appropriated for the year ending June 30, 1874, $86,000. I think that $125,000 was appropriated for that year. For the year ending June 30, 1875, there remained $52,000 unexpended. I do not know the amount appropriated for that year, but for the year ending June 30, 1876, (the current year,) the appropriation was $100,000 and there remains now unexpended $67,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Sixty-seven thousand dollars has already been expended?

Mr. RANDALL. No, that amount remains.

Mr. FOSTER. Unexpended?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, unexpended. I have here a statement of the amount expended from July, 1875, to the 1st of March, 1876, and it was $34,000. I had a conference this morning with Mr. Yaryan, and he told me that he did not believe that more than between $40,000 and $50,000 would be expended for this purpose before the 30th of June next. He said that $60,000 would be quite sufficient. I have here his letter, which I will insert in the RECORD as a part of my remarks. I will state, however, for the information of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HILL] that this money is expended, first, for expenses in discovering and breaking up illicit distilleries, &c.; second, for rewards for information of violations of law; third, for expenses of preparing transcripts of books of dealers in spirits and tobacco to detect frauds committed at distilleries, &c.; fourth, for expenses of watching distilleries to detect fraud, &c.; fifth, for expenses of witnesses not paid by court, &c.; and sixth, for the preparation of evidence to be used in the trials growing out of the late seizures.

The letter is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, April 12, 1876.

SIR: In compliance with your request, I have the honor to inclose herewith a statement showing the amount that has been expended up to March 31, 1876, as per accounts that have been received and acted upon from the appropriation "for detecting and bringing to trial and punishment persons guilty of violating internal-revenue laws;" and also showing under several different heads the manner and for what specific purposes this amount has been expended. It is known that there are a number of similar accounts, particularly for rewards for information furnished for services prior to March 31, 1876, that have not yet been presented, and of course are not included in the above amount. The amount thus outstanding can only be estimated, but I presume it will not fall much short of, say $4,000.

Respectfully,

D. D. PRATT, Commissioner.

Hon. S. J. RANDALL,
House of Representatives.

Appropriation for "detecting and bringing to trial and punishment persons guilty of violation of internal-revenue laws;" expended from July 1, 1875, to March 31, 1876, as per accounts received.

1.	For expenses in discovering and breaking up illicit distilleries, &c	$10,363 00
2.	Rewards for information of violations of law	3,105 00
3.	Expenses of preparing transcripts of books of dealers in spirits and tobacco to detect frauds committed, distilleries, &c	4,350 00
4.	Expenses of watching distilleries to detect fraud, &c	1,334 00
5.	Expenses of witnesses not paid by court, &c	6,246 00
6.	Preparation of evidence to be used in the trials growing out of the late seizures	8,800 00
	Total	34,198 00

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to say in justice to this branch of the service, that the examination I made this morning indicated to me that none of this money is misused and some of it is used to very great advantage. In the neighborhood where these illicit distilleries are, information is regularly received of the coming of an internal-revenue officer; they get word of it, as it were by magic; it is telegraphed or communicated in some way. Some of this money has been used in the employment of persons unknown to the distillers, sometimes citizens of the very place or neighborhood where the illicit distilleries are carried on, and who can go among them and discover these frauds.

I confess that I looked with some degree of suspicion myself upon the expenditure of this money, but to-day's investigation at the Department convinced me that the money is not improperly, and certainly not dishonestly expended.

Mr. FOSTER. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. HILL. I believe there is no amendment now before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no amendment now pending.

Mr. HILL. Then I move to strike out the whole paragraph, so as to pay nothing for the purpose of paying informers. I believe, Mr.

Chairman, that the whole habit of employing informers in connection with the revenue service is exceedingly vicious. I believe, in the first place, that not one dollar is saved to the Government by that system. I believe from the investigation which I have given to the subject that the Government expends more in paying informers than it collects from the revenue; and I believe that the oppressions and wrongs inflicted upon the people fraudulently by these informers exceed tenfold, almost, the amount of any profit possible to the Government by reason of this system of informers.

In the first place, Mr. Chairman, I do not myself believe an informer. I believe that a man who enters into that business and agrees to become a scavenger for pay is unworthy of pay and is doing a great deal to demoralize the country. These oppressions, sir, are especially extravagant in some portions of the country. A large portion of the district which I represent here is composed of what are called the mountain counties. The population there are poor; they are laborers; and these informers go into that country and commit all kinds of depredations under the pretense of enforcing the revenue laws.

As evidence upon this point I ask the Clerk to read one of many letters I have received from that portion of the country.

The Clerk read as follows:

ELLIJAY, GEORGIA, March 10, 1876.

DEAR SIR: Since writing to you before, we have come into the possession of facts that go to prove beyond cavil that one of the most corrupt rings has existed for years in this country. A considerable belt of our country has been for years unmolested for the purpose of carrying on a trade in illicit whisky. Parties co-operating with revenue men have been very active in encouraging the running of these distilleries by getting hold of stills from revenue men, and selling them to different parties and inducing them to engage in the business, agreeing to buy all the whisky, and to protect them from interference, assuring them that they could control the revenue officials.

This trade has been carried on to a great extent as long as it was thought profitable or safe to do so. Now these same parties act the part of detectives, and have the stills and property all seized, the parties arrested, and then extort money from them by way of compromising their cases. Numerous instances have come to our knowledge of these kinds of transactions. In order to carry out their schemes and harass and oppress the people, and, we may say, add insult to injury, the most noted criminals and desperate and abandoned characters in the country have been employed to execute the laws. Such villains and vagabonds are honored with office and armed with power to oppress the people. We need an investigating committee to look into this matter. We have the evidence, and can unearth one of the meanest, if not one of the biggest frauds that have been perpetrated in the name of law. If we cannot get a committee, then let the Departments send us a detective, and we can put him in possession of the facts.

Our people are represented as outlaws, standing out in defiance of law, when the truth is our people have taken the matter in hand, and we can furnish the proof that at least in Gilmer County not a single illicit distillery exists, and the people do not intend to tolerate one in the future. If we do not get relief in some way the people will actually suffer. In some neighborhoods nearly every man is either arrested or taken off as a witness, to attend for weeks in Atlanta, right at the time they ought to be engaged in their crops. We presume that you are aware of the fact that most of these violations are of the most frivolous and trifling character, involving but little in value to the Government, and the parties are arrested only for the purpose of securing fees and rewards out of the Government or of extorting money out of the parties by way of compromise. These are substantially facts and can be proved when necessary.

Many of these warrants are sworn out upon pretended information by deputy marshals, and a class of base characters in their employ are ready to commit them before the commissioner, and he has his office fifty miles from this place, the commissioner in this county having been removed before the work of destruction commenced.

With high regard, we are yours very truly, &c.,

J. C. ADLEN.
WM. ELLINGTON, C. S. C.
G. H. RANDELL, Sheriff.
J. R. JOHNSON, M. D.
J. M. WATKINS, M. D.

Hon. B. H. HILL,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. HILL. I wish to state to the House that I know these gentlemen personally, and they are entitled to absolute credit. Their statements establish the fact that these informers, in conspiracy with deputy marshals, some of whom I know, and some of whom have recently been detected in the commission of offenses——

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HILL. I would like a little more time.

Mr. ATKINS. I will take the floor and yield my time to the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. HILL.]

Mr. HILL. I thank the gentleman for his courtesy. I say these gentlemen are entitled to absolute credit. I have had that letter read to the House as a specimen of the letters I have received upon this subject. I have in my possession a long list of names of citizens who have been arrested and carried fifty miles, some of them in chains, and who are ready to testify that they paid for being released, and to state the sums of money each one paid to be discharged from arrest.

In addition to that, we have proof positive that hundreds of cases—I say just what I mean; hundreds of cases—have occurred in these mountain counties where parties have been arrested without the slightest evidence against them; and, there being no commissioner to try them nearer than Marietta, Cartersville, or Atlanta, from fifty to eighty miles, and being liable to be marched off on foot, and sometimes in chains, the informers have proposed to them to take a given sum of money to discharge them; and rather than be carried that distance many innocent men have paid the money.

Mr. HURLBUT. I notice that in this communication just read there was a request that the Government would send a detective down there.

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. HURLBUT. Then it would not do to strike out this paragraph making an appropriation for the payment of a detective force.

Mr. HILL. My argument is for the purpose of showing that this system pays nothing to the Government and is a robbery of the people. I had an interview upon this subject with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and I called upon him for information as to the expenses of the prosecutions in this portion of the State of Georgia. He told me that the expense to the Government would average $135 for each person. Now, three out of four of those who are arrested and refuse to purchase their ransom are discharged as not guilty; about one in four is convicted. I learned recently, directly from a court which was in session last week, that a large batch of these persons had been brought down there and not one in ten was convicted.

Mr. RANDALL. Are these grain distillers or fruit distillers?

Mr. HILL. Some of them are not distillers at all; they are charged with distilling when they are not guilty.

Mr. RANDALL. There are only about twenty grain distilleries in all Georgia.

Mr. HILL. I know that.

Mr. RANDALL. And about four hundred fruit distilleries.

Mr. HILL. I understand that there is a small still of some kind that these officers have got up and carried among these people and encouraged them to use, in order to get up a pretext upon which to arrest them. In addition to that, these people are laborers, making their living by their own labor. They are arrested at this season of the year when if they do not plant their crops they cannot make any. I have made an estimate from the data furnished me, and adding the wrong to the people to the expense to the Government I cannot make it less than $500 a head. I have it from a judge of the district court that a month ago there were three hundred in jail there, and the poor creatures are often compelled to remain in jail three times as long as their sentences would be if convicted, for want of a court to try them.

Mr. RANDALL. There must be some mistake about the gentleman's statement. His estimate is that there are three hundred of these cases, costing $100 each, which would be $30,000. Now the records of the Department show that there was only $34,000 in the whole United States expended for this purpose during the last nine months.

Mr. HILL That is perfectly explainable. I understand from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that the informer gets paid for only those that he convicts, whereas he fills the jail with innocent men who lie there for months before they can be tried. In addition to that, the larger number of those whom they arrest purchase their ransom. In that case the Government gets nothing. The proceeding is simply the levying of black-mail upon the people by these informers. The supervisor of internal revenue told me himself at the time three hundred were in jail that he had five hundred more reported and informed upon, and that really he did not know what to do.

Mr. HURLBUT. Why do you not indict those officers for conspiracy?

Mr. HILL. Why, sir, we have already commenced that; but what good will that do? How does that relieve these innocent people? How does that answer the argument that the Government is making nothing by this system of information and the people are being oppressed most alarmingly? You see by the letter which has been read something of the condition of affairs, and I learn by the papers that one deputy marshal has recently been indicted for highway robbery and another has left the country to avoid indictment. But that does not meet the evil. The trouble is that, under pretense of serving the Government, these officers are serving themselves. They are levying black-mail upon the people under pretense of collecting the revenue. I do not blame the Government in this matter; it is impossible that it can always have honest officials. I say the error is in the system. I have no faith in men who make it a business to turn informers upon the people.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HALE. Mr. Chairman, I do not know anything about the condition of things as portrayed by the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. HILL,] because I have not had the opportunity of observation that he has had. But I agree with him fully; and I go further as to the Government by appropriations recognizing or encouraging the informer anywhere. Wherever such a provision is found in a bill before Congress, I go for striking it out. This paragraph I would amend by striking out the words "for information," because the whole system of encouraging the informer is contrary to what should be the spirit and practice of our Government. It is a thing that comes down from the repressive days of monarchy, from the days of irresponsible central power, under which bands of spies and informers have been accustomed to do espionage upon the private citizen, watching and waiting for him to report him to headquarters so that he might be haled before the authorities, and in many cases, as the gentleman from Georgia has said, black-mailed instead of fairly punished. It is a system upon which you cannot run the Government without the saddest and grossest abuses. It is a system which in our Government is less needed than under any other, because there is no part of our system for the collection of taxes in which we do not liberally provide regular officials whose duty, whether in the customs or the internal revenue, is to so patrol and police the land that all infractions of the revenue laws shall be brought to light. If we have not force enough for this, I would increase the force; but I would not anywhere encourage the spy, the informer, the sneak, who, whenever he is inclined to inform, if he can get his money down from the man whom he proposes to inform against, will shut his jaws in secrecy instead of reporting to the Government, and therefore no benefit comes to the revenue.

It is a system that everywhere, in the Executive Departments here in Washington or elsewhere, should never be encouraged. We are likely any day here in Washington to fall into the condition of profound skepticism in the public mind in regard to all sorts of charges against any man, because of the encouragement given to the informer. No man's reputation is safe. No reputation, however much built up by good deeds in the past, is safe against the man who writes a letter or dispatch to some official or some committee that he has information against some one whose character he wishes to smirch. The gentleman from Georgia is right, but the evil extends further than the executive department, and I predict that as the result of the encouragement of the informer and black-mailer, the American people will sooner or later fall into the condition of skepticism into which the English people fell after the performances of Oates and Bedloe: they will believe nothing.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, in addition to what has already been said, I desire to bear my testimony in this matter. The laws ought to be so fair, so just, and so equitable that all good men in the country would desire to see them carried out. There is now so much opposition in the minds of the people of the country against spies and informers that they do not feel that interest in having the laws enforced which they otherwise would. It is my opinion that the system of spies and informers, instead of being a benefit to the country in collecting the revenue, really amounts to an obstruction in the collection. The juries of the country have so little confidence in the testimony of hired informers—men who come forward and testify for pay—that they very seldom will find a verdict on that side upon which these informers have sworn.

I am opposed to this system of spies and informers from principle. It is not an American idea. It does not become a Government like ours, a Government of a great and a free people. It is an idea that we borrowed—and I am sorry we ever borrowed it—from tyrants who instituted a system of watch and espionage upon the people in order to carry out their own ambitious designs. I am opposed to it. What we need is to simplify the collection of the internal revenue. We do not need to have, as we now have, hired spies and informers, and also deputy marshals traveling all through the land with pistols buckled to them.

What we want is more faith in the people—that is what we want in order to collect the internal revenue. I hope the time is coming, and is near by, when a man's oath will be worth something. We look back to the good old times when a man rendered an account of his taxable property upon oath, and it was believed. Now how is it? You have a man with a long stick, with notches in it, to measure the barrel, and you have another to act as store-keeper, and you have a man's distillery tied up all round with a padlock as big as a peck upon everything connected with the concern. Now, what is the impression made upon the people by this? That a man's oath is not worth a cent, and you have to hire men and pay them often more than the revenue is worth to watch them.

I am praying, Mr. Chairman, for the time when a man's oath will be regarded as something valuable. I tell you, sir, a great deal of oppression is in the country through the workings of the Internal-Revenue Bureau. The people of the country desire to love this Government and its laws, but in many places they are oppressed; they are ground to powder through the workings of this internal-revenue law.

What we want is to simplify the collection of the internal revenue. And just here permit me to state a case of oppression which occurs to my mind, while I am on the floor. It is this: A man hired his team to another, and in about two hours afterward the man who had hired the team was accosted by one of these detectives, and inside of the wagon was a jug with a gallon of spirits in it; and what was the result? The owner of the team was arrested and carried off to jail. His property was taken from him. It is true when he came to stand the test in court he was cleared, but it cost him $110, although he was innocent. That grew out of this system of spies.

Now, Mr. Chairman, is the time; let us strike out that paragraph. No more spies and informers for me, and I believe that is the wish of the country.

Mr. RANDALL. The Committee on Appropriations are not responsible in any degree for a practice such as the gentleman has animadverted upon. The committee found that practice in existence. They found by reason of the estimate that the Department believed it to be necessaay for the collection of the revenue, and they were unwilling to throw any obstacle in the way of the faithful collection of the internal revenues.

Now I wish to re-affirm deliberately here what I said previously when upon the floor, that the administration of this fund, so far as I know, and so far as I am able to find out, has been honest and upright. It was under this fund, and by the officer in charge of it, that your Saint Louis frauds were exposed and those engaged in them brought to punishment. The same is true of Milwaukee. The same is true of Chicago. Is there anybody here who believes that the moneys expended for those purposes were spent in vain?

Mr. HALE. Does he know in the cases to which he is referring any money has been paid to informers?

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know it has been paid to informers, but I do know that through the agency of the Bureau this gentleman presides over the Secretary was first informed of the Saint Louis conspiracy to defraud the revenues of the country.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. HILL. I should like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question.

Mr. WIKE. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will yield to me.

Mr. HALE. I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania yields to me.

Mr. RANDALL. I yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. HALE. I believe you must keep up the detective force, but the informer is the man I would strike at. I do not believe in the cases referred to by the gentleman a dollar has been paid from the Treasury to any informer.

Mr. RANDALL. I measured every word I uttered a moment ago, and I stand ready to bring the proof from the Department to the truth of what I stated.

Mr. HALE. Does the gentleman know any money was paid to informers?

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know whether any money was paid to informers or not.

Mr. HILL. I should like to ask whether it was not done by the special agents which we provided for last night?

Mr. RANDALL. I know the Bureau in charge of this officer, by his industry, by his integrity, first brought, as I am informed, to the notice of the Secretary of the Treasury the conspiracy in which the chief clerk of the Treasury Department, Mr. Avery, was engaged.

Mr. HALE. He is an officer, not an informer.

Mr. HILL. That is it; not an informer.

Mr. RANDALL. I did not say he was an informer.

Mr. HALE. That is all the point I make.

Mr. WIKE. I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania as to the propriety of the action of this House in reference to the celebrated letter of Mr. Pierrepont concerning this very matter——

Mr. RANDALL. I did not hear the gentleman's question.

Mr. WIKE. Unless your position is correct, we cannot animadvert upon the proposition of Mr. Pierrepont in reference to his letter.

Mr. RANDALL. Why, sir, Mr. Pierrepont's letter, if it meant anything, meant or had this effect, whether that was the motive or not, to interfere with the punishment of these people.

Mr. WIKE. That is it exactly.

Mr. RANDALL. But I want to say deliberately to the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE,] and other gentlemen on that side of the House, that if they do not want this money for the purposes for which it is sought, then it is not for this side of the House or the Committee on Appropriations to insist upon it. But you must not come forward and say that we have interfered in any respect with the full collection of the internal revenue or the punishment of fraud.

Mr. HALE. This is not a party question at all.

Mr. RANDALL. This section says nothing about informers.

Mr. HILL. Yes, sir; it does.

Mr. HALE. I desire to ask the chairman whether any formal amendment has been offered since my amendment to strike out the words "information and?"

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the committee that the rule has not been observed exactly in the mode of debate—five minutes for and five minutes against an amendment; that should have been observed.

Mr. HALE. I only wish my amendment should be the one first voted on, to strike out the words "information and," before the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia to strike out the entire paragraph.

Mr. ROBBINS, of North Carolina rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maine insist on a vote on his amendment?

Mr. HALE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HILL. I desire to say a word on the amendment of the gentleman from Maine.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on this amendment, which is an amendment to an amendment.

The question being taken on Mr. HALE'S amendment to the amendment, the Chairman stated that in the judgment of the Chair the ayes had it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for a division.

Mr. GLOVER. I think the gentleman from Maine is mistaken in the effect of his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I hope the gentleman will allow it to be debated before it is pressed to a vote.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have called for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 42, noes 84; no quorum voting.

So, further count not being demanded, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ROBBINS, of North Carolina. I move to strike out the last word.

I was in hopes that the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] when he arose a while ago, had risen to accede to the proposition of the gentleman from Georgia to strike out the entire paragraph. I am in favor of striking it out. And for the reason, Mr. Chairman, that if the laws are good, and the people are capable of self-government, they will execute the laws without the intervention of these paid secret agents. This system of spies and detectives is growing upon our body-politic as a fungus, that ought to be eradicated root and branch I think we have seen enough of how this system works in these later days to satisfy us how evil and injurious the system is.

My district, sir, is one of the grand theaters where this kind of work is done, which was spoken of so well by my friend from Georgia, [Mr. HILL.] There is a system of oppression and of black-mailing and underhanded dealing with the people there which I trust this House will grant a committee to go and investigate before the session shall come to an end, in order that these abuses may be corrected.

I need not go into the details. If I had time I could consume hours giving you a history of the extraordinary oppressions and frauds that are perpetrated there against the people, not against the law by the people, but against the people by these professed agents of the law, these accredited agents and detectives and spies and informers.

I think myself, sir, that the whole internal-revenue system ought to be abolished, and a tariff fixed by which we could raise enough money to carry on the Government upon economical principles. I am well satisfied that the internal-revenue system ought to be abolished entirely, because it is such a grand engine of tyrannical power. Your Executive has a representative in every neighborhood that is advocating his personal cause. And to-day the President of the United States can get the vote of every one of them for emperor in my section of the country; because, if he were in for life, they would be in for life. They have no principle, and they go in only for the spoils and for office.

The system, Mr. Chairman, ought to be abolished; and, if it cannot all be abolished, let us at least strike out this paragraph and remit the execution of the law to the law officers of the Government and the honest disposition of the masses of the people to see all laws executed so far as they are right and equal and fit to be executed.

Mr. HOUSE. The same voice that comes from Georgia and from North Carolina comes from nearly every State in the South and the West in reference to these spies and informers that are turned loose upon the people in the shape of deputy marshals; they are the same as spies.

I agree with the gentleman from North Carolina first up [Mr. VANCE] that the idea of a government turning loose upon its citizens a horde of detectives is an un-American idea and is beneath the dignity of this American nation, or country, or whatever you choose to call it. I believe it is disputed on this floor what it should be called. [Laughter.] If it is a Republic, the practice is unrepublican. If it is a nation, it is not national and not respectable. They talk about these detectives bringing guilty men to punishment. Where they bring one guilty man to punishment they oppress a hundred innocent men. They are wholly unworthy of credit, Mr. Chairman, in a large majority of instances. I should feel, Mr. Chairman, if I were to hang a dog upon their testimony, for the balance of my life that I had been guilty of murder. [Laughter.] Here is the Government turning loose detectives on its citizens and paying them for works of informing and oppression out of the National Treasury. I say, sir, it is anti-republican and ought not to be tolerated, and is a disgrace to the nation which ought to be wiped out by striking out this section. This system does no good, sir, but it oppresses the citizens of the country. Why, sir, I am receiving letters every day as a member of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice upon this subject, and there is a universal cry coming up from every part of the country against these infamous men who are paid by the Government to do their work of oppression, and in nine cases out of ten, ay, sir, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, on innocent men, whom they oppress and black-mail and drive from their homes or throw into prison.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have but one word to say, and then I desire to appeal to the committee to close debate upon this paragraph. We have largely reduced the appropriations as gentlemen know, on page 25 of this bill, for store-keepers, agents, surveyors, gaugers, &c.; we have largely reduced the appropriation for this purpose, reduced it indeed to the extent of over half a million of dollars, and out of that appropriation heretofore quite a large number of agents have been employed. An appropriation of $100,000 has been made annually for the purposes contemplated in the paragraph proposed to be stricken out. I do not think the House should take upon itself the responsibility of contravening the views of the acknowledged competent and honest head of an important Bureau by refusing him a reasonable appropriation for the purpose of employing agents to prevent frauds on the public revenue, and that he asks this is known to every gentleman here. I was willing to reduce this appropriation to $40,000. I was willing to reduce the appropriation for store-keepers, agents, and other subordinates employed in his Bureau to the extent of $600,000, but I insist that some reasonable regard should be paid to the views of this official, a gentleman of acknowledged ability and of acknowledged integrity, and who is at the head of one of the most important Bureaus of the Government.

Now, without consuming the time allotted to me, I ask unanimous consent that the debate upon this paragraph shall cease now; otherwise I shall move that the committee rise for the purpose of moving in the House to close debate, with the consent of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. I now ask unanimous consent that the debate cease now upon this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any objection?

Mr. FOSTER. I object.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move, then, that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate upon this paragraph.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope the gentleman will allow me five minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will consent to allow ten minutes' debate when we go back into the committee.

Mr. FOSTER. The debate has been all upon the other side of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask, then, unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph be limited to ten minutes.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Say fifteen minutes?

Mr. HOLMAN. O, no; Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 71, noes 58.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BLACKBURN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. COX reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, pursuant to the order of the House, had had under consideration the special order, being a bill (H. R. No. 2571) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of further considering the legislative, &c., appropriation bill; and pending that motion I move that all debate on the pending paragraph be limited to ten minutes.

Mr. HILL. Say fifteen minutes.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was put; and on a division there were—ayes 30, noes 84.

Mr. MILLS. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust that the gentleman from Texas will not consume the time of the House in this way. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. Thirty minutes at least. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. HOLMAN. I now ask unanimous consent that when the House again resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union debate be limited to fifteen minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I hope the gentleman will make it twenty minutes.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. I object; if the gentleman will say thirty minutes, I think that will give satisfaction to everybody; gentlemen wish to discuss this question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I will ask unanimous consent that debate be limited to twenty minutes, and I stand by that.

Mr. SCALES. Say thirty minutes?

Mr. MILLS. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection being made to the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] the question is upon the demand of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] for the yeas and nays upon his motion to adjourn.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. ATKINS. I call for tellers on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. HOLMAN. O, no; I hope not.

Mr. ATKINS. Very well; I will withdraw the call for tellers.

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs upon the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that when the House shall again resume the consideration in Committee of the Whole of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill all debate upon the pending paragraph shall be limited to twenty minutes.

Mr. MILLS. Is that motion debatable?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have moved that debate be limited to twenty minutes; that motion, I believe, is amendable.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. I move to amend so as to limit debate to thirty minutes.

The amendment was agreed to, upon a division—ayes 77, noes 57.

The motion, as amended, was agreed to.

The motion to suspend the rules and resolve the House into Committee of the Whole was then agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. COX in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2571) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all debate upon the pending paragraph will be limited to thirty minutes.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I move to amend by striking out the last word. I hope that the gentlemen from North Carolina, Tennessee, and Georgia, who have so eloquently described the acts of revenue officers and informers in prosecuting those who have been engaged in committing frauds upon the revenue, are not pressing this motion to strike out the pending paragraph upon the same principle that a gentleman from the South a short time ago said was the platform upon which he was elected to Congress. He said he went before the people of his district advocating free whisky, and was elected upon that platform. Now, it seems to me that that is what this proposition means, although I will not say that is what gentlemen intend by it.

There are frauds upon the revenue; there is illicit distilling largely engaged in in many of the States where the legitimate manufacture of distilled spirits is not profitable and cannot be profitably carried on. This gentleman said, by the bye, that his people were in favor of free whisky, because corn down there was worth only about a dollar a bushel. From a bushel of corn you can make three gallons of whisky, and if there was no tax of seventy cents a gallon to be paid on it it would yield at the rate of $3 for the bushel of corn. Upon that argument the gentleman said he went before the people of his district, and they believed him and elected him to Congress.

Gentlemen speak of the prosecutions for infractions of the internal-revenue law. In North Carolina during the last fiscal year there were three hundred and seventy-four convictions for violations of the internal-revenue law; in Georgia there were one hundred and one convictions; in Tennessee there were three hundred and ten convictions. The persons convicted were men engaged in the illicit manufacture of whisky, who want free whisky down there. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] has been very eloquent here, almost vieing with the gifted Irish orator in his condemnation of informers.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. I would like to ask the gentleman——

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I cannot yield.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. The gentleman has told us how many were convicted. Will he tell us how many were arrested?

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Do not take up my time. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] has spoken about informers. It has been found necessary in every government to make use of these means of detecting frauds of this kind.

The Committee of Ways and Means of the last Congress, after a long investigation of the subject, reported a change of the old system of giving to the informer a moiety of the amount collected in the prosecution of any person against whom he furnished information of violating the internal-revenue laws. We abolished that old system and gave to the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue a fund from which to pay the men who legitimately gave information, to pay them what their information was worth. The Department was to depend upon that means for the detection and prosecution of frauds. And the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, [Mr. RANDALL,] with a magnanimity which I admire and which is creditable to him, has testified here to the honesty and efficiency with which that money has been expended.

It seems to me it would be most unwise and foolish for this House to repeal all that is left of our old system, to refuse to appropriate the paltry sum proposed here of $60,000, which this bill proposes to put in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury for the detection and punishment of frauds. I do not believe that this House in its madness, although informers may not be popular on the one side or the other, will strike out this small appropriation for the sake of yielding to what I regard as a sentimentality.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I have listened to the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE,] the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. HILL,] and I believe two gentlemen from North Carolina, as well as to my colleague, [Mr. BURCHARD,] with some pleasure. I cannot, however, agree with all of them. To hear gentlemen talk here we might suppose that some man was ready with some new invention, some patent-right, some law that ought to be patented, which would execute itself; that gentlemen were in favor of ushering in the millennium by legislative enactment, so that there would be no necessity for executing the laws, for the reason that everybody would be honest and do right. Now, then, my experience in a somewhat limited practice of the law teaches me that you must resort to every legitimate means possible to detect and punish the class of men who feed and fatten upon the body-politic by evading the law and in defiance of the law; and while I do not fall in love with the informer, yet I must say I have no admiration for bad men who by evading the law sometimes make the employment of informers necessary for the protection of society in the enforcement of law. Why, sir, if a dog could testify and lead to the elucidation of truth, I would take the testimony of the dog for what it was worth. The question is not whether the informer or the spy is a lovely man; the question is whether the law can be enforced and the revenue collected without some such assistance. But to hear some gentlemen talk as they have been talking here, I am inclined to think they certainly must have constituents who are in favor of revenue laws but against their enforcement.

Now, one word as to this matter of moieties of which gentlemen have spoken. I took no part in the discussion of that question, although I was a member of the Forty-third Congress which acted upon it. I understand it to be a fact, however, (and, after all, facts are better than theories,) that to-day an honest importer in this country cannot compete with the smuggler and at the same time do justice to his business and make a fair profit. These are matters for us to think about; and I commend to the gentleman from Georgia this fact, to which I have called attention before, that his State of Georgia, with its four hundred and nineteen distilleries, pays as internal-revenue tax only about $370,000 annually, all told. The truth is, I suspect, that the taxes ought to be collected more strictly down there, notwithstanding all the oppression which he says has existed in that State.

Now, my notion is that under our form of government there is not much danger of anybody being oppressed. The courts are open. Writs can issue. Certainly there is not much danger to personal liberty in this country when you can sue out your writ of habeas corpus before almost any court in any county through the whole land. There is not much danger when you can resort to your action for malicious prosecution, and bring the whole power of the body-politic for the protection of the rights of the humblest citizen. My belief is, at least it is so out in Illinois, (however it may be in Georgia and North Carolina,) that the men who make the greatest outcry about personal liberty and set up a howl about persecution in the enforcement of the law are ordinarily the men who are most ready to break the law, and make the outcry for a purpose.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I desire merely to correct an error into which my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has fallen, and under which some other gentlemen seem to labor. In the first place, the cases to which he alludes have nothing to do with this paragraph. We provided last night for a corps of special agents, and it is through these special agents, as I understand, that the discoveries to which the gentleman alludes have been made; they have not been made by any ordinary spy or informer.

Mr. HOLMAN. The ten special agents provided for last evening are to be employed in the collection of customs, not in the internal-revenue service.

Mr. HILL. Again, for these large distilleries you can employ a corps of special agents; there is no impropriety perhaps in that. These informers or spies do not commit their mischief with large distilleries, or in thickly-settled portions of the country, or where communication is easy. They go off into the mountains, into the interior, away from the cities, and there they perpetrate these wrongs upon the people.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] says that the State of Georgia paid only about $387,000 of internal revenue last year; and I will venture to say that the poor people of the mountains paid almost as much in the shape of black-mail to these miserable informers. None of these complaints come from our large cities or our regular distilleries. As the President said, wisely and kindly and justly, they apply to cases where men perhaps do not make more than a jug of whisky. Why, sir, of these cases in Georgia where these outrages have been committed, I do not believe there is one where the revenue would exceed $10. They are exceedingly small cases where the informer does his mischief; for these people, being arrested, rather than be carried from fifty to eighty miles will often pay the black-mail. Those unwilling or unable to do so have to be carried a considerable distance and lie in jail for several months for want of a court to ascertain whether they are guilty or innocent. Now this whole paragraph, in my opinion, relates solely to information. It is true it says "for detecting and bringing to trial and punishment persons guilty of violating the internal-revenue laws," but the words "for information" are added. You can provide for special agents; there is no trouble about that. It can easily be done in the case of internal revenue as in the case of customs, if gentlemen be right.

One more remark. It is said that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue desires this clause and is in favor of this system of informers. I did not so understand him, and I do not understand the gentleman to say the Commissioner told him he was in favor of this system of informers. Certainly that was not his conversation with me. I spoke with him on the subject. He spoke in the most contemptuous terms of spies and informers, and went so far as to ask me a question which I feel at liberty to state, why our people did not kill them. He made the further remark: "It is a system the Government employs; these people are entitled to the money; they say they have informed and have convicted so many; they claim the money and I must pay it to them." He never said one word in favor of the system of informers. Everything he did say on the subject left the impression clearly on my mind that he looked upon it as an odious system, and certainly that he enforced it from necessity. I did not understand him to say he was in favor of it. He repeated the question, why our people did not kill them.

Mr. RANDALL. Why does he estimate for this item?

Mr. HILL. He says it is the system. I did not ask him the question; I did not ask whether he was in favor of informers or not, but I know he spoke of them in the most contemptuous manner. He repeated the question, and asked why our people did not kill them if we had the evidence. I told him we had the evidence, that these miserable creatures were ruining innocent and unoffending citizens. The last information I had was that a respectable lady was about to die because of their brutality. They go into the country and make these arrests at midnight.

Mr. HURLBUT. Why not indict them?

Mr. HILL. How can we do it? These poor people have but little money; the Federal courts alone have jurisdiction, and they are from fifty to sixty miles away, and these people would rather pay blackmail than indict or go to jail fifty or sixty miles off.

Mr. CONGER. Do they make the whisky?

Mr. HILL. Some of them do and some of them do not. If the gentleman had been here when I had the letter read, he would know that most of the illicit distillation which takes place is because of conspiracy with these informers. These informers encourage them to illicit distillation, assuring them they can protect them from the internal-revenue officers, and when they get them to distill they inform upon them. That I have already shown.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FOSTER. It strikes me, Mr. Chairman, this discussion has proceeded upon a false assumption. As I understand it, there is not in the employ of the Internal Revenue Department a detective to-day, and has not been for two years past. The people complained of by the gentleman from Georgia are undoubtedly the regular officers of the Department. They are not informers; there is not an informer in the Department. They may arrogate to themselves that quality.

Mr. HILL. They have informers who have acted with worthless officers.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. HILL. The letter read stated that fact; that there were officers and also informers.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman is mistaken.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I thank God I have no record to make on this question. I fought these informers years ago, and to-day for the fight which has been made by the Committee of Ways and Means of the last House the number of these gentlemen is very greatly reduced.

I agree with much that has been said about this class of people, and the impolicy of their employment. But what do we see to-day? Gentlemen on the democratic side of the House denouncing these informers, and yet, I undertake to say, there is hardly a dirty fellow of this kind in the country but what is here to-day testifying before some committee, and the House has passed a law to protect him in doing that sort of thing; paying hundreds of thousands of dollars out of the Treasury for the purpose.

Mr. HOLMAN. Sixty thousand dollars.

Mr. FOSTER. I despise this sort of people as much as any man can, and I have made my record years ago.

Now what is it the gentlemen from the South complain of?

Mr. HILL. I ask the gentleman this question. Do not these gentlemen who come here to testify get pay for their information?

Mr. FOSTER. They undoubtedly get pay. Most of them come here for that purpose; they will not come here without it. I find no fault with it, and unless I may be misunderstood I say go on with your investigation. They may hurt republicans, they may damage republican candidates for the Presidency, but I suppose the country will be the better for it. I say go on with it; probe them to the bottom; bring on your informers and pay the bill; but do not stand up here and denounce them when you are using them yourselves.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman must excuse me. I decline to yield.

I understand something of this matter about which so many of the gentlemen of the South are complaining. It is a most difficult question to manage. All over that country, to the number of more than five thousand, are small fruit distilleries. These men have been engaged in this business from their early youth, and their fathers and their grandfathers before them. They hardly know that they are committing a crime when they thus manufacture illicit whisky. It is a most difficult question to deal with. I pity them, and if I was omnipotent I would try to inaugurate some plan that would bring them relief. That they cheat and defraud the revenue in every district of the South is unquestionable. But I do not make any great complaint against them. They do not know any better. Whisky is a great part of their meat and their drink, and has been always so.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HILL] must know that the bare statement of the case shows that the people of that State do not pay the tax on the whisky they make. There is collected from spirits $200,000 in that State. There are there four hundred fruit distilleries and twenty-one grain distilleries. It is evident from these figures beyond all question that the people of Georgia do not pay the tax on a vast amount of the whisky they manufacture. But how are we to better this? I wish we had better agents in Georgia. I am sorry to hear of a bad one anywhere. But the people complain of these agents in Saint Louis, in Chicago, and in Milwaukee, and they will complain of them perhaps everywhere that the law is violated.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Before the gentleman from Ohio takes his seat I want to ask him whether he is entirely sure he is correct in the figures he has just submitted?

Mr. FOSTER. To what does the gentleman allude?

Mr. BLACKBURN. The gentleman from Ohio said that $200,000 is the amount collected from the distillation of spirits in Georgia. Is not the amount $337,000?

Mr. FOSTER. That is the total collection. The exact amount collected from spirits, I should have stated, is $151,000.

Mr. SINGLETON. I move to strike out the last two words.

It seems to be the established policy of the Government of the United States to raise a large proportion of its revenue by a tax upon the manufacture of spirituous liquors. And if we are to adhere to that system we certainly ought to take all means necessary for the purpose of detecting frauds upon it. Why, sir, it is a well-known fact that there have been more frauds committed in the direction of the manufacture of whisky than there have been in all other matters connected with the revenues of the Government.

Now, if we propose to raise revenue from this article, what objection can there be to obtaining information from every available source, come from what quarter it may, for the purpose of detecting those who undertake to violate the law? I take the ground that if a man is honest and does not intend to violate the law then this clause will never reach him. If he be dishonest and does violate the law we ought to have all the information obtainable in regard to his transactions, that he may be punished.

Why, sir, look at the trials that have been had lately. You see how men in high places have been brought down from their positions in society and degraded on the very ground that they have been engaged in this thing of defrauding the Government revenues of the tax upon whisky. What objection can there be to the provisions of this section of the bill on the part of men intending to be honest and meaning to obey the law and pay the tax that is exacted by it? And if they do not, then there is the stronger reason why we should make the law even more stringent, if possible, than this section now provides.

That is the view the committee entertained on this question. I know there have been some detectives, some men engaged in this business who have at times gone beyond the line of their duty. We are all aware of that fact. But shall we because of that abuse of the system remove all restriction upon illicit distilling, banish all safeguards against fraud upon the revenue, and turn men loose actuated by greed of gain, even at the expense of the solemn enactments of Congress? Shall we dispense entirely with these detectives and allow lawless individuals to go on ad libitum in the manufacture of this article and defraud the Treasury of the money now flowing into it from this source? As long as we undertake to make the manufacture of spirituous liquors a source of revenue we should throw around it all the safeguards necessary to accomplish the end proposed. I think the lesson which has been taught by the recent convictions will tend to rid us of the fraud and corruption which have been brought to light. I think the detections which have taken place and the punishments visited upon guilty parties will have a tendency to purge the country of these evil-doers.

And there is another thing I desire to say to friends on both sides of the House, which is, that I look very shortly to see inaugurated a new administration, that we shall have a democratic President, and then we may look for honest office-holders, and have but little use for informants or detectives.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. YEATES. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi, and to submit a few remarks upon this important question. I dislike very much to hear a poor and honest people denounced as I have heard it done to-night, especially as my friend's distinguished colleague, General GARFIELD, announced here last night that the object of this law, inaugurated and put in operation by the republican party and by a republican administration, was to crush out the business of distilling on a small scale, and I want it to go upon the record, so that the people may read it, that that distinguished gentleman from Ohio said last night that that was the policy and the object of the law.

Now, sir, if that is the case, the object of the law has been to suppress honest labor; for these small distillers have as much right to manufacture whisky as the large distillers.

Mr. WHITE. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. YEATES. No, sir; I have but five minutes. I say that the object of this law has been to root out the business of poor men in our country. I will admit that there has been some fraud there, but I deny that there has been one tithe of the fraud there that has been perpetrated where the large distilleries are. If we have had some bad whisky, we have had very little crooked whisky. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, further, that these very informers came into the mountain country of North Carolina, Tennessee, and Georgia, and indicted and convicted and sent to the penitentiary the poor men of that country; but when we bring these same informers here and endeavor to obtain their evidence against the big rogues and thieves, gentlemen on the other side howl and prate about their ignorance and corruption, and denounce them as unworthy of belief. I want the country to understand that the gentleman from Ohio said that the policy of this law inaugurated by the republican party was to root out the employment of those people in the mountains of North Carolina, and which gives to the large distillers of Ohio and other States a monopoly of the manufacture of whisky. Of this injustice I protest; and that is all I have to say.

Mr. BUCKNER rose.

Mr. HOLMAN. Debate is exhausted under the order of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. There are two minutes left for debate.

Mr. BUCKNER. I shall occupy but a very few moments. I have no doubt of the correctness of the representations made by my southern friends as to the wrongs perpetrated in the execution of this law, but I beg to remind them that it is an abuse of a bad system, and that system is the collection of revenue from whisky.

Sir, I wish here to enter my protest against this system of taxation, taxation upon the labor of the country, upon its products; and nothing but a servile and slavish imitation of the English systems, of English ideas, of English thought and customs could ever have made it a part of the statute laws of this country.

Why, sir, let us look back to the history of the country. We had an insurrection immediately after the Revolution in Pennsylvania, growing out of a tax on whisky far less onerous than this is, an insurrection which required the strong arm of General Washington and the Federal army to uphold the law, such was the odium with which the people regarded this tax on their products and their labor.

Sir, the system is false. If we would get rid of the wrongs and outrages perpetrated by these wicked, bad men in the South, who are preventing these poor people from using the products of their labor, their fruit, and converting them into something that will pay them, we must find some other mode of taxation.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is now exhausted on this paragraph, and the question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HILL] to strike out the entire paragraph.

The question was put; and on a division there were ayes 48, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. RIDDLE. I offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of the paragraph:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as authorizing payments for information derived from spies and informers.

Mr. WHITE. Is that amendment debatable?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not; debate on this paragraph has been closed by order of the House.

The question was taken on the amendment; and on a division there were ayes 38.

Mr. RIDDLE. I do not call for a further count.

Mr. WHITE. I call for the yeas and nays on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must be aware that the yeas and nays cannot be called in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WHITE. I was not satisfied with the count, and I still ask for a division on the amendment.

The question was again put; and on a division there were—ayes 1, noes 112.

Mr. WHITE. I want it understood that the other side of the House——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. WHITE. I make the point of order that no quorum voted on the last vote, and I do it for the reason that I want to have a minute to reply——

The CHAIRMAN. No debate is in order. Does the gentleman from Kentucky insist upon his point of order?

Mr. WHITE. I do; no quorum voted.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. WHITE and Mr. RANDALL were appointed tellers.

The question was again taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 20, noes 104.

Mr. WHITE. I am satisfied that the other side of the House indorses informers, and I will not insist upon a further count.

So the amendment offered by Mr. RIDDLE was not agreed to.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. I move to amend the pending paragraph by striking out "$60,000" and inserting "$40,000."

Mr. HILL. That amount certainly is enough.

Mr. HOLMAN. We have already reduced the amount $40,000 below what was appropriated for this purpose last year.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon the pending paragraph has been closed by order of the House.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina; and upon a division there were—ayes 57, noes 117.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following:

Bureau of Statistics:

For the officer in charge of the Bureau of Statistics, $2,250; chief clerk, $1,800; three clerks of class four; four clerks of class three; six clerks of class two; four clerks of class one; five copyists, at $900 each; one messenger; one laborer; and one char-woman, at $480; in all, $33,790. And all the duties imposed upon the Bureau of Statistics by the legislation of the second session of the Forty-third Congress shall be performed by the clerical force herein provided for.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. I move to amend the paragraph just read so as to provide for nine clerks of class four, six clerks of class three, and seven clerks of class two. I move this amendment in order to correct an error into which the Committee on Appropriations seem to have fallen. They told the House that in preparing this bill they had adopted the principle of reducing the clerical force in the Departments 20 per cent. At the present time there are twenty-seven clerks of classes two, three, and four in the Bureau of Statistics, and the Committee on Appropriations have cut down the number to thirteen, or about 50 per cent. I think that is a mistake. In the very last clause of this paragraph the committee impose upon this Bureau all the duties that were to be performed by the twenty-seven clerks. The last clause of this paragraph reads as follows:

And all the duties imposed upon the Bureau of Statistics by the legislation of the second session of the Forty-third Congress shall be performed by the clerical force herein provided for.

In order that the Committee of the Whole may understand the duties that were devolved upon these twenty-seven clerks by the action of the last Congress, and which by this paragraph are devolved upon thirteen clerks, I ask to have read the paragraph from the legislative appropriation bill of the last session of Congress.

The Clerk read as follows:

It shall be the duty of the officer in charge of the Bureau of Statistics to gather, collate, and annually report to the Secretary of the Treasury, for transmission to Congress, statistics and facts relating to commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, the railroad systems of this and other countries, the construction and operation of railroads, the actual cost of such construction and operation of railroads, the actual cost of transporting freights and passengers on railroads and on canals, rivers, and other navigable waters of the United States, the charges imposed for such transportation of freight and passengers, and the tonnage transported; and the reports now by law required to be prepared and published monthly in the said Bureau of Statistics shall hereafter be prepared and published quarterly, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury; and the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to defray the expenses thereof.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. The whole amount of the clerical force of the Bureau of Statistics as it stands to-day, including the officer in charge, is forty-one. By the present bill that force is brought down to twenty-seven, being a reduction of the whole force of about 33 per cent., much more than the principle upon which the Committee on Appropriations tells us they have endeavored to carry out this bill. Now it is a matter of absolute impossibility that this Bureau, with the reduction of the clerical force proposed by this bill, shall be able to do all the work provided by the act of Congress which has just been read. There is probably no office in the Treasury Department that is more useful to members of Congress than this office of the Bureau of Statistics.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to say to the House that this part of the bill relating to the Bureau of Statistics was referred to the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE,] who last year examined this subject very thoroughly. He reported to the general committee, and I believe the general committee were unanimously of the opinion that the force provided for in this bill was sufficient. I ought to state another fact in connection with this matter; that is, that there are about eighty custom-house officers throughout the United States, more or less, engaged in this Bureau. It has absolutely grown into a monster machine, without any benefit, at least to the extent the gentleman represents.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. I move to amend by striking out the last word, in order that I may say in reply to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. RANDALL] that the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics says that the force here provided for that Bureau is absolutely inadequate to the performance of the duties required by law. It embraces not only the returns of the custom-houses but also statistics in relation to the internal commerce of the United States, especially railroads. Gentlemen may have noticed the provision of the law as it was read, requiring all the railroad statistics to be collected by this Bureau of the Treasury Department; the expenses of making the several roads, the amount of dividends, the tolls charged for transporting merchandise; all these statistics have to be collected and reports thereon made quarterly by the chief of this Bureau. The Committee on Appropriations have cut down the force of this Bureau 33 per cent. If members of this House, who are continually applying to this Bureau for commercial statistics, internal as well as external, expect to have their inquiries answered, they must vote for the amendment I have offered or they will not get the information.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to oppose the amendment to the amendment. I desire to say to my friends on the other side of the House, especially those from the Northwestern States, that if they are sincere in their representation of the desire of their people for railroad reform they make a great mistake when they strike this blow at the only practical measure which will tend to bring about that reform. The wit of statesmen in this country and in England has been tasked to the utmost in attempts to devise by legislation regulations and restrictions for the government of railroads which will satisfy the public desire for cheap freights and compel greater facilities for that purpose; and the best railroad authorities agree that there is but one practical remedy, and that is by well-devised systems of statistics to let in the daylight upon the receipts, business, and transactions of railroads.

More has been effected in my own State by the railroad commission of which Charles Francis Adams, jr., is the accomplished head than anywhere else on this continent; and Mr. Adams, after proposing and testing one scheme after another, has declared that a well-considered system of obtaining perfectly reliable railroad statistics will let in a public opinion upon the conduct of railroads which will answer the purpose sought.

Now, in the last Congress, after a bill had been prepared by my friend from Iowa, [Mr. MCCRARY,] as chairman of the Railroad Committee, contemplating a constraint upon railroads, the House contented itself with providing for the gathering of these railroad statistics by the Bureau of Statistics; and if that law is carried out thoroughly and in good faith, it will be one of the most important pieces of legislation, especially for the interest of the Northwest, ever accomplished in this country. Now this bill proposes by taking away the necessary working force from the Bureau to practically abolish the system, and to deny to the States of the Northwest their demand upon the American Congress for a full statistical view and exposition of railroad business so far as it relates to foreign commerce or commerce among the States.

Mr. RANDALL. I now ask that debate on this paragraph close.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania, it was not agreed to.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I move to amend the paragraph by striking out "three clerks of class four," and inserting "five clerks of class four." I understand that at present there are in this force eleven clerks of class four; and from the information which I have it seems to me that a reduction from eleven to three is entirely too great. In that particular class there are several chiefs of divisions. One of them is called the chief of the pay property and stationery division. He is the superintendent of the building, the disbursing clerk, and he has charge of the stationery, the copying, and the personnel of the office. Another is the chief of the publication division. Now these two clerks will be stricken out if the bill is allowed to remain in its present shape. It seems to me that the addition of two, as proposed in my amendment, will leave the force in a much more manageable shape than if we make the very great reduction in numbers provided for by the bill. I have understood that the head of this Bureau says it will be impossible for him to get along without these two men, and that the whole force is so cut down by this bill that it will be very difficult for him to manage the Bureau at all.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. I hope the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CAULFIELD] will consent to make the number six instead of five.

Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. RANDALL. O, no.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I prefer to leave my amendment as I have offered it.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Chairman, for several years past many efforts have been made to provide for some commission, some department that should procure the statistics which are to be collected by the force provided for in this bill. More than the amount proposed to be appropriated here has been expended for this purpose, if I recollect a right, in each of several Congresses; and I might say that more than this amount was expended even by the Senate committee appointed to inquire into this question of transportation.

Now there have come to Congress every year, for the last five years, innumerable petitions from the farmers, the producers, the grangers of the West, demanding that Congress should make some inquiries which would lead to some legislation to control in part at least the monopoly of railroads, at all events to promote cheap transportation.

Now we are expending $5,000,000 or $6,000,000 a year for the improvement of harbors and rivers, the water communication of the United States, mainly for the purpose, I might almost say in many instances for the sole purpose, of establishing a route of transportation competing with railroads. In many of the States of this Union, and especially in the Northwestern States, it is a vital question, upon which all interests of politics and policy turn, whether there can be transportation of the produce of the farm and the forest so cheap that all the profits of labor shall not be consumed by freight. Summing up all the plans proposed, some suggesting a commission, some a chamber of commerce of the United States, and many other very expensive plans, the plan which has met most effectually the general wish, and which has but just now had its beginning, is this plan of collecting statistics. Last year too small an appropriation was made and too small a clerical force provided; yet I am informed that the force has been and is now at work in gathering statistics of value to every producer in the United States, to every member of Congress, and to every one who would settle that great question of cheap transportation.

Now, why should this force, right in the midst of its valuable labors, before any result whatever has been reached, be cut down so as to render it useless? I tell my friends from the lumber States of the Northwest, I tell my friends who represent the farmer who complains that he must burn his corn for fuel because the transportation is so dear, that he will ask why we did not keep up a system that would show him and show the whole people that there may be devised a plan by which the producer can receive a part of the profit of his labor and that it shall not all go to the transporter.

Now, this is a small appropriation. The appropriation for these additional clerks for so great and so valuable an object to the people, and especially to members of Congress, ought not, it seems to me, to make the House hesitate a moment. I ask the chairman of the committee to assist in giving a proper force to this Department, which is not connected with politics, but connected only with the actual exhibition of the industries of the country. And while I am speaking I wish to call his attention to the fact that the law under which this Bureau is established requires the chief officer of the Bureau to perform the duties which by his amendment he says shall go to the clerical force. I ask the House to increase the force of clerks so that each division may have its chief clerk.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask, by unanimous consent, that all further debate be closed on this paragraph.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I want to say a word before debate is closed.

Mr. RANDALL. I move the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I want to offer an amendment and speak five minutes on the paragraph.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection, if that is the wish of the House. I am willing to give the gentleman five minutes if it is agreed on both sides that shall close the debate.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. That is all I want.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. I wish to offer another amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. My motion does not cut off amendments; I merely wish to move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate.

Mr. HAMILTON, of New Jersey. We must limit debate in some way on these various paragraphs or we will never get through with this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Everybody understands what this is about, for we have talked on it at every session for six years.

The question was put to the committee, and the Chairman decided that by the sound it appeared the ayes had it.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I demand a division of the committee.

The committee divided; and there were ayes 75, noes not counted.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BLACKBURN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. COX reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, pursuant to the order of the House, had had under consideration the special order, being a bill (H. R. No. 2571) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that when the House goes into committee again on the legislative appropriation bill, all further debate on the pending paragraph be limited to five minutes after its consideration shall be resumed.

Mr. HUBBELL. I move the House do now adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 28, noes 86.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the Chair hears no objection, he will decide that the House refuses to adjourn.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will agree to give us ten minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. Five minutes is enough.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no demand for a further count.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. RANDALL. I now insist on my motion that the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to proceed with the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill; and pending that motion I move all further debate on the pending paragraph in committee be terminated in five minutes.

The question was put to the House, and the Speaker pro tempore decided that by the sound the ayes had it.

Mr. HOAR. I demand a further count.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts demand a further count?

Mr. HOAR. I do.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 97, noes 31.

Mr. HUBBELL. I make the point of order that no quorum has voted.

Mr. HAMILTON, of New Jersey. If gentlemen on the other side wish to waste time in this way let them do it, and let the country know it.

Mr. HUBBELL. I demand a further count by tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HUBBELL and Mr. RANDALL were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 97, noes 1.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If no further count be demanded, the Chair will decide the motion agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to allow debate to be extended to ten minutes.

Mr. HAMILTON, of New Jersey. I hope the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will not consent to it.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I suggest to the chairman to give us ten minutes to speak on this paragraph. Then business can go on. This is a vital matter.

Mr. RANDALL. The House has already said five minutes, and I do not propose to yield at the dictation of one or two gentlemen.

Mr. ATKINS. I move there be a call of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope not. I do not hear that any gentleman makes a demand for a further count, or a point of order on account of no quorum being present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The tellers have reported ayes 97, noes 1. Unless a point of order be made, or a further count be demanded, the Chair will decide that the motion has been agreed to.

Mr. DUNNELL. I demand a further count.

Mr. ATKINS. I move there be a call of the House.

Mr. FORT. Is it in order to move to adjourn?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. FORT. I do not wish to filibuster, but under the circumstances I move to adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 40, noes 87.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The question recurred on Mr. ATKINS's motion that there be a call of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. I suggest to the chairman of the committee to agree to a compromise, and allow debate to terminate in seven and a half minutes.

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order. The question is on the motion that there be a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk accordingly proceeded to call the roll, and the following members failed to answer to their names:

Messrs. Ainsworth, Anderson, George A. Bagley, Ballou, Banks, Bass, Blaine, Bland, Bliss, Blount, Bright, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Burleigh, William P. Caldwell, Candler, Caswell, Cate, Chapin, Chittenden, Clymer, Crapo, Crounse, Culberson, Darrall, De Bolt, Durham, Eden, Egbert, Ellis, Ely, Evans, Farwell, Faulkner, Felton, Frost, Frye, Fuller, Garfield, Gibson, Goode, Goodin, Gunter, Hale, Hancock, Haralson, Hardenbergh, Benjamin W. Harris, Henry H. Harris, Harrison, Hartridge, Hartzell, Hatcher, Hathorn, Hays, Henkle, Hereford, Abram S. Hewitt, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hoge, Hooker, Hoskins, Hunton, Hurlbut, Hyman, Frank Jones, Kasson, Kelley, Ketchum, Kimball, King, Knott, Franklin Landers, Leavenworth, Lord, Lynch, Edmund W. M. Mackey, L. A. Mackey, Magoon, McDill, Meade, Money, Monroe, Morey, Morgan, Mutchler, O'Brien, Parsons, Payne, Phelps, John F. Philips, William A. Phillips, Pierce, Piper, Plaisted, Platt, Powell, Pratt, Purman, Rainey, Miles Ross, Schleicher, Schumaker, Seelye, Smalls, Sparks, Strait, Stenger, Stevenson, Stowell, Swann, Thomas, Thornburgh, Martin I. Townsend, Turney, Robert B. Vance, Waddell, Wait, Charles C. B. Walker, Gilbert C. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walls, Ward, Warren, G. Wiley Wells, Wheeler, White, Whitehouse, Whiting, Whitthorne, Wigginton, James D. Williams, Willis, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, and Young.

The roll having been twice called over,

The SPEAKER pro tempore said: The Doorkeeper will cause the doors of the House to be closed and will allow no member to pass in or out. Excuses for absentees are now in order.

Mr. YEATES. I rise to offer the excuse for Mr. DE BOLT, that he is detained at home by sickness in his family.

Mr. ATKINS. I desire to ask the Chair if there is a quorum present?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The call of the roll shows the presence of a quorum; 151 gentlemen have answered to their names.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Further proceedings under the call of the House having been dispensed with, the Doorkeeper will re-open the doors.

Mr. O'NEILL. Two gentlemen on this side of the House desire to speak each for five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair must state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL] that debate is not in order. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the House do now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to resume the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill, debate on the pending paragraph being limited to five minutes.

Mr. MCCRARY. I move to amend by striking out "five" and inserting "ten."

Mr. HOLMAN. That has already been voted upon.

Mr. HOAR. A quorum did not vote on that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The recollection of the Chair is that the motion limiting debate was not agreed to, because no quorum voted, and the point of order was made that a quorum did not vote. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MCCRARY] to amend the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania by striking out "five minutes" and inserting "ten minutes."

Mr. MACDOUGALL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

The question recurred on Mr. MCCRARY'S amendment to Mr. RANDALL'S motion; and being taken, there were—ayes 48, noes 73.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. A quorum has not voted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois make the point that no quorum has voted?

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I do.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will then order the question to be taken by tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. BURCHARD, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. RANDALL, to act as tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 53, noes 76; no quorum voting.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that there be a call of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. I desire to suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio must know that this question is not debatable.

Mr. FOSTER. I know that; but the Chair always hears propositions for adjustment in such cases as this.

Several members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded, and the gentleman from Ohio must see the necessity the Chair is under to submit the motion.

Mr. CASON. I move that the House do now adjourn; and upon that I call for the yeas and nays.

On the question of ordering the yeas and nays, there were—ayes 25, noes 75.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the whole vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 25, nays 114, not voting 151; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, John H. Baker, Blair, Bradley, Cannon, Cason, Denison, Dunnell, Eames, Foster, Haymond, Hoar, Lapham, Lawrence, McCrary, Nash, Norton, Oliver, Packer, Rusk, Sinnickson, Van Vorhes, Willard, Andrew Williams, and Charles G. Williams—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Ashe, Atkins, Bagby, John H. Bagley, jr., Banning, Barnum, Beebe, Bell, Blackburn, Boone, Bradford, Buckner, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. Burchard, Cabell, John H. Landers, Lane, Levy, Lewis, Luttrell, Maish, MacDougall, Miller, Milliken, Morrison, Neal, New, Odell, O'Neill, Page, Poppleton, Potter, Randall, Rea, Reagan, John Reilly, James B. Reilly, Rice, Riddle, John Robbins, William M. Robbins, Roberts, Robinson, Sobieski Ross, Sampson, Savage, Sayler, Scales, Sheakley, Siemons, A. Herr Smith, William E. Smith, Southard, Springer, Stone, Teese, Terry, Thompson, Throckmorton, Washington Townsend, Tucker, Tufts, Turney, John L. Vance, Waldron, Walling, Walsh, Erastus Wells, Wike, Alpheus S. Williams, James Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, William B. Williams, James Wilson, Woodburn, and Yeates—114.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ainsworth, Anderson, George A. Bagley, William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Bass, Blaine, Bland, Bliss, Blount, Bright, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Burleigh, William P. Caldwell, Candler, Caswell, Cate, Chapin, Chittenden, Clymer, Cook, Crapo, Crounse, Culberson, Danford, Darrall, Davy, De Bolt, Durand, Durham, Eden, Egbert, Ellis, Ely, Evans, Farwell, Faulkner, Felton, Frost, Frye, Fuller, Garfield, Gibson, Goode, Goodin, Gunter, Hale, Hancock, Haralson, Hardenbergh, Benjamin W. Harris, Henry R. Harris, Harrison, Hartridge, Hartzell, Hatcher, Hathorn, Hays, Henkle, Hereford, Abram S. Hewitt, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hoge, Hooker, Hoskins, Hunton, Hurlbut, Hyman, Frank Jones, Kasson, Kelley, Ketchum, Kimball, King, Knott, Franklin Landers, Leavenworth, Lord, Lynch, Lynde, Edmund W. M. Mackey, L. A. Mackey, Magoon, McDill, McFarland, McMahon, Meade, Metcalfe, Mills, Money, Monroe, Morey, Morgan, Mutchler, O'Brien, Parsons, Payne, Phelps, John F. Philips, William A. Phillips, Pierce, Piper, Plaisted, Platt, Powell, Pratt, Purman, Rainey, Miles Ross, Schleicher, Schumaker, Seelye, Singleton, Smalls, Sparks, Strait, Stenger, Stevenson, Stowell, Swann, Tarbox, Thomas, Thornburgh, Martin I. Townsend, Robert B. Vance, Waddell, Wait, Charles C. B. Walker, Gilbert C. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walls, Ward, Warren, G. Wiley Wells, Wheeler, White, Whitehouse, Whiting, Whitthorne, Wigginton, James D. Williams, Willis, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodworth, and Young—151.

So the House refused to adjourn.

During the roll-call,

Mr. ATKINS said: I desire to state that Mr. WHITTHORNE is absent in Philadelphia on an investigating committee.

Mr. FORNEY. I wish to state that my colleague, Mr. HEWITT, is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. YEATES. I desire to state that Mr. DE BOLT is detained from the House on account of sickness in his family.

Mr. CABELL. My colleagues, Mr. HUNTON and Mr. GOODE, are both absent on account of indisposition.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. PHILIPS, is detained from the House on account of sickness.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Mr. DURAND has been called away from the House on account of illness.

Mr. LUTTRELL. My colleague, Mr. WIGGINTON, has been quite ill recently, and went home a short time ago on account of feeling quite unwell.

Mr. MILLIKEN. My colleague, Mr. BROWN, is at his home in Kentucky by leave of the House on account of sickness in his family.

Mr. STONE. Mr. DURHAM is detained at his room on account of sickness.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. My colleague, Mr. BLAND, is absent on account of sickness in his family.

Mr. JAMES B. REILLY. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. ALAN WOOD, and as he is absent I will withdraw my vote.

Mr. FORT. My colleague, Mr. WHITING, is not able to be in the House to-night, and my colleague, Mr. STEVENSON, is also unavoidably detained.

Mr. PAGE. My colleague, Mr. PIPER, is absent from the House on account of sickness.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. BASS is absent from the House on account of ill-health.

Mr. SAMPSON. I desire to say that Mr. AINSWORTH has leave of absence from the House on account of sickness; he is unwell and unable to be in attendance.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Indiana. I understand that my colleague, Mr. FULLER, is unwell and is detained from the House on account of indisposition.

Mr. HUBBELL. Mr. FRYE was unexpectedly called to the bed of a dying friend from Maine, from his own city. He requested me to state that fact in case there should be a roll-call, and ask that he be excused.

Mr. COCHRANE. I am informed that my colleague, Mr. STENGER, is absent in attendance upon his duties as a member of the Committee on the Expenditures in the Treasury Department.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. My colleague, Mr. LANDERS, is absent from the House by leave of the House on important business at home.

Mr. MAISH. I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. POWELL, is detained from the House on account of sickness.

Mr. CUTLER. My colleague, Mr. Ross, is absent on account of a death in his family.

Mr. ASHE. I desire to say that my colleague, Mr. VANCE, is absent, for what reason I do not know; but I know he has a good reason, for he is always at his post.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. My colleague, Mr. BASS, is absent from the House on account of illness. My colleague, Mr. WHEELER, has but recently left the House, his health not permitting him to sit through these long night sessions. My colleagues, Mr. C. C. B. WALKER and Mr. HATHORN, are absent on account of sickness. My colleague, Mr. LEAVENWORTH, is absent by leave of the House.

Mr. HILL. I desire to say that my colleague, Mr. BLOUNT, is absent on account of sickness; and my colleague, Mr. FELTON, is absent on account of sickness in his family.

Mr. CAULFIELD. My colleague, Mr. HARRISON, is absent on account of sickness.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded, and the question recurred on Mr. RANDALL'S motion that there be a call of the House.

Mr. PAGE. I rise to inquire if the last vote disclosed the fact that there is a quorum of the House present?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would state to the gentleman from California that it does not; but no quorum is needed, as the gentleman knows, on a motion to adjourn.

Mr. FORT. In view of the fact that so many members are sick——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair must state to the gentleman from Illinois that this motion is not open to debate.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. As I understand the order under which we are now sitting, the agreement was that the House would adjourn at half past ten o'clock, and it is after that now. A gentleman near me says the understanding was that we should adjourn at ten o'clock.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk informs the Chair that he has not at his desk the resolution providing for night sessions of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I will withdraw my motion for a call of the House, and move that the House now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at ten o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, April 13, 1876.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.
The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. ANTHONY. I present a memorial from the Congressional Printer, stating that his official bond is $80,000, upon which he is authorized by law to draw $53,000; that his monthly payments approach nearly double that amount; that he was in the habit for a considerable time, when the monthly payments were less than they are now, of borrowing the money on his own personal responsibility until he could obtain the pay-rolls, properly accounted, from the Treasury and draw additional upon his bond; that this was the practice of all of his predecessors; that, the pay-rolls increasing considerably, he has found it exceedingly inconvenient to borrow the money on his personal responsibility, and he has been in the habit of using for the purpose of paying the workmen in the Government Printing Office the amount of money received from the sales of waste paper, old material, documents, &c.; that he is advised that this is a violation of the law; and desiring to conform himself to the law, and it being impossible to carry on the business of the office under the existing law, he asks for such relief as Congress in its wisdom may see fit to grant; and, being an officer of this body, he has presented his memorial to the Senate. In conclusion he says:

> The undersigned would further suggest, most respectfully, that the law relating to the Government printing and binding be so amended as to provide for a disbursing officer, who shall give bonds to the Government, and who shall receive and disburse all moneys relating to this office, thus relieving the Congressional Printer of all financial duties and responsibilities.

I move that the memorial be printed, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BOGY presented a memorial of the Cotton Exchange of Saint Louis, Missouri, in favor of the passage of a law by Congress recognizing the Signal Service as a Department of the Government, and placing it on a sound and lasting basis; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WALLACE present a memorial of the Book-Trade Association of Philadelphia, remonstrating againt the proposed rates of postage on third-class mail matter, and also against any change in the present tariff laws; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Kittanning, Pennsylvania, and two petitions of citizens of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of a law to regulate commerce and prohibit unjust discriminations by common carriers; which were referred to the Committee on Railroads.

He also presented a petition of citizens and iron-workers of Montour County, Pennsylvania, praying for aid to the Texas Pacific Railway; which was referred to the Committee on Railroads.

Mr. BOUTWELL presented a memorial of the Middlesex Mechanics' Association of Lowell, Massachusetts, in favor of the metric system of weights and measures; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SHERMAN presented the petition of Withenbury and Doyle, praying compensation for cotton alleged to have been taken for the use of the Army and destroyed by the enemy while in use as bulwarks to an army transport on the Mississippi River; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CONKLING presented a petition of citizens of Bath, New York, praying the repeal of the bankrupt act; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Onondaga County, New York, praying that there may be no change made in the present tariff laws; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of citizens of Saint Lawrence County, New York, remonstrating against the passage of any law or laws granting American register to foreign-built vessels; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the memorial of Renauld, François & Co., and 25 other wine merchants of New York, remonstrating against an increase of the rate of duty on champagne imported into the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

A bill (H. R. No. 351) to create an additional land office at Colfax, in Whitman County, Washington Territory;

A bill (H. R. No. 967) authorizing the survey of certain townships in Michigan, and making an appropriation therefor;

A bill (H. R. No. 1336) to establish a new land district in the Territory of Wyoming;

A bill H. R. No. 1959) for the relief of certain settlers on the Kansas Indian reservation in Kansas;

A bill (H. R. No. 2260) providing for the sale of saline lands;

A bill (H. R. No. 2545) authorizing the Secretary of War to relinquish and turn over to the Interior Department a certain military reservation in the Territory of Arizona;

A bill (H. R. No. 3128) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for prior years, and for other purposes; and

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. KERNAN, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1440) to enable Charles H. Fondé to make application to the Commissioner of Patents for extension of letters-patent for improvement in dredging-machines, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAMILTON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 744) to increase the pension of Mary W. Jones, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Martha Irwin, widow of John Irwin, alias Samuel West, late of the Navy, praying to be allowed a pension, submitted a report thereon accompanied by a bill (S. No. 735) granting a pension to Martha Irwin, widow of John Irwin.

The bill was read and passed to the second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAMILTON. On the 16th of March the bill (S. No. 607) for the relief of Eliza Howard Powers was referred to the Committee on Pensions. The committee find that Mrs. Powers was employed in some way in the sanitary department of the Army and that the case is not covered by the pension laws. I therefore move that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that the bill and papers be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of John Dwyer, late a private in Company C, Fourth United States Cavalry, praying to be allowed a pension, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1598) granting a pension to William R. Duncan, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 151) to define certain crimes and the punishment thereof, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Mary M. J. Frank, widow of Paul Frank, late colonel Fifty-second New York Volunteers, praying to be allowed a pension, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 736) granting a pension to Mary M. J. Frank.

The bill was read and passed to the second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Harrison H. Dodds, late private in Company C, Sixteenth Ohio Infantry, praying that he be granted a pension, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 737) granting a pension to Harrison H. Dodds.

The bill was read and passed to the second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRUCE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1989) granting a pension to Robert Cavanaugh, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 656) granting a pension to W. R. Browne, submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the bill.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Sarah E. Bowden, widow of Lorenzo D. Bowden, late a private in Company K, Sixteenth Regiment Maine Volunteers, praying to be allowed a pension, submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 458) for the relief of Jessie McCoy, submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. BOOTH, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1602) granting a pension to Margaret E. Cogburn, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2303) granting a pension to Mary S. Greenlee, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Nathan Braustetter, guardian of Louisa White, praying that she may be granted a pension on account of the services of her brother, Jesse J. White, late of Company F, One hundred and twenty-fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2290) granting a pension to Frederick Hoeh, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. DORSEY. If there is no further morning business, I would like to call up Senate bill No. 634.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to introduce a bill.

Mr. WITHERS. I have a report to make.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is not yet concluded.

Mr. WITHERS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of David H. Sims, praying for a pension, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 176) to authorize the Northwestern Improvement Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Wisconsin, to enter upon the Menomonee Indian reservation, and improve the Oconto River, its branches, and tributaries, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. INGALLS. If there be no further morning business, I move that the Senate proceed with the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Several Senators have risen with morning business.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SHERMAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 738) for the relief of Withenburg & Doyle, of Cincinnati, Ohio; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. EDMUNDS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 739) to amend section 5457 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to counterfeiting coin; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 740) to establish a post-route in Wisconsin; which was read twice by its title, and, together with the accompanying petition, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. HOWE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 741) for the relief of such members of the Menomonee tribe of Indians as may desire to become citizens of the United States; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 3022) making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MERRIMON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 3128) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for prior years, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

TRANSFER OF UNITED STATES PRISONERS.

Mr. WRIGHT. If there is no further morning business, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 435) to amend section 5546 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, providing for imprisonment and transfer of United States prisoners.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It amends section 5546 of the Revised Statutes, so as to read:

SEC. 5546. All persons who have been, or who may hereafter be, convicted of crime by any court of the United States whose punishment is imprisonment in a District or Territory where, at the time of conviction or at any time during the term of imprisonment, there may be no penitentiary or jail suitable for the confinement of convicts or available therefor, shall be confined during the term for which they have been or may be sentenced, or during the residue of said term, in some suitable jail or penitentiary in a convenient State or Territory, to be designated by the Attorney-General, and shall be transported and delivered to the warden or keeper of such jail or penitentiary by the marshal of the District or Territory where the conviction has occurred; and if the conviction be had in the District of Columbia, in such case the transportation and delivery shall be by the warden of the jail of that District; the reasonable actual expense of transportation, necessary subsistence, and hire and transportation of guards and the marshal, or the warden of the jail in the District of Columbia, only, to be paid by the Attorney-General, out of the judiciary fund. But if, in the opinion of the Attorney-General, the expense of transportation from any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, in which there is no penitentiary, will exceed the cost of maintaining them in jail in the State, Territory, or the District of Columbia during the period of their sentence, then it shall be lawful so to confine them therein for the period designated in their respective sentences.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

The first amendment of the committee was in line 19, after "District of Columbia," to strike out the words "in such case;" so as to read:

And if the conviction be had in the District of Columbia, the transportation and delivery shall be by the warden of the jail of that District.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to add at the end of the bill:

And such change may be ordered in any case when, in the opinion of the Attorney-General, it is necessary for the preservation of the health of the prisoner, or when, in his opinion, the place of confinement is not sufficient to secure the custody of the prisoner, or because of cruel or improper treatment: Provided, however, That no change shall be made in the case of any prisoner on the ground of the unhealthiness of the prison or because of his treatment after his conviction and during his term of imprisonment, unless such change shall be applied for by such prisoner, or some one in his behalf.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to ask the Senator from Iowa, who has charge of this bill, what is the necessity for the small change or variation that is made in the law by this amendatory bill?

Mr. WRIGHT. I will explain to my friend, the Senator from Missouri, that, as the law stands now, the power is given to the Attorney-General to make this change or designation as to where the prisoner shall be confined at the time of sentence. There is no power given him to make a change after sentence and during confinement. It has been found in many instances that the penitentiaries are overcrowded, and that this has occurred without any knowledge on the part of the Attorney-General at the time of the sentence. It was deemed advisable, and he has so recommended, that the power be given to make these changes after sentence, because in some instances it has been found that the prisoners have been abused; in others that the penitentiaries were insufficient to restrain them; in others that the penitentiaries were unhealthy. For instance, in the State of Arkansas, as I am advised, the penitentiary is quite overcrowded, and there is no power to order the removal of prisoners after sentence and during their confinement. The object of the bill is to give the power to the Attorney-General to make such change after the sentence as well as at the time of the sentence.

Mr. KERNAN. I call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to the first line of the amendment:

And such change may be ordered in any case.

Does that mean in any case where a man has been convicted by a court?

Mr. WRIGHT. Of course it can only refer to the cases that are contemplated in the preceding part of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE CALENDAR.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no further morning business, the morning hour has expired, and the Chair will call up the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. No. 680) authorizing the repavement of Pennsylvania avenue.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator having that bill in charge is absent from the Chamber, and I suggest that the remainder of the morning hour until one o'clock be devoted to the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks that the Calendar be proceeded with.

Mr. WRIGHT. I understood the Senator from Kansas to so move some time since.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to laying this bill aside temporarily, for the purpose of considering cases on the Calendar?

Mr. INGALLS. Until one o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Until one o'clock. It will be so understood. The first bill on the Calendar at the point where its consideration was last left off will be resumed.

PAY DEPARTMENT OF THE ARMY.

The CHIEF CLERK. The first bill on the Calender at the point indicated is the bill (S. No. 126) to restore appointments and promotions to the Pay Department of the Army.

Mr. ALLISON. This seems to be rather an important bill. I see the Senator from Rhode Island who has charge of the bill [Mr. BURNSIDE] is absent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator object to its consideration?

Mr. ALLISON. I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

NAME OF A STEAMBOAT.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 726) to change the name of the steamboat Charles W. Mead; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It confers authority on the owner of the steamboat Charles W. Mead, of Allegheny City, Pennsylvania, to change the name of that vessel to that of General Meade.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANCISCO V. DE COSTER.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 291) for the relief of Francisco V. De Coster.

Mr. INGALLS. There is an adverse report in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill was reported adversely by the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. BURNSIDE.]

Mr. ALLISON. I object to its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

PONTON-BRIDGE AT LA CROSSE.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 336) to authorize the construction of a ponton-bridge across the Mississippi River from some feasible point in La Crosse County, in the State of Wisconsin, to some feasible point in Houston County, in the State of Minnesota.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. BOGY] desires to consider the matter further. I therefore consent that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

SETTLERS IN CALIFORNIA.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 445) for the relief of settlers on public lands in the State of California.

Mr. McDONALD. The understanding in the committee was that that bill was to stand over for the present, as some parties desire to be further heard in regard to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

PUBLIC ALLEY IN WASHINGTON.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 293) authorizing the commissioners of the District of Columbia to cancel and annul the condemnation of ground in square 762, in the city of Washington, for a public alley, and for other purposes; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The first section authorizes the commissioners of the District of Columbia to cancel and annul the condemnation of ground in square 762, in the city of Washington, for the purpose of locating a public alley in that square, should they deem the abandonment of the projected alley compatible with the interests of the public; but the abandonment is only to be made upon the petition of a majority of the residents and owners of the property in that square.

The second section directs that the commissioners shall take steps to recover into the treasury of the District of Columbia any damages paid to any person or persons occupying or owning property in the square named where the property of said person or persons has been in no manner interfered with or damaged; and that, upon such recovery, the commissioners shall refund any benefits assessed against any person or persons owning or occupying property in the square, provided such benefits shall have been paid.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ENTRY OF PACKAGES.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. There is on the Calendar a bill from the House, No. 2951, that ought to be passed at once if it is passed at all. There has been a slight amendment made to it by the Committee on Finance. I ask unanimous consent to take up that bill now out of its order.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 2951) to provide for the separate entry of express packages contained in one importation was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that a separate entry may be made of one or more express packages contained in an importation of packed packages consigned to one importer or consignee, and concerning which packed packages no invoice or statement of contents or values has been received. Every such entry is to contain a declaration of the whole number of parcels contained in the original packed package, and to embrace all the goods, wares, and merchandise imported in one vessel at one time for one and the same actual owner or ultimate consignee.

The importer, consignee, or agent's oath prescribed by section 2841 of Revised Statutes is modified for the purposes of the act so as to require the importer, consignee, or agent to declare therein that the entry contains an account of all the goods ——— imported in the ———, whereof ——— is master, from ——— for account of ———, which oath, so modified, is in each case to be taken on the entry of one or more packages contained in an original package. But nothing herein contained is to be construed to relieve the importer, consignee, or agent from producing the oath of the owner or ultimate consignee in every case now required by law; or to provide that an importation may consist of less than the whole number of parcels contained in any packed package or packed packages consigned in one vessel at one time to one importer, consignee, or agent.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. This bill is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury and the necessity for it arises from the fact that there are a large number of packages that are sent here to custom-house brokers and brought over by express companies. The object is to confine the packages, where they come for one person, to one invoice and one entry; and if there is more than one person who is interested in the package, then to allow a separate invoice for the package. For instance, an express company may have a trunk containing fifty or one hundred packages. Under the existing law it is construed that they shall be compelled to enter all those packages in one invoice, and there is great inconvenience about it, for some of them may be for remote parts of the country, some of them perhaps for Saint Louis; some of them perhaps for Washington; some of them for New York; and some of them for Chicago; and they would have therefore to wait until they could get the invoice and the oath of the party to whom they belonged before they could enter any portion of those that are in that single package.

Under existing circumstances, when so many packages are coming here constantly, ordered from this side of the water or sent from abroad to parties here by relatives, as, for instance, clothing of various descriptions, sometimes nothing but old clothing, and frequently sent as presents, it is utterly impossible for those having the shipment in charge to make out an invoice until they hear from the party who is the actual owner. It is a kind of business that is largely transacted. It is also transacted through the mails. This appears to be indispensable to the prompt transaction of the business.

I have any quantity of documents in relation to this matter if the Senate desire to hear further on the subject. I have a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, and, if any Senator desires to have it read, I will have it read. If not, I think we may as well act on the bill with this explanation.

Mr. LOGAN. Is there an amendment reported by the committee?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is an amendment, which will be read.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Finance was in line 3, to strike out the word "express;" so as to read:

That a separate entry may be made of one or more packages contained in an importation of packed packages consigned to one importer or consignee, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

It was ordered that the amendment be engrossed and the bill read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the separate entry of packages contained in one importation."

SMITHSONIAN REPORT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, submitting the annual report of the operations, expenditures, and condition of the Institution for the year 1875; which, on motion of Mr. HAMLIN, was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAMLIN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That ——— additional copies of the annual report of the Smithsonian Institution for 1875 be printed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, the bill (H. R. No. 3128) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for prior years, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

LEGAL TENDER OF SILVER COIN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Bills on the Calendar will be resumed in their order. The next is the bill (S. No. 263) to amend the laws relating to legal tender of silver coin.

Mr. DORSEY. Let that go over.

Mr. SHERMAN. If that bill cannot be passed without objection, I ask that it be recommitted to the Committee on Finance. I submit a motion to recommit.

The motion was agreed to.

SETTLERS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. SARGENT. I see that the bill (S. No. 445) for the relief of settlers on public lands in the State of California has been passed over. Was there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. McDONALD] objected.

Mr. McDONALD. It was the understanding in the committee that the bill should not be acted upon at this time.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator from Indiana has made a very interesting and able report in favor of the bill, which I have read with very much pleasure, and being convinced thereby I should like very much to have an opportunity to give effect to my conviction by a vote in favor of the bill.

Mr. McDONALD. I expect to sustain that report by my vote; but there are other parties who claim that they have not been sufficiently heard on the question, and the committee were inclined to give them a little time to be heard.

Mr. SARGENT. As this bill is one of considerable importance to a very large number of persons embraced in it, I trust the time will be as short as is consistent with justice.

Mr. McDONALD. It will be.

RECORDING OF DEEDS, ETC.

Mr. MERRIMON. If there be no objection, I ask to call up the bill (H. R. No. 1922) providing for the recording of deeds, mortgages, and other conveyances affecting real estate in the District of Columbia.

By unanimous consent the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It repeals sections 446 and 447 of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia, passed at the first session of the Forty-third Congress, and enacts in lieu thereof the following:

All deeds, deeds of trust, mortgages, conveyances, covenants, agreements, or any instrument of writing which by law is entitled to be recorded in the office of the recorder of deeds, shall take effect and be valid, as to creditors, and as to subsequent purchasers for valuable consideration without notice, from the time when such deed, deed of trust, mortgage, conveyance, covenant, agreement, or instrument in writing shall have been acknowledged, proved, or certified, as the case may be, and delivered to the recorder of deeds for record, and from that time only.

The bill was reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, which was to add to the bill:

And the recorder of deeds shall note on each deed or other instrument of writing required by law to be recorded the time of delivery of the same to him to be recorded.

SEC. 2. That this act shall not be so construed as to affect any deed or other instrument of writing heretofore recorded.

Mr. WRIGHT. This bill is not on the Calendar, I believe; it has been reported this week.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been reported since the Calendar was printed.

Mr. WRIGHT. I ask the Senator from North Carolina to explain the changes which are proposed by this bill in the existing law.

Mr. MERRIMON. As the law now stands, any deed may be probated within six months after its execution. It will be seen at once that in a community like this great frauds might be perpetrated. The object of this bill is to cure that trouble, to provide that a deed shall take effect and be valid as against creditors and subsequent purchasers without notice from the day that it shall be registered.

Mr. WRIGHT. Is the existing law that if it be recorded at any time within six months, it takes effect from its date?

Mr. MERRIMON. Yes, sir; that is the state of the law as to all deeds except deeds of trust and mortgages.

Mr. WRIGHT. If they are recorded within six months?

Mr. MERRIMON. I will state again that as the law now stands, any ordinary deed of bargain and sale, or any paper writing required to be recorded touching the conveyance of real property, may be probated and registered at any time within six months after its execution. It will be seen that a wide door might be opened to fraud.

Mr. WRIGHT. I understand that; but what I want to get at is this: as the law stands now, if it is recorded within six months, does it become notice from its date?

Mr. MERRIMON. Yes.

Mr. WRIGHT. The object of this bill is that it shall only become notice from the day of its being filed for record?

Mr. MERRIMON. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

It was ordered that the amendment be engrossed and the bill read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

PONTON-BRIDGE AT LA CROSSE.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I ask now that Senate bill No. 336 be taken up.

There being no objection, the bill (S. No. 336) to authorize the construction of a ponton-bridge across the Mississippi River from some feasible point in La Crosse County, in the State of Wisconsin, to some feasible point in Houston County, in the State of Minnesota, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. SARGENT. I should like to hear an explanation of the bill. I understand that to a large extent it is local, and I do not desire to make any unnecessary objections, but I should like to know whether there is much commerce by this point; whether a ponton-bridge will not obstruct the passage of vessels, and whether it would not be thereby a hinderance to navigation.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The bill was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and by the Committee on Commerce it was referred to the War Department for its opinion and advice, and there is a communication from the Secretary of War on file with the bill, stating that in the opinion of that Department it will not be any obstruction to commerce. That Department can see no objection to the passage of the bill. The Senator from Missouri, [Mr. BOGY,] when the bill was called up some time ago, made some objection to the consideration of the bill at that time. I have since submitted to that Senator a letter from Captain P. S. Davisson, who is the general superintendent of the Keokuk Northern Line Packet Company. This packet company own a line of boats running from Saint Paul to New Orleans, but more especially running and doing business between Saint Paul and Saint Louis. Captain Davisson, who has had long experience as a river man, says that a bridge constructed as this bridge is proposed to be constructed will be no obstruction to the navigation of the river.

I also submitted to the Senator from Missouri a communication from Captain McDonald, who is one of the owners of the most extensive tow-boat company on the Upper Mississippi, who says that in his opinion the bridge, if constructed as it is proposed to be constructed by this bill, will not be an obstruction to navigation. It leaves a clear, open channel of four hundred feet; and it is to be constructed, as the Senator from California will see, under plans approved by the Secretary of War.

Mr. HOWE. I have not seen the letters to which my colleague refers, and I ask him, as they are very important testimony, if there is nothing in them which may not appear in print, to have them read.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Very well. I ask the Secretary to read each of these letters which I send to the desk.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

LA CROSSE, WISCONSIN, April 7, 1876.

GENTLEMEN: Hearing that there is some objection made by certain United States Senators to the erection of a ponton-bridge between La Crosse County, Wisconsin, and Houston County, Minnesota, I take this method of giving the knowledge I possess in relation thereto. It would perhaps be proper to state first that I am a practical pilot, and that I am a member of a firm having a greater number of boats used exclusively in the towing of rafts than has any other firm or individual, and as a necessary consequence have a greater interest than any one has in keeping the Mississippi River as free as possible from artificial obstruction. But I regard a ponton-bridge similar to that now in use at Prairie du Chien as no obstruction or hinderance to the safe and speedy navigation of this river; providing, however, that the ponton or boat shall be at least four hundred feet in length, and crossing the main channel at a right angle to the stream, and that the abutments shall be protected by suitable shear-booms to enable any and all craft to pass safely through from above. All the pilots and parties interested in the navigation of the Mississippi River, so far as I have any knowledge, entertain a like opinion.

I am, gentlemen, very respectfully, yours,

D. A. McDONALD.

To the SENATORS AND REPRESENTATIVES OF WISCONSIN in United States Congress.

I hereby certify that I am the general superintendent of the Keokuk Northern Line Packet Company, which company is engaged in the transportation of freight and passengers, by steamboat, on the Mississippi River, between Saint Paul and New Orleans. That I have been engaged in various positions as a practical navigator of western rivers for the last twenty years. That I am of opinion that ponton-bridges, if built so as to leave a clear channel of four hundred feet, with guide booms, are not a serious obstruction to the navigation of said rivers.

P. S. DAVISSON,
General Superintendent.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Wisconsin, in no hostility to the bill at all, the propriety of adding a proviso which has become a somewhat favorite one here, reserving to Congress the right at any time to amend or repeal this act. I think the Senator will have no objection to that.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I have no objection to such an amendment.

Mr. CONKLING. Therefore I move to insert the words:

And provided further, That the right is hereby reserved to repeal or amend this act.

The honorable Senator from California [Mr. SARGENT] asks me if I do not think the words should be added "that the bridge shall then be removed." In answer I say that this being a boundary river between States, manifestly it does not fall within the police power of any single State to authorize this bridge, and if the time shall come when it is no longer authorized by Congress, it will be a nuisance and may be prostrated by the order of a court. Does the Senator doubt that? It seems to me it would stand entirely without permission. What I say would not be true, as I understand the law, touching a river wholly within the domain of a State, because I think until Congress shall act in derogation of that right, among the police powers of the State is the power to regulate bridges, ferries, turnpikes, and other things. But this, I repeat, is a boundary river between States and therefore it must fall, as the Supreme Court said in the Wheeling bridge case it ought to fall, within the domain and power of Congress, and once withdraw that power, the bridge would be an intruder, and it must fall, if judicial proceedings were leveled against it. So that if we reserve the right to take away the authority by which it shall be constructed, it seems to me that we cover the ground.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask the Senator if that is not qualified by the fact that the bridge is authorized to be constructed? the words "and maintain" are not in the act.

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator from California has doubt about this, certainly there can be no objection to enlarging the amendment as he proposes. I submit to him, however, that that would not be the effect of the amendment. The Mississippi is a navigable stream and it is a public highway. It is a river within the domain and jurisdiction of the United States. No man has a right to span it with a bridge, merely because he is a riparian owner, or for any reason which inheres in him. Congress under its power may license and permit him to erect a construction spanning this river. His structure is lawful because of that authority. When the authority is withdrawn, it remains an impediment, an obstruction, a nuisance, an erection in derogation of right. It may be said, however, that if this act should be repealed or modified, the question would be what claim those who have invested money in the bridge would have upon Congress if they were compelled to prostrate it. Although I do not think there would be such a claim, yet I suggest to the Senator from California that that may be an additional reason for his proposing an additional amendment such as he suggests which I take it would be that the bridge should be removed without expense to the Government if its authority should be withdrawn. I presume the Senator from Wisconsin would make no objection to that modification of the amendment.

Mr. SARGENT. I move that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from New York will first be read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment of Mr. CONKLING, which was to insert at the end of the bill:

And provided further, That the right is hereby reserved to Congress to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

Mr. CONKLING. "And in case this act be repealed the bridge shall be removed without expense to the United States, or if it be amended requiring a change, such change shall be made without expense to the United States." I believe that will accomplish the purpose of the Senator from California.

Mr. WRIGHT. Allow me to suggest to the Senator from New York whether it is not true that the necessity for all of the amendment proposed, except the first part of it, is obviated by the acts that are referred to in this bill. I think the acts providing for the construction of the bridges at Clinton and the other places referred to in this bill have these provisions. If it be so, it would be unnecessary to put these provisions in here.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I have no objection to their going in.

Mr. WRIGHT. Then I shall not resist their insertion.

Mr. CONKLING. One of the acts to which the Senator from Iowa refers is general in its terms applying to a range of this river from a certain point to a certain point marked; another act is specific; and I take it neither of those acts would be applicable to this case, this being a specific license to erect a bridge on a certain site, which is not within the range of one of these acts, and, I think, not within the range of the other.

Mr. WRIGHT. My impression is that those acts provide that in the case of repairs to the bridge they shall be made at the expense of the persons erecting the bridge; and, if so, this act referring to those acts perhaps would make it unnecessary to put in such a clause here.

Mr. CONKLING. That is true touching bridges between the Big Sandy and another point, and touching one or two specific cases; but as I remember those acts, they would not cover the case of this bridge far above the point to which they apply.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment, as modified, reads:

And provided further, That the right is hereby reserved to Congress to alter, amend, or repeal this act; and in case of the repeal of this act the bridge shall be removed without expense to the United States; and if this act be amended any changes or alterations required in the bridge shall be without cost to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

A bill (H. R. No. 351) to create an additional land office at Colfax, in Whitman County, Washington Territory;

A bill (H. R. No. 967) authorizing the survey of certain townships in Michigan, and making an appropriation therefor;

A bill (H. R. No. 1336) to establish a new land district in the Territory of Wyoming; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2260) providing for the sale of saline lands.

The bill (H. R. No. 1959) for the relief of certain settlers on the Kansas Indian reservation in Kansas was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The bill (H. R. No. 3129) amending an act granting a pension to Ann Hensley, approved March 3, 1873, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The bill (H. R. No. 2545) authorizing the Secretary of War to relinquish and turn over to the Interior Department a certain military reservation in the Territory of Arizona was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

THE LINCOLN STATUE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning hour having expired, the unfinished business is before the Senate, which is the bill (S. No. 680) authorizing the repavement of Pennsylvania avenue.

Mr. INGALLS. Before the Senate proceeds to the consideration of that bill I desire to make a report. On the 3d day of the present month an invitation was extended by the chairman of the committee of arrangements having in charge the inauguration ceremonies attending the unveiling of the statue to Abraham Lincoln, in Lincoln Park, in this city, on the 14th instant, to the Senate to attend on that occasion, which invitation, I believe, on the motion of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] was accepted by the Senate. The memorial was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and by them committed to a subcommittee, consisting of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. ENGLISH] and myself, with instructions to report to the Senate what course we thought advisable to be followed.

We have had an interview with the chairman of the committee having these ceremonies in charge, and are informed that the statue is now in place in the park and that the exercises attending its inauguration and unveiling will commence to-morrow at one o'clock. It is said to be a work of art that is worthy of the subject, procured in Italy at an expense of $17,000, from the contributions of the colored people of America. Seats have been prepared in the park for the reception and accommodation of the Senate. Whether it will be the pleasure of the Senate to attend collectively in a body, or whether they will desire to attend individually as separate members thereof, I have no means of ascertaining. I simply desire to submit the fact to the Senate, and I offer the following resolution and ask its adoption:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to make suitable arrangements for the attendance of the Senate at the inauguration ceremonies of the Lincoln statue, in Lincoln Park, in the city of Washington, at one o'clock on the 14th instant.

Before the resolution is considered, I suggest that it is worthy the attention of the Senate to determine whether they will attend these exercises collectively in a body or whether the members will attend as suits their own convenience; and I should like some expression of opinion in order that I may make to the chairman of the committee having these exercises in charge such explanation as will be necessary to enable him to complete the arrangements. I would say in addition that it is my purpose, when this action is had, to supplement my motion by a motion that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the resolution reported by the Senator from Kansas.

The resolution was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 2473) to authorize claimants upon even-numbered sections of land within the twenty-mile limits of the Northern Pacific Railroad to make proof and payment for their claims at the ordinary minimum rate of $1.25 per acre.

The message also returned, in compliance with the request of the Senate, the bill (H. R. No. 700) to incorporate the Mutual Protection Fire-Insurance Company of the District of Columbia.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

An act (H. R. No. 2450) to provide for a deficiency in the Printing and Engraving Bureau of the Treasury Department and for the issue of silver coin of the United States in place of fractional currency; and

An act (H. R. No. 2934) to provide for the expenses of admission of foreign goods to the centennial exhibition at Philadelphia.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 2473) to authorize claimants upon even-numbered sections of land within the twenty-mile limits of the Northern Pacific Railroad to make proof and payment for their claims at the ordinary minimum rate of $1.25 per acre was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

REPAVEMENT OF PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 680) authorizing the repavement of Pennsylvania avenue.

Mr. DORSEY. When this bill was passed over the other day the amendment pending was that of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. BURNSIDE] to insert in line 7 of section 1 the words "or cobble or block stone" after the word "wood." I hope that amendment will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 18, noes 14; no quorum voting.

Mr. DORSEY and Mr. MCDONALD called for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is satisfied that there is a quorum present.

Mr. MERRIMON. I do not understand the question and ask to have the amendment read again.

Mr. KERNAN. As I understand, the amendment excepts cobble or block stone from being used.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read again.

The SECRETARY. In line 7 of section 1, after the word "wood," it is proposed to insert "or cobble or block stone;" so as to make the section read:

A commission to select and determine the best kind of pavement, other than wood, cobble, or block stone, to be used, &c.

Mr. CONKLING. I understand the effect of the amendment to be to leave this commission perfectly free, without let or hinderance, to select any pavement whatever that they think it is wisest to select, except that the act will indicate that they are not expected to select a wooden pavement, or a cobble-stone pavement, or a block-stone pavement. The Senate adjudges by this vote, if this amendment shall be adopted as I hope it will be, that, although it is not prepared to settle any question between pavements, there are three pavements, to wit, a wooden pavement, a cobble-stone pavement, and a block-stone pavement, which they are prepared to say it would not be wise to put down on this avenue.

I heard a Senator inquire the other day why we should say this. Mr. President, I answer that, although we may not know what pavement should be put on Pennsylvania avenue, we know that some pavements ought not to be put there. For example we should oppose a pavement of gold, or jasper, or ivory, although we hear of streets so paved. It is not necessary to exclude them in this bill. Why? Because everybody knows that no commission would select a pavement of that sort. If we thought there was the slightest danger of it, we should put in that exception. But it so happens that there is a smooth-running, agreeable pavement made of cypress blocks, or made of hemlock blocks squared, which has been tried, I think to the satisfaction, and more than to the satisfaction of every Senator who is to be called upon to vote. Therefore we say we are opposed to that kind of pavement being included in the field of selection. Every Senator is tolerably familiar with a cobble-stone pavement, and therefore we go so far as to say that our familiarity with that pavement enables us to exclude it from the field of selection. Every Senator has come to be familiar with a block-stone pavement as it is called, and therefore we say that this pavement too, we are prepared to declare ought not to be adopted. There we stop, leaving this commission to distinguish between all the pavements, whatever they may be, admissible as we think, as their judgment may direct.

Mr. RANDOLPH. What is left?

Mr. CONKLING. My honorable friend asks me what there is left. Well, there is an asphalt pavement, there is a concrete pavement, and there is a Macadam pavement such as my honorable friend has seen on the boulevards in New York and on one or two of the streets here; and traveled as I believe he is in foreign lands, although I am not, he has seen Macadam there and seen how it endures the attrition of time and of traffic. There are various forms of these pavements which I have mentioned. Two or three of those forms are to be seen in this city; and there are still others which I have not enumerated. Surely the honorable Senator from New Jersey does not put his question to imply that when we exclude block-stone and cobble-stone on Pennsylvania avenue, we have seriously impaired the list of pavements the selection from which he would approve?

Mr. RANDOLPH. It occurs to me that we have seriously impaired the list. We have not embraced the Macadam or the asphalt; and as to the block-pavement, Broadway is an evidence that it can be made a very good pavement, although a right expensive one. It is a very noisy one; and it may be objectionable to the persons who are living on Pennsylvania avenue, and it may be objectionable to those who prefer a stiller pavement, a quieter pavement to ride over. But it occurs to me that we can trust this commission with a wider discretion than that implied by the amendment. I am perfectly willing to exclude wood; but as to the exclusion of all kinds of stone pavements, I do not think it would be wise.

Mr. CONKLING. This amendment does not exclude all kinds of stone pavements; it excludes no kind of stone pavement whatever, save two: one is a cobble-stone, and the other block-stone. Every other kind of pavement, wholly of stone or partly of stone, still remains.

Mr. WITHERS. My objection to the amendment is this: It seems to me a very remarkable procedure for the Senate to select a commission of scientific engineers, to whom they desire to delegate this duty of making a selection, and then to decide for themselves what class of pavement shall not be considered by this commission. I am in favor of leaving them the widest discretion. They are presumed to be competent to examine the question in all its phases; and I think that no restriction ought to be thrown upon the action of the commission, but that they should be left free to select such pavement as in their opinion is best.

Mr. WHYTE. I understand that if this amendment is adopted it will exclude the Belgian pavement. Surely the Senate does not mean to exclude from the consideration of this commission the Belgian pavement. It has been tried, successfully tried in many of our cities, certainly in my own city, with great success, and it is likely to be adopted there very much more than it has yet been. I will vote against a cobble-stone pavement, because that is entirely out of fashion. Nobody would at the present day, I suppose, except from necessity, lay a cobble pavement. If, therefore, the word "block" is not inserted, I should be very glad to vote for the amendment; and with a view of reaching that point I ask for a division of the question, so that we may vote upon the block-stone and upon the cobble-stone separately.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland, as the Chair understands, moves to amend the amendment by striking out the words "or block."

Mr. MERRIMON. I do not think I go out of the way when I say that the question of the character of this pavement was very fully discussed in the committee, and the committee were unanimously of opinion that an ordinary stone pavement was not desirable in any view. A good stone pavement would cost very much money, and would be a noisy one, and one unnecessary for Pennsylvania avenue, where ponderous bodies are not transported. The committee were of opinion that a smooth pavement, one made of asphalt, or some pavement of that character, would be a suitable one and a proper one. They were unanimously of that opinion; and the run of the debate here indicates that the Senate entertain that opinion. A pavement such as would be required in Broadway, New York, and the great business streets there or in Baltimore, is not required in the city of Washington. We need here a smooth pavement, and one that has great durability; and it is conceded on all hands that an asphalt pavement, or one like it, would answer every purpose. It would be wisest in point of durability and in point of smoothness, and the ease with which vehicles and passengers could get over it; and then, besides, it is not out of the way in point of cost. It would probably be as cheap or cheaper than the stone pavements that have been suggested.

That being the view taken by the committee without dissent, the committee were of opinion that it was wise, that there was no doubt about what ought to be done on the part of Congress to narrow the field of discretion as much as possible; and therefore the exclusion of wood and stone was inserted. We all know that for the last two or three years we have heard the authorities of this District and commission after commission denounced because, in the exercise of a wide discretion, they had perpetrated frauds and had done hundreds upon hundreds of acts that resulted in the injury of the people of the District and of the whole country and brought the city of Washington into disgrace. While the committee had the highest confidence in the proposed commission, they deemed it wise, they almost felt instructed, to make the discretion as narrow as it could be properly made. That was the object in limiting this discretion; and it seems to me that, as there is no reasonable doubt about the fact that the pavement ought to be one of asphaltum or some such substance that would answer every purpose, we ought to narrow down the field of discretion as much as possible by excluding wood and stone. If we had a pavement on Pennsylvania avenue like the pavement on Broadway, New York, or some of the pavements in Baltimore, people could scarcely live along the street at all; the noise would be intolerable. Indeed, after it became smooth it would be dangerous to pass over it.

I have deemed it worth while to say this much in defense of the committee and in furtherance of what I deem the best policy that ought to be adopted by the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to ask the Senator from North Carolina one question, and that is, whether the committee considered the question whether the present pavement on Pennsylvania avenue would do for one year longer?

Mr. MERRIMON. I answer my friend very frankly that that was considered, though we did not deem that that view of the matter was particularly referred to us. The committee regard the pavement on that street as in a very ruinous condition now; it is perhaps not to be called dangerous, but it is scandalous in appearance and very inconvenient to the vehicles and persons and horses that pass over it. I think there is no difference of opinion about the fact that the street must be repaved, and at a very early day. There is no escape from it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I concur with what has been said by my colleague on the committee, the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. MERRIMON,] in regard to the unanimous opinion of the committee that all stone should be excluded as material for this pavement. But this amendment, if adopted, does not, as I understand it, exclude the Belgian pavement. The Belgian pavement is not, as I understand, a block pavement; it is a rectangular pavement, consisting of narrow slabs set edge-wise. If this amendment is adopted, that pavement will be among the materials from which this commission is allowed to select, and it is not, as the honorable Senator from Maryland supposes, excluded. Block pavement, I understand, is a pavement of square blocks of stone.

Mr. EATON. If it does not exclude Belgian pavement, I hope there will be another amendment introduced so that it shall be excluded. I think the committee have done wisely in leaving as little discretion to the commission as possible. From some little experience in paving of this character, I do not believe that square blocks of stone, or rectangular blocks, or Belgian pavement, as it is ordinarily called, or the cobble-stone would answer for this Avenue. I think the duty of Congress is, so far as possible, to determine what this pavement should be. I have my own theory in regard to the matter; I do not know that I care to express it to the Senate now, because these competent engineers doubtless understand the subject much better than I. Much of Pennsylvania avenue runs through very low and what was once swampy ground; and therefore, in my judgment, there never can be, there never will be, a well-paved street there until it is thoroughly drained, first underlaid with a coating of broken stone, and over that stone the concrete or the asphalt put. That, in my judgment, is the only pavement that is proper for this Avenue. Therefore I am prepared to vote that there shall be no square blocks or rectangular blocks, or cobble-stone pavement on this Avenue, and leave it to this board of commissioners to determine what is the best outside of those, the concrete, the asphalt, the Macadam, or any other species of pavement.

I trust that the amendment of my friend from Maryland [Mr. WHYTE] will not be adopted, and I think the stone should be stricken out.

Mr. LOGAN. Let the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. An amendment to the amendment is now under consideration.

Mr. LOGAN. Let us hear both the amendment and the amendment to the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. The pending amendment is to insert after the word "wood," in line 7 of section 1, the words "or cobble or block stone;" and the amendment to the amendment is to strike out the words "or block."

Mr. LOGAN. I do not know that I can add anything to what has been said which will be calculated in the least to enlighten any Senators on this subject; but in noticing the debate here I have been a little surprised at one or two statements which have been made, and especially at one made on a previous occasion by the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON.] I am not appointed for the purpose of defending any commission, or Congress, or anybody else; but I notice that it seems to have become very fashionable, especially in the Senate Chamber, when anything turns out to be a failure, that the Senate are always ready to accept the responsibility and charge it upon themselves. I do not agree to that proposition, nor have I agreed to it since I have been here at any time. It was stated by the Senator from Iowa that the Congress of the United States was responsible for the failure in the pavement of Pennsylvania avenue. I presume—for probably it is presumption on my part—to say that I do not believe that proposition. The responsibility of the failure of the pavement on Pennsylvania avenue is because of the manner in which the contracts were made and the frauds that were perpetrated under the law that Congress passed, and not because Congress passed the law. Acting upon that hypothesis, Congress now proposes to do what? If a law is passed under which persons act, and they perpetrate frauds, and Congress has not enough nerve to unearth those frauds and show who perpetrated them, then the whole responsibility is laid upon Congress.

Now, let us see what this bill proposes to do. It proposes to do the very self-same thing that the Senator from Iowa said had been done by Congress heretofore. What is that? That Congress assumes the whole responsibility, and hence there is no responsibility placed upon any one else. How does it assume it? First, by declaring, at least inferentially, that there are no persons that can be trusted except a certain class in this country. If no one can be trusted except that class, then why not leave it to that class to determine what kind of pavement we shall have? If they are more honest than members of Congress; if they are more honest than civilians; if they are more honest than anybody else, why not have Congress appoint these honest men to be a commission, and let them determine, and then the responsibility will be placed upon men against whom there can be no suspicion.

But Congress proposes to do a different thing. Congress proposes here to say to this commission, "You are appointed for the purpose of selecting the character of material that shall be used for the paving of Pennsylvania avenue, but while we choose you as an honest commission to perform that duty we indicate to you that you are not to take any material except one particular class of material." Why do we say that? Why do we cover up in this bill the fact that it means that this commission shall pave Pennsylvania avenue with just one kind of material and none other? Why not say that? If Congress is to be responsible for the want of having a good pavement here, why will not Congress have the honesty at least to indicate the character of material that this commission are to take? You do that in an indirect way in the bill. You say they shall not take wood; that they shall not take stone. What then shall they take? They cannot take Macadam. Why? You do not exclude it, but yet under the bill they cannot put down a Macadam pavement on Pennsylvania avenue, although some gentlemen say that is the best pavement. Why can they not take Macadam? Because you must underlay it with stone and you exclude stone in your very bill.

Mr. MORTON. The surface may be of broken stone.

Mr. LOGAN. The surface may be of broken stone; but gentlemen speak about the manner of the pavement in Central Park. That is paved by first putting down stone and then covering it over, and then covering it again with broken stone. That is a Macadam pavement.

Mr. CLAYTON. That is not Macadam.

Mr. LOGAN. What is it?

Mr. CLAYTON. It is not Macadam. Macadam is broken stone alone.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well; Macadam is broken stone on the surface.

Mr. CLAYTON. Alone.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well, alone.

Mr. CLAYTON. Is the whole broken stone?

Mr. LOGAN. You cannot pave the Avenue with broken stone under your bill; you cannot use Macadam, because the word "stone" embraces broken stone as well as unbroken stone. Therefore you exclude that character of pavement. What kind of pavement do you propose? I want some gentleman on the committee to tell me what kind of pavement the committee is in favor of, and probably that will throw some light on the subject.

Mr. MERRIMON. To be obliging to my honorable friend from Illinois, I will tell him that the committee were clearly of the opinion that it would not do to have a wood pavement. That has been tried. We were unanimously of opinion that it would not do to have what is called an ordinary stone pavement such as there is on Broadway, in New York, and on most of the business streets of Baltimore. We thought it ought to be an asphaltum pavement, or one like that.

Mr. LOGAN. It could not be one like that unless it is that, for there is nothing else like it.

Mr. MERRIMON. I cannot mention the technical names of all of them. There is quite a variety of them. You might put Macadam at the bottom and asphaltum on the top. Our purpose was to leave it to the discretion of the commission as to which of the various classes of asphaltum were the best, or whether it would be well to combine Macadam and asphalt, making a Macadam foundation, as suggested by the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. EATON,] and putting the asphaltum on top. We were of opinion unanimously that it was not wise to have it of wood or to build the ordinary stone pavement; and because we were so unanimously of that opinion we deemed it wise to so recommend it in the Senate. I think that the tone of the debate here has indicated that the Senate is of the same opinion, to wit, that it ought not to be made of stone or wood. If that is the sense of the Senate, why should we leave that to the discretion of the commission? We want their scientific opinion and their judgment as to the other classes of pavement, exclnding these two. We do not want it of stone or wood, and therefore we excluded those materials by the bill.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the Senator from Illinois yield to me a moment?

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. RANDOLPH. It seems to me after what the Senator from North Carolina has said about this matter that the committee are anxious to have the judgment of these commissioners, General Humphreys and others, and yet exclude them from using that full and free discretion which is necessary to a proper decision. As I said to the Senator just now, it seems to me like granting the right of suffrage to everybody, provided they will vote, for instance, the democratic ticket. Thus these commissioners are permitted to take any sort of pavement they please, provided they will use the asphalt. That is about what it comes to.

Mr. LOGAN. That is what it means.

Mr. MERRIMON. No, sir; the gentleman does the committee injustice, and I think, inadvertently, the subject injustice. What the committee say is this: "We do not want the pavement made of two articles, but, as to all other articles of which the pavement might well be made, we leave that to your judgment." We exclude two things. There are two things which we do not want, to wit, wood and stone; and as to all other kinds of pavement we invite their judgment.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will allow me I think I can convince him that he is mistaken in the proposition which he now states. He says that under this bill the committee thought they might use stone for the base and asphaltum for the surface. Am I to understand him to say that?

Mr. MERRIMON. That would be a sort of combination.

Mr. LOGAN. I say that under this bill they cannot do that. Let us read and see if I am correct. Certain officers are—

Appointed a commission to select and determine the best kind of pavement, other than wood or stone, to be used in paving Pennsylvania avenue.

In other words, they are to select the best character of material to be used except—what? Except stone or wood, which are not to be used. How are you going to make a base of stone for asphaltum under the bill?

Mr. MERRIMON. The mere bed upon which the asphaltum would rest would not be the pavement.

Mr. LOGAN. It would not. Would it not be a part of it?

Mr. MERRIMON. It would be a part of it; the base of it.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask the Senator to tell me what a pavement is. Is it the mere stuff that you smear over the surface of the ground? That is not a pavement. To make a pavement you have got to include the base as well as the surface. Pennsylvania avenue is paved now with wood. What does that mean? Does that mean that the mere blocks that are put together with pitch, or whatever it may be, that is poured in, with gravel thrown over it, form the pavement? If the Senator means that, I say to him that he is mistaken. The first thing to do is to level the ground and put the boards down upon which the blocks rest. The boards upon which the blocks rest are as much a part of the pavement as the blocks or gravel that form the surface are part of it. So it is that, in paving, the material for the base is a part of the pavement and the other material is merely put on to make the surface smooth. I am not in favor of a wood pavement. Where I live I believe the wood pavement is the best pavement we have; but perhaps experience has taught us here that in this climate the character of wood used is such that it is not the best material for a pavement in this city. I think probably that is true. I have no choice, so far as I am concerned, and I have no feeling on the subject except that I think if you appoint a commission for the purpose of examining and determining the character of material to be used in making a pavement over which you shall travel, you should let that commission have their judgment unconfined and unrestricted in reference to the choice of material. Let them choose that which is the best for the purpose of paving the Avenue, and let us except nothing. I do not presume that they would pave this Avenue with cobble-stones. If they should undertake to pave it with cobble-stones, I presume at this time the people would say that they were going outside of the better judgment and outside of the experience of the time in reference to a pavement. Hence they would not be likely to do that, if you leave them free to choose that which they may deem best. If it is best to make the base for asphaltum of stone, let them make the base of stone, and then you will add durability to that which will cover the surface of the Avenue.

I must say that I cannot agree with the committee or with what has been said on this floor in reference to the selection of materials. If these men are to be trusted, trust them as you would trust any honest man. Trust them, not as you would an idiot, an ignoramus, or a fool. This bill first trusts them because they are honest; then because they are experienced; and in the third place it refuses to trust them because you think they are ignoramuses. Is that what is intended? That is the meaning of the bill.

Mr. MERRIMON. Will the honorable Senator allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. MERRIMON. I simply wish to propound a question with a view to illustrating the propriety of the course taken by the committee. If the honorable Senator should have occasion to build a house in Illinois he would appoint an agent to superintend it; and if he did not want stone, and did not want wood, he would be apt to say to the agent, "I am going to Washington to attend the Senate; I want you to build a house for me; but I desire two things out of it: I do not want you to build it of wood and I do not want you to build it of stone. As to all other building materials, you may exercise your discretion." The committee were of the opinion that the interests of the District of Columbia as well as of the whole country demand that this pavement ought not to be made of wood, and that it ought not to be made of stone. They recommended that to the Senate. They thought that would meet the approbation and judgment of the Senate. It is for the Senate now to say whether that is their judgment. I put the question to my honorable friend whether or not he would be apt to give his agent special instructions as to the material of which he did not want his house built?

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I may illustrate the Senator's position by a story. I think he is in the condition that a certain gentleman once was who did desire to build a house. Inasmuch as the Senator puts that illustration to me and asks me what I would do, I will tell him that I once heard of an old gentleman who invited all his neighbors in to fix the location for a fine house that he was going to build. They all gave their views. When they got through, said he: "I like your views very much, but, gentlemen, I will build the house just where I please."

That is what the Senate proposes. You have invited a commission to tell you the character of the material you shall choose for paving this Avenue. After they tell you, then you say "no; not at all; we have pointed out in this bill the character of material you shall use and the character you shall not use."

Mr. MERRIMON. We leave it to their discretion except in two things.

Mr. LOGAN. That is, you except wood; they cannot use wood at all as a material, though it may become necessary to use it for some purpose.

Mr. MERRIMON. I do not think a court would give the language of the bill that construction. I do not think my honorable friend would if he were going to give his client legal advice.

Mr. LOGAN. I say that the language of the bill does mean just that precisely. You cannot use wood according to the Senator's own statement. A while ago he said you might use stone as a base. Now, if you can use stone as a base, can you not use wood as a base? I should like to know the difference. You cannot use either one according to the meaning of this bill. There is no right to use either one in any way whatever as a part of the material.

I have other objections to this bill. I certainly am as far as anybody from making insinuations in reference to rings or cliques or anything of that kind as any man in the world. I do not believe in such things. Hence I say to the Senate, in order that the Senate and the Congress of the United States may not at all times be charged with every responsibility and every failure that occurs in this country under their law where men act corruptly, that in making a law of this kind they should open it so that when you charge a commission with the performance of a certain duty that commission shall be responsible for the manner in which that duty is performed. The trouble we have had has not been the fault of the law; it has not been the fault of Congress, but the fault of the agents, owing to the manner in which the law was executed or the views of Congress carried out.

While I am up I will make one other suggestion in reference to this bill. In line 5 of section 1, I suggest to the committee that an amendment ought to be made. The bill reads that "Brigadier-General A. A. Humphreys, Chief of Engineers, General H. G. Wright, General Q. A. Gillmore, of the Engineer Corps of the United States Army, be, and they are hereby, appointed," &c. These three gentlemen are gentlemen of experience, education, and honor. I do not question that. Right after the word "Army" should follow "without extra compensation" or "without compensation other than their Army pay." That ought to be in the bill. If it is not in the bill, you appoint men to service out of the line of their duty, for which they will be entitled to pay.

Mr. WHYTE. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me to ask him whether the bill ought not to request the President of the United States to detail them for that service? Is it in order for Congress to direct officers of the Army where they shall go and what they shall do?

Mr. LOGAN. I think the bill ought to be amended as the Senator suggests. I will not say that Congress has not the power to do what is here proposed, because God knows recently it seems to have power to do anything on earth, to reach up to the angels in heaven and dictate to them what they shall do. But, strictly confined to the letter of the Constitution, Congress has no right to detail officers from the Army to perform duty. That would be my opinion.

Mr. MERRIMON. Will the Senator allow me to say a word touching this point which the Senator from Maryland has raised?

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. MERRIMON. The committee were not unmindful of that point. I suggested myself, I believe, that under the Constitution the President of the United States appoints all officers except certain officers that Congress may allow the heads of Departments or the courts to appoint; but when we came to consider this matter we found that this was merely assigning another duty to an office already in existence. These officers are assigned this duty; and if, under the law, it becomes necessary, it will be the duty of the President, in pursuance of this statute, to assign these officers to this duty.

Mr. WHYTE. I have prepared an amendment, which hereafter I will offer, asking the President to detail these officers.

Mr. LOGAN. I think that is proper, and I will indicate now to the Senator from North Carolina wherein he makes a mistake, in my judgment. You say you merely assign a duty to officers to perform. In the assigning of that duty you assign it not to the Corps of Engineers at all, but you assign it to individual officers of that corps. If you assigned this duty to the Corps of Engineers, it would be an additional duty belonging to that corps to perform, for which officers might be detailed from that corps by their chief or by the President of the United States; but when you assign the duty to specified persons of a corps, it is a duty not assigned to their branch of the service, but to individuals. Hence it is not a correct provision of law.

Mr. MERRIMON. I think, without a great deal of reflection or examination, that it is perfectly competent for Congress to assign a new duty to an office, and to direct the present incumbent to discharge that duty. I apprehend it to be competent for Congress to pass an act directing the President to assign the General of the Army to command west of the Mississippi River.

Mr. LOGAN. Let me put a case to the Senator. I believe under the Constitution and laws the President of the United States is Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, is he not?

Mr. MERRIMON. Under the law.

Mr. LOGAN. Under the Constitution, is it not?

Mr. MERRIMON. Yes, sir.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well. Now, inasmuch as the Senator and I differ, I will put a case. Suppose you, by an act of Congress, assign a duty to the Chief of Engineers to-morrow, and the President of the United States details him and assigns him to some other duty, what does your law amount to?

Mr. MERRIMON. I apprehend the President in that case would violate his duty as President of the United States.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not apprehend any such thing. The Constitution clothes him with the power to assign officers of the Army anywhere he chooses in strict accordance with their duty, and the lawyer who insists that Congress can deprive him of that power is not, in my judgment, as thorough in constitutional law as he might be. What would your act amount to? Suppose you pass a law to-morrow depriving the President of the United States of the right to assign officers of the Army anywhere, what would your act amount to? It would be in clear violation of the Constitution, and any court would set it aside in a moment by their decision; at least they would decide that there was no force in it.

It seems to me there is no proposition clearer than this, and none can be made clearer. I know heretofore when duties have been assigned to officers of the Army wherein they were mentioned by name, the bills have provided that the President should appoint them to that duty. When you put an Army officer on the board of commissioners for the District of Columbia, I opposed it in the Senate at the time it was done, as Senators will remember perhaps; but there the provision was put in the bill that he should be appointed by the President. That brought it within his power. He could assign by appointment, but without that your law would have amounted to nothing.

There is another objection; and I am merely making these suggestions to the committee that they may make the bill better. I know it is a foregone conclusion, and there is no use of my fighting against this thing. I do not propose to take up the time of the Senate in doing so. Whatever my views may be, I do not propose to make an exhibition of myself here in opposition to a thing that I know the Senate is going to favor. It is not my object to attempt to defeat the bill. I know I could not do it. But my object is to try to point out wherein the bill is imperfect that it may be made better; better for the Congress that passes it, and better, too, for those who have to administer the law.

Section 2 provides—

That within ten days after the passage of this act, or as soon thereafter as may be, the commission named herein shall meet and organize by the election of a president and secretary from among their number, and shall proceed to perform the duties herein imposed upon them; and within ten days after they have determined upon the pavement to be used—

Mr. DORSEY. The Senator has omitted an amendment which is put in there. After the word "days" an amendment was adopted when the bill was up before inserting the words "or as soon as practicable."

Mr. LOGAN. I did not know that. I have one of the bills as printed.

Mr. DORSEY. The amendment was made in the progress of the bill the other day.

Mr. LOGAN. I did not know it. I saw that defect in the bill. I did not notice that an amendment had been put in there; but it obviates my objection as a matter of course. It was not in when the amendment was adopted. I am only reading from the bill as given to me by the Clerk supposing it was correct and contained the amendments already adopted.

I do not know that I care to say anything more in reference to this bill. What I have said has only been by way of suggestion that the bill may be made better. There are other objections that I have to it, but they are not objections going to the points I have named. I should object to the whole of it for reasons that I have not given; but it is unnecessary for me to state them now. In my judgment the committee ought to agree to strike out the words "wood or stone," and leave the matter entirely open. We know the commission will not select wood; everybody understands that. But you confine them within a certain scope in their judgment; and in that confinement they may understand from this bill that you have indicated that they shall go in a certain direction; that, in other words, although you have not said so, you have clearly indicated to them the character of pavement that they shall select, some particular patent or other that they shall follow. I presume neither Congress nor the committee wishes to be, even seemingly, placed in that light.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, this bill provides that General Humphreys, General Wright, and General Gillmore, engineers of the United States Army, shall constitute a commission to build this pavement. It is said that everything should be left to the judgment of this commission. Now I presume that these gentlemen are very competent engineers; but I presume that, so far as laying pavements is concerned, they have not much more experience than we have. Perhaps they have never had occasion to study the subject and practically do not know anything about it; and if they are appointed, they will have to go to work and learn it just as any other commission would do. Perhaps their skill as engineers will enable them to learn it a little sooner.

Mr. DORSEY. Will the Senator from Indiana allow me a word? He is entirely in error in respect to that. General Gillmore and General Wright have been for many years the acknowledged authorities on all questions of pavements, especially concretes, and General Gillmore has written quite a voluminous book on the subject. It was that fact which called my attention first to his ability in this direction. I have no question that he is by far the best judge of what is a proper pavement of any man in this country. I have no doubt of it.

Mr. MORTON. I did not know that fact. I only know these gentlemen by reputation as Army officers; and I never heard that they were engaged as officers of the Army in building pavements; but they may have written books, and may be qualified. The presumption with me was that this would be rather a new business to them, as it would be to us if we were called upon to build pavements. But I did not make that suggestion for the purpose of opposing the bill, as my friend will come to understand. I supposed these gentlemen would have to learn this business, and that there would not be so much presumption on the part of the Senate in saying that they should not take certain materials, or should not make a certain kind of pavement. While I have confidence in the judgment and ability of these men, I have just as much confidence in my own experience in regard to certain kinds of pavement. I have been traveling over pavements for a good many years, and over some dirt roads, such as my friend from Illinois [Mr. OGLESBY] has been in the habit of traveling on, and I have yet to find a smooth stone pavement as compared with what may be called an asphaltum pavement; and I never expect to find one. I have traveled over what would be considered good stone pavements, and I have never yet found an easy one; I have never yet found a comfortable one. They can be made comparatively smooth; but if a stone pavement is made entirely smooth like an asphalt pavement, a horse cannot pull on it and cannot stand up on it. Consequently, a stone pavement has to be comparatively rough. Therefore I would exclude stone pavements in this bill.

One word in regard to the construction put upon the bill by my friend from Illinois, [Mr. LOGAN.] If this bill is to be so construed, because it says "other than wood or stone," as that stone cannot be used in the foundation, that is wrong. I gave that language construction as referring to the surface of the pavement; but no asphaltum pavement can be constructed without stone for the foundation.

Mr. DORSEY. I will say to the Senator from Indiana that the amendment which is now pending before the Senate is perfectly clear on that subject. It says "cobble or block stone." Block-stone is not used for the base; it is for the surface.

Mr. MORTON. That amendment would not be entirely satisfactory, because that would leave the commission open to adopt a macadamized pavement, would it not? I am opposed to any macadamized pavement in any city, I do not care whether it is built of limestone or of freestone, because a macadamized pavement, built of small pieces of broken stone, is necessarily a dusty pavement. The attrition of these small pieces of stone constantly produces dust, and in a city where there is so much travel over a street as there is on this avenue the dust would be almost unendurable in the summer time. I would therefore be opposed to a macadamized pavement under any circumstances, I do not care what kind of stone it is made of. The very nature of the structure of the surface produces dust. My friend never traveled over a macadamized pavement that was not a dusty one in dry weather, and it raises the worst kind of dust—fine, impalpable dust.

Mr. SPENCER. They would have to keep constantly sprinkling it.

Mr. MORTON. Yes, sir. Therefore I prefer to have this as it is, unless there should be some words added to show that it does not refer to the foundation of the pavement, because an asphaltum pavement must have a stone foundation. Giving it the construction the Senator from Illinois does, the language is wrong; but it might be so amended as to show that it refers to the surface of the pavement.

Mr. LOGAN. The language is "other than wood or stone, to be used in paving Pennsylvania avenue." I ask the Senator to read it in that light, and see if I am not correct.

Mr. DORSEY. The other day when this bill was up the words "or stone" were stricken out, the word "wood" only remaining in the exception. On the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. BURNSIDE,] the words "or cobble or block stone" were proposed to be inserted after "wood." As the bill now stands, the word "stone" is not there at all.

Mr. LOGAN. When was it stricken out?

Mr. DORSEY. The other day.

Mr. MORTON. I would oppose that, because I would oppose my personal experience to the judgment of any board of engineers so far as a stone pavement is concerned. I have never yet found a smooth and comfortable stone pavement.

Now, one word in regard to the character of this pavement. I believe an asphaltum pavement can be constructed that will be durable, and nobody questions that it is the most comfortable pavement to travel over that has ever been built. You may take the best wood pavement in this town when it first comes from the hands of the contractor, and driving a carriage from that on to a smooth asphaltum pavement the difference is at once perceived, and everybody appreciates the comfort of it. Pavements ought to be constructed, as far as possible, with regard to comfort and pleasure in traveling over them. If you take a carriage now and start out over the streets of this city, trying first the best wood pavement and then trying the asphaltum pavement, the superior comfort of traveling over the asphaltum pavement is appreciated and noticed at once before you have been on it twenty feet.

I do not say that the pavement problem is entirely solved, but think it is pretty near it. There are asphaltum pavements in this city now that have been down for years, and you can hardly see the mark of a wheel on them, they are so hard and they are so perfect. I should regret to see any other kind of pavement put on this avenue, even if it was done gratuitously. I think that in constructing this pavement two or three things ought to be considered. One would be the expense. As a matter of course, we should consult economy to a reasonable extent. The next is durability, and the next is comfort, and perhaps that should be the first. You may take the best stone pavement you can find in the city of New York, or Boston, or Montreal; you may take the best wooden pavement; and they bear no comparison to a good asphalt pavement, so far as the pleasure of travel over it is concerned. My opinion is also that it is a saving in regard to horses and in regard to carriages. There is a great deal less wear on vehicles upon smooth pavements than there is upon rough pavements. I think the same thing is true in regard to horses.

Mr. LOGAN. While the Senator from Indiana is up I wish to make a suggestion to him. I had been detaining the Senate to such an extent that I stopped before I was through. I ask the Senator from Arkansas if section 3 has been amended so as to allow cobble-stones to be used instead of block-stones between the railroad tracks?

Mr. DORSEY. The words in italics in lines 9 and 10 have been stricken out, and the word "rectangular," in line 7, inserted in place of the word "square."

Mr. LOGAN. The reason that I asked the question is, that at the time the pavement was put down there was quite a discussion in the House of Representatives, of which I was then a member, and the railroad companies insisted that cobble-stone was the only character of stone to be placed down between the tracks that it was safe for horses to travel over, and I have seen a circular since that from some of the railroad companies insisting upon the very same thing. At that time the question was fully discussed in the other House, and I remember perfectly well that on the information we received there we put in a proviso to allow the companies to pave between the railroad tracks with cobble-stones as being the preferable material for the travel of horses.

Mr. WEST. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to ask whether there were not cobble-stones there at that time?

Mr. DORSEY. There were.

Mr. WEST. I think that that fact and the fact that cobble-stones are there now is the reason of the preference of those companies for cobble-stones, because, if cobble-stones can be given the preference, it will save them that much expense; but really in fact the rectangular stone is as good as the other.

Mr. LOGAN. I know nothing about it; I only make the suggestion. I know they say that in reference to the horses; and that is all I know about it. If the other stone is the best material for the horses, they certainly would have used the other stone, I suppose. That argument, at least, has its force on my mind.

Mr. SPENCER. If the Senator from Illinois will permit me, I should like to state that the use of cobble-stones is a matter of economy to the railroad company. Rectangular blocks will form a much prettier pavement.

Mr. LOGAN. The cobble-stones between the railroad tracks are not traveled over by our horses; they are traveled over by the railroad horses. Now, if the railroad people put down a cobble-stone, and it is cheaper and yet just as good a pavement as the other, I want to know why we should object to it?

Mr. SPENCER. I can state the objection. People with carriages very often have to cross the railroad track, and it is a great deal better for them to have a comparatively smooth track than one that is very rough.

Mr. LOGAN. So far as the part between the railroad tracks is concerned, it is not a matter that attracts my attention. That has nothing to do with our driving or the driving of the community. I care nothing about it myself; and I certainly know nothing about it. But I read a circular this morning—and that is what called my attention to it—which I found lying on my table, and I suppose it is on the table of every other Senator, calling attention to that fact and stating that cobble-stones were preferable for the travel of horses. I believe it, and I will state why. If you put down a smooth pavement between the railroad tracks, what will be the consequence in slippery seasons of the year? Any man, in my judgment, who knows anything about horses traveling, must be aware that the horses will travel more safely and with more speed over stones that are a little rough than they will over smooth stones in time of ice or freezing weather.

Mr. SPENCER. It is not intended to put down an entirely smooth pavement. It is intended to put down rectangular blocks with plenty of places for the horses to plant their feet with firmness.

Mr. LOGAN. Rectangular blocks do not change the character of surface. I care nothing about it; I merely suggest it.

Mr. DAWES. I think it has been suggested by those who make the habit of the horse a study that wood is the very worst possible material for a horse to stand or travel on. In his stable a granite floor or a brick floor is much more preferable for the horse, and more conducive to his health and his continuance of soundness than wood. So in the travel upon the road, it has been tested by those who have written upon the habit and endurance of the horse that wood is the worst of all roads for him to travel on; that a smooth or comparatively smooth surface like the block pavement is the next; that asphaltum is the next; and the best track for the horse to travel on, which he will seek of his own accord, upon which he will draw the greatest load, upon which he will manifest the most ease and comfort, is the cobble-stone. There is no doubt about that among those who understand what the horse can do. I do not speak about the beauty or propriety of it; but I can see plainly that an asphalt pavement between the tracks will render it almost impossible for the horse to do the service that is required, and next to that would be wood, and next to that would be this block pavement. Whether it is not proper after all to require a block pavement I am not going to say. I have no doubt a pavement of cobble-stones is cheaper, and that probably is a great deal of the motive on the part of the railroad company; but at the same time it is cheaper with them, not only because it costs less to lay it down, but because the horse will endure more and perform more upon that kind of pavement than any other that is used.

Mr. MORTON. One word about wooden pavements. There is something very curious in the experience of the country in regard to wooden pavements; they stand very well in some cities, and in others they do not. They have endured very well in Chicago, while here they are rotting off within two or three years. In the city of Indianapolis they will not stand. It is very curious that while wooden pavements are now being repudiated here and in most of the eastern cities, there are towns where they are now putting them down; and I suppose nobody will learn in regard to them except by experience.

But there is one question connected with this bill which in my opinion is more important than any other. I think I shall vote for the bill as it is; but I desire to call the attention of the committee and of the Senate to a consideration in connection with the third section of the bill. The bill provides that this pavement shall be paid for, one-third by the property-holders on Pennsylvania avenue, that is, one-sixth of the expense of the pavement will be borne by the property-holders on each side; and then the District itself is to pay one-third out of the fund raised by general taxation, and then the United States pays one-third. I want to understand upon what principle it is that the District is to pay one-third of this expense.

Mr. MERRIMON. The people of the whole District are interested in it to some extent certainly. All the people travel over it more or less.

Mr. WEST. I will mention to the Senator from Indiana that in paving all other streets the District pays one-third.

Mr. BAYARD. I will say to the Senator from Indiana that I propose to offer an amendment touching that subject, of the proportion of this expense to be borne by property-holders along the route of the street. The matter has been brought to my notice by some persons in interest, and I desire to submit to the Senate, when the occasion shall arise, an amendment which shall limit and decrease the proposed portion of expenses to them. I think it exceedingly unjust as it now stands, and I desire to submit to the Senate, when no other amendment is before it, a proposition to regulate that portion of the cost of this pavement which the property-holders along the line of Pennsylvania avenue should equitably bear. If it be not out of time, I will state the facts to be about these: Under a computation which has been handed to me, the cost of the pavement of 1871, and the pavement now proposed to be laid down in 1876, as assessed upon each property-holder, would be thirty-five dollars and some cents a front foot. There is in the report made by the Committee on the District of Columbia, submitted by the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. DORSEY,] a statement which I think is palpably erroneous, to the effect that the cost is to be but $9.56 per front foot to the property-holders. That, I am assured, is an error. There are extracts from the report of the commissioners of the District, on page 2 of this report, stating a rate per foot of about $9.56, with a small fraction added, stated here in decimals as the cost per foot.

Mr. DORSEY. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BAYARD. Certainly.

Mr. DORSEY. The Senator has just stated that the figures in my report were entirely erroneous. I am glad to say that those figures were based on the report of the engineer of this District and of the commissioners, and the statement is precisely that made by the engineer of the District.

Mr. BAYARD. I understand it is not stated by the Senator, because he has quoted the source from which he derives it; but what I say is, that the report of the commissioners, which has in some degree been adopted by the Committee on the District of Columbia, is inaccurate.

Mr. DORSEY. If the Senator will go over the figures of the engineer of the District showing the charges made against the property-holders on the Avenue, against the general revenues of the District, and the sum paid by the Government, he will find that the engineer's statement is substantially correct. I believe it is entirely correct. I ran over the figures, not very closely, but enough to see that the cost per front foot was something less than $10, and I doubt very much whether the Senator is correct in stating that it is more than $30. I think that is more than the entire cost of the pavement.

Mr. BAYARD. There can be no difficulty in a correct ascertainment of the facts. Perhaps the best test would be the production of such bills as I hold in my hand in respect of the pavement of 1871. I have bills for several lots of land along the Avenue of the cost of the pavement which was laid in 1871. Here is one, on lot 33 of reservation A—a bill of $488.99 for a lot of twenty-five feet front. That would be $19.55 a front foot, and such was undoubtedly the amount of tax paid for the pavement laid in 1871. The bills which I hold in my hand disclose that fact. That is the fact, and there is no getting over it, because the amount was paid at that time.

Mr. WEST. Will the Senator permit me a question?

Mr. BAYARD. Certainly.

Mr. WEST. Possibly that might have been a corner lot, so as to involve paying for paving an intersection.

Mr. BAYARD. No; it was not a corner lot.

Mr. WEST. Does the Senator know it was not?

Mr. BAYARD. Yes, sir; the plot has been handed to me. The lot is in the center of the square.

Figures have been given me to show that if the estimated expense of $300,000 for paving this Avenue is assessed upon the private property along the route on the same basis as the assessments made in 1871, there will have been a cost to the property-owners of $34.35 per front foot of their lots. I submit to the Senate that such a tax is crushing and unjust. It cannot be paid without such serious loss as to amount almost to a confiscation of the property.

Let the Senate not forget that much of the property along this route is held by those who are simply tenants for life, by widows who may have the right of dower, or widowers who may have a right by the curtesy, and who, having simply a life estate, cannot bear such taxation. It would fall in a very great measure on life tenants; but whether it falls on the tenant in fee or whether it falls on the tenant for life, the question still is whether it is just to impose so heavy a tax upon property as this. It is to remedy that injustice that I have prepared an amendment, which I will send to the desk now to be read, if in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) It is not now in order.

Mr. WEST. Let it be read for information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read for information.

Mr. BAYARD. Let it be read now for information, and I will offer it when it is in order.

The CHIEF CLERK. The proposed amendment is to insert in line 11, of section 3, after the word "commission," the words:

The cost of paving the intersections of all streets and avenues and all public parks lying and abutting upon said avenue to be paid out of the general revenue of the District, except the portions of such intersections lying between the tracks of the said railroad company and two feet on each side thereof, which shall be paid by the said railroad company. The cost of the said pavement lying between the Botanic Garden and a line two feet outside of the westerly side of the said railroad tracks to be paid by the United States; and, after the aforesaid deduction, the residue of the cost to be paid as follows.

Mr. BAYARD. Then the "as follows" will read:

By the owners of private property lying and abutting on said Pennsylvania avenue in proportion to their frontage thereon, one-third. * * * One-third to be paid by the United States out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; and the remaining one-third out of the general revenue of the District of Columbia.

There has been handed me a diagram of the Avenue, which is open to the inspection of any gentleman who desires to examine it, showing the frontage of private property, the frontage of park distances, the frontage of United States property, and the distances covered at the intersections of the streets. The result of this diagram, which I believe to be entirely correct and which is made up from official sources, shows that there is a frontage on both sides of the Avenue of something over twelve thousand feet, (the exact figures are there;) that very nearly one-half of that frontage is covered by the intersections of the streets and by the park spaces, leaving a little more than one-half of the private property which is to be assessed for the improvement of this pavement.

It seems to me very plain that the property-owners of this District hold a very peculiar position in respect of the rest of the country. This is the Federal city. The streets are used far more by citizens of other places than Washington than by Washingtonians themselves. The pavement laid some three or four years ago is found knocked to pieces. Justice requires you to repair the damage done by the use of that pavement by other than the people of Washington. I do not know how to ascertain it, but I have a very strong conviction that upward of 90 per cent. of those who drive over these luxurious pavements are not citizens of Washington at all. These pavements are kept in order for the luxury, the accommodation, and the benefit of non-residents far more than of residents. Taking that fact as the true basis of our estimate of cost, it seems to me that we must consider in apportioning this burden upon an unrepresented people here the use that they have for the property, or, rather, the proportionate use they have for the property with other citizens of the United States. I have endeavored to accomplish this by the amendment which at the proper time I shall ask the Senate to pass upon. It provides that the intersections (which front on no one's property, which the adjacent property-holder has no benefit from any more than those who do not live near them) shall be paved out of the general fund of the District; that then the portions of the street immediately in front of United States property, especially the Botanic Garden, (which I think reaches two or three blocks,) should be borne exclusively by the United States on that side of the street upon which the property lies and out as far as the westerly side of the railway track in the center; and so of the park spaces, which are public grounds and which the private holders of property along the street should no more be compelled to keep in order than the property-holders on other streets, leaving then the private property-holders to bear their one-third of the expense of paving the body of the street in front of their respective properties. This amendment of course very much reduces their contribution toward the expense.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. MORTON. I believe I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BAYARD. I was not aware that I was interrupting the Senator.

Mr. MORTON. I yielded willingly.

Mr. BAYARD. I have gone on unconsciously. I believe I have said all that I need say at present in explanation of the amendment I mean to propose.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, the question to which I desire to call the attention of the Senate in connection with the payment for this pavement is this: The bill provides that, after putting the part paved by the railway company out of consideration, the holders of the property on the Avenue shall pay one-third of the expenses, the District of Columbia shall pay one-third, and the United States one-third. Now, the question is, what is the measure of justice to the people of the District of Columbia living off this avenue? I do not understand that under the law the United States pay for the repair of any streets except the avenues. The District of Columbia has to pay for them, or the people living on those streets have to pay for those pavements. I am told by the Senator in charge of this bill that the District pays one-third for the repair of all streets; or the Senator from Louisiana, I believe, stated that in regard to the rest of the streets, leaving out the avenues, the District pays one-third of the expenses of repairing them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It pays for all repairs, I suppose.

Mr. MORTON. I mean the building of a pavement where an old one has been taken up and a new one is to be put down.

Mr. WEST. I can only say to the Senator that in respect to one locality in this city—and I believe the principle applies to all—the property adjacent to the line of improvement is assessed one-third of the expenses, each side of the street paying one-sixth, being one-third of the whole, and the other two-thirds come out of the general fund of the District; that is, the taxable property of the whole District pays two-thirds of the expense of improving any street and the property on the line of the street pays the other third.

Mr. MORTON. I understood the Senator a while ago to say that the District paid one-third.

Mr. ALLISON. I think I can explain that to the Senator, if he will allow me. Under the law of the District the District proper pays two-thirds of the expense, and one-third of the expense is paid, as stated by the Senator from Louisiana, by the abutting property-holders. But in reference to this particular bill I think it is hardly fair to say that one-third of the whole expense is paid by the District, because it provides that this third shall be paid out of the general fund; and the Congress of the United States is in the habit of contributing to this fund. We contributed, for instance, last year $1,000,000, which was thrown into this general fund for specific purposes. No portion of this third can be paid out of this general fund unless the fund is provided. I do not see how this fund is to be provided for, unless first by appropriation, and second by special taxes for repairs or for improvements. There is no fund now out of which repairs of streets can be paid. The board of District commissioners, as the Senate will remember, have paid these repairs thus far out of the 3.65 bonds; but those are gone, and there is no fund. So that taxation will necessarily follow for the payment of this.

Mr. DORSEY. I understand that there is a fund of $400,000 or $500,000 that they are authorized by law to pay it out of.

Mr. ALLISON. Those moneys have been specifically appropriated, and they cannot pay, I understand, for the repairs of streets out of that fund.

Mr. DORSEY. We can authorize them to do it. This bill authorizes them to do it.

Mr. ALLISON. Out of any general fund. Therefore of course they will pay out of appropriations and out of taxation.

Mr. DORSEY. We authorize them to pay out of any money in the treasury of the District.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly; but how is that money in the Treasury? First, by appropriations from Congress and, second, by taxation.

Mr. DORSEY. By taxation, certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. Therefore I say it is hardly fair to assert that the people of this District pay one-third of the cost, because Congress contributes a portion by appropriation.

Mr. DORSEY. Last year we appropriated to this District $1,050,000 in one lump, and I think the appropriations altogether were something like $1,600,000 for different purposes. This general fund is made up largely of appropriations made by Congress.

Mr. ALLISON. That was the point to which I wished to call the attention of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. HARVEY. The pending amendment, I believe, has relation to the question of restricting the board to the choice of material for pavement; and, such being the case, I wish to say a word upon that question.

I agree with the Senator from Indiana that on this question we must consult the teachings of experience. Carlyle says that experience charges higher wages than any other teacher, but that the knowledge thus gained, if remembered, is worth its cost. I think it is perfectly true, and it so happens that in this matter we have some experience. I learned during the discussion of this question the other day, from the speech of the Senator from California, that when this Avenue was last paved the choice of the material was made by a commission consisting of the Secretary of the Interior at that time, the then mayor of the city of Washington, and a distinguished engineer, and I further learned that this commission, being left unrestricted in choice, made the choice of wood. The experience has certainly been such as to prove that in this climate, with the materials at hand, such pavement is not suitable. Therefore I think the committee perfectly justifiable in reporting a bill excluding wood from the consideration of this board.

Before I heard the speech of the Senator from California, I had the impression that the paving of the Avenue was done under the direction of the board of aldermen or corporation of the city of Washington, and that it was probably the original of the story which reports that a certain member of a board of aldermen suggested to his brethren that they lay their heads together and make a wooden pavement. [Laughter.] I think that in view of the experience resulting from the use of wood upon that Avenue a board who would now take such a course would show that, though making a great personal sacrifice, it would be somewhat of the nature of the gentleman who took part in a civil war in Scotland a number of years ago, and as a consequence lost his head. An old lady speaking of the circumstance said that, to be sure it was no great head, but it was a sore loss to him.

I think that in view of this experience Congress would be justified in placing it beyond the power of anybody to make such a sacrifice, inasmuch as it would result in no public good. I do not think that the gentlemen who compose the board would do such a thing. I know none of them personally, but I know something of their reputation as engineers. I do not believe they would make use of wood in any portion of the work of paving the Avenue; but I do insist that the committee, in view of the experience of the last paving of the Avenue, is justified certainly in excluding the use of wood for that purpose in this climate.

I think also that the committee are justified in suggesting an amendment to exclude cobble-stone from being used and also rectangular blocks of stone, especially if they should be of such a character of stone that the surface would be so smooth as to result in making the streets so slippery that horses in icy weather would find it impossible to stand up. I think there is a good deal of force in the ground taken by the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Massachusetts in urging that probably cobble-stone for the pavement of that particular portion of the Avenue between the railroad tracks is as good a material as can be used. It is well known that if the street cars are stopped upon an incline they are very hard to set in motion again by the exertion of the horses, and that would be almost impossible at times upon a smooth stone pavement. There may be some better material than either smooth surface stone or cobble-stone, but I think it would subject us to the criticism of the members of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals if we should compel the use of such material as would make it impossible for the horses to get a footing in order to set the cars in motion.

I do not agree that we should entirely exclude the commission from the use of stone of any kind. I think they should be allowed to make use of any kind or quality of stone that might be necessary to form a foundation to the pavement. With these limitations, I would be perfectly willing to vote for the bill substantially as reported by the committee.

Mr. WHYTE. Mr. President, the question as it now stands before the Senate, I understand to be on the amendment moved by the Senator from Rhode Island, to insert in the seventh line of the first section of the bill the words "or block or cobble stones," and I have moved to strike out the words "or block" in that amendment, so as to leave it stand "or cobble-stone;" thus excluding from the consideration of the commission about to be appointed any cobble-stone pavement, but leaving it open to the commission to select any other stone, if, in their judgment, they come to the conclusion that a stone pavement is better for Pennsylvania avenue than any other sort of pavement.

Having some experience upon this subject, I am willing to vote for the bill excluding wood pavement and a cobble-stone pavement, so far as the pavement between the railroad tracks and the curb-stone is concerned, leaving the question to come up hereafter on the third section of the bill as to the character of the stone which shall be used for paving inside the railroad tracks and for two feet on either side.

If you do not leave within the range of selection by the commission some sort of stone, you confine them either to an asphalt pavement or a concrete pavement. We ought not to shut our eyes to the experience of those in whose charge this subject has been in the District of Columbia for some years past. We ought to pay, it occurs to me, some attention to the recommendation, or at least to the experience, of the engineer who has been in charge of these public highways during the last few years. In regard to concrete pavements, he has stated in the report lying upon our table that, as a general thing, they have been utterly worthless. After showing the character of the wood pavement in the District, in the report of the commissioners of the District of Columbia, on page 234, the engineer speaks of the condition of the concrete pavements thus:

> The condition of the defective concrete pavements was equally alarming.

Therefore they were in as bad a condition as the wood pavements in the District—

> The upper or wearing surface disappearing rapidly, exposed the foundation of the pavement to destruction, and each day's delay increased the cost of repair.

And they had to go to considerable expense to repair these utterly worthless pavements. Then of the Neuchâtel pavement—which is an asphalt pavement, I suppose—he says:

> The Neuchâtel pavement has been down one year and eleven months and has not yet required any repairs whatever, except over sunken excavations, for which the pavement was in no way responsible. It has not been severely tried.

Therefore, it has not been upon an avenue like Pennsylvania avenue, where the stores mostly are located, which is traveled by shoppers and persons engaged in trade probably more than any other of the avenues in the city:

> It has not been severely tried, as its slippery surface causes it to be shunned by regular travel; but, if this defect can be remedied, the pavement should rank as first class.

That is the only concrete pavement in the city of which he really speaks well. That pavement has not been tried severely because drivers avoid it on account of its slippery character and go somewhere else.

Mr. DORSEY. I should like to inquire of the Senator whether there is any other asphaltum pavement in the District except that to which the engineer refers?

Mr. WHYTE. He refers to the Grahamite pavement in New York, which has been laid somewhere in the District by the owners of the patent, but which has not been sufficiently tried. I would like to know what is left to an engineer if you exclude stone of every character. With the experience we have had with the worthless concrete pavement in this city, you are left to the Neuchâtel pavement or the Grahamite pavement as the only two to select from.

In regard to the Neuchâtel pavement, the engineer says distinctly that you cannot use it because of its slippery character until some mode has been devised which will rid it of that element of defect. You cannot use it, because drivers avoid it. Are you going to lay upon Pennsylvania avenue, a public highway like that, a pavement that drivers avoid rather than seek? The Grahamite pavement has been tested on Fifth avenue, New York, for three years. It has done pretty well there, but has not been tested in this city. Washington City in regard to an asphaltum pavement is a very different place from the city of New York. I have seen these pavements both in America and on the continent of Europe. I have walked upon them in the heat and found my feet giving way under me. I do not believe that experience can show the use of a pavement in such a climate as this made of asphalt that will wear any time at all. The difficulty is that our extreme heat affects it, and the result is that the pavement becomes soft and utterly useless. We have had it in Baltimore, where our climate is very nearly the same as in the city of Washington, and it is a perfect failure there, a disgrace to the people who have laid it on our public streets. I think that now when we are about to undertake the pavement of this street again, charging the people living on or using stores upon each side of the Avenue with a heavy item of the cost in relaying the pavement, and charging the whole people of the United States with a third of it, we ought to give them a pavement that will be durable in its character and at the same time be neither dangerous because too slippery nor likely to require relaying or mending or "poulticing," as they call it, in a short space of time.

Let us give this commission, if you are going to put it in the hands of a commission of intelligent gentlemen at all, an opportunity of selecting from the general character of pavements laid throughout this country, excluding only what our own experience has demonstrated to be utterly worthless, that is, wood pavements, and cobble-stones, if you please, as being out of fashion in this day. Let us exclude only those, leaving a wide range of selection to such an intelligent commission. Then, when we expend the public money in laying a durable valuable pavement, we shall feel that we have discharged our duty to our constituents.

Mr. ALLISON. I only desire to say a word. The motion is to strike out the words "or block." I shall vote for that amendment and I shall vote for every amendment which proposes to leave this matter to the discretion of the commissioners. This bill presents to us three of the most eminent engineers in this country, who are to execute the simple business of paving Pennsylvania avenue. The Senator in charge of this bill tells us that two of these commissioners are men who have made a specialty of the study of proper pavements and that one of them has written a work upon the subject. After calling these eminent engineers, generals in the Army of the United States, to this service of putting in a mile of pavement on Pennsylvania avenue and leaving to them the discretion of selecting the material, we say to them that they shall only select a single material, because no Senator can say that this commission is likely to accept any material except concrete, either the naked bitumen called Neufchâtel or some patent imitation of this naked material. The Senator from Indiana tells us that his experience is that this is the only proper pavement. If that be so, why select three brigadier-generals in the United States Army to decide?

Mr. CONKLING. May I ask the Senator a question? Shall I understand him to say, and does he mean to say, deliberately, that when you have told these men they must not make either a block or a cobble-stone pavement you have left only one pavement for them to make? Does the Senator mean that?

Mr. ALLISON. I mean that practically that is the effect of the exclusion.

Mr. CONKLING. Then practically there is no way to pave a street except to make a cobble-stone pavement, or a block-stone pavement, or an asphalt pavement.

Mr. WEST. Or wood.

Mr. CONKLING. A wood pavement is out of the question. That is what the Senator means to infer.

Mr. ALLISON. I will answer the Senator. This bill requires these three brigadier-generals to constitute a commission to select and determine the best kind of pavement, but they are to be limited to one character of pavement. Every Senator who has discussed this question, and almost every one who has had practical experience on the subject of paving, admits that if you exclude wood and stone you must necessarily be confined to that character of pavement called concrete. You can make a Macadam pavement, even with these insertions, I admit, which is broken stone mixed with other materials, and I am not certain but that that would be the very best pavement we could lay down on Pennsylvania avenue, and sprinkle it every day of the year. I think it would be the most economical pavement. What I want to do in this matter is, if we are to have three brigadier-generals of the Army of the United States to conduct the business of selecting the material and laying down the pavement that these gentlemen shall have something to do besides supervising the laborers upon the Avenue who shall lay down these blocks of stone or spread over this asphalt or concrete or whatever it may be. I submit to Senators that it is rather a small business to call in a board of eminent engineers, and brigadier-generals, and major-generals to lay down a pavement on Pennsylvania avenue unless we also give to them as experts some discretion as to the best pavement to be put down.

Mr. CONKLING. I think I discover that the difficulty with my friend is not as to the pavement but as to the commissioners.

Mr. ALLISON. No, sir; I am in favor of the commissioners.

Mr. CONKLING. My impression is that he would be relieved in his mind if we should take three high privates and not call upon these eminent brigadier-generals, of whom he reminds us so often, to swoop down from their lofty eminence and consider the matter of a pavement. I think we had better amend the bill by beginning there, in my friend's view.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator desires to be facetious. I should quite agree with him if there was nothing else to do except to lay down a good pavement of material fixed and arranged in advance, and that is practically what is done here. Senators tell us that the concrete pavement is the only one that can be laid down here if you exclude wood and stone. If that be true, then why not let the engineer of the District of Columbia see to it that the pavement is properly laid, and not call together, if the Senator will pardon me again, these distinguished officers of the Army, requiring them to leave their stations and posts and come here for the purpose of superintending the laying of a pavement on Pennsylvania avenue.

Mr. DORSEY. I venture to remind the Senator from Iowa of the fact that there are thirty or forty different kinds of concrete and asphaltum pavements, different patents, out of which we desire this commission to select some suitable material.

Mr. ALLISON. I am aware of that; and the engineer in charge, Lieutenant Hoxie, who is a graduate of West Point, and also a member of the Corps of Engineers, tells us that every one of those patents is worthless. He makes the statement in the volume that I hold in my hand. That is the evidence of the engineer.

Mr. MORTON. There are several streets in this city paved with concrete (I do not know whether it is the kind the engineer mentions) in which the pavements are nearly perfect. They are unbroken; they are smooth. They have been down for several years, and they appear to be scarcely worn at all. I would say, notwithstanding the report of any single or any dozen engineers, riding over these pavements and looking at them myself, that they are a success; and no report can convince me to the contrary.

Mr. CONKLING. Is the gentleman a brigadier-general who makes that report?

Mr. ALLISON. I have an Army Register here; and I will pass it over to the Senator from New York, and he can examine it. I think he is a lieutenant.

Mr. CONKLING. If he is not a brigadier-general I do not want it.

Mr. ALLISON. He was designated by the President as an engineer to take charge of the streets and alleys of this city.

What I submit to Senators is this: that if we are to relegate to this board the question of the material to be used we should not so restrict them as that they shall be confined to one class of material. That is all I have to say on this subject. Therefore I shall vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland to the amendment; and I shall vote against the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island. I have faith that these engineers will select a good pavement.

Mr. MORTON. I see no objection to the selection of this board. The experiment with pavements in this city has been valuable for one thing if for no other. It has determined the proper kind of pavement to be built. The different patents have been tried. Wood has been tried in different ways, and concrete, and all that. The stone pavement was tried. It appears to me by an inspection of the pavements in this town, taking those that are perfect, or nearly so, and inquiring of what material they are made and how they are constructed, that this board will not have a very difficult job. Concrete pavements have been greatly improved in this country in the last fifteen years. They have been improving them from year to year. They did not know how to make them at first. When they first laid them down in New York they were failures, and were called "poultice" pavements; they became soft in the summer-time, as was stated by the Senator from Maryland; but they now construct them so that they are hard in the summer time, a horse's foot making but little impression upon them, and they do not stick to the wheel at all. Great improvements have been made and they have been brought nearly to perfection. It seems to me that there is no trouble in determining the proper pavement to be put down, and I should be perfectly willing to make a positive provision in this bill that it should be a concrete pavement.

Mr. WEST. I think, if we admit that the wooden pavements in this city are a failure and that only so much of the pavements of Washington as are laid down with wood are a failure, we shall have to acknowledge that the remaining pavement is the best pavement in the United States. There is no city in the United States, at least none within my experience that I have visited, where the streets are as well paved, with the exception of wood, as those in Washington. The proposition that we have now before us simply confines this commission to the selection of a concrete pavement. If you exclude wood and if you exclude cobble-stone and block stone, you are really brought down to a concrete pavement. I do not think that the Macadam can be considered a stone pavement. It may be considered as stone at first, but it is not really so; it does not last very long. I myself would be in favor of confining this commission to the selection of a concrete pavement. I think the experience in Washington, contrasted with other cities, bears out that proposition as being the best for the interest of all parties concerned.

As this debate, however, has been general with reference to the policy that should be pursued, I will touch upon one subject, and that is the distribution of cost. The Senator from Delaware deprecated, and very properly too, that the individual property upon the line of this street should be subjected to such an extraordinary and burdensome taxation as he illustrated, but he will bear in mind that this is a different proposition, and that the taxation must be proportionately very much less. This is not a proposition to tax the property per running foot. It is a proposition to do one grand job of work from the gate of the Capitol to the crossing of Fifteenth street. Assuming that the cost of that work will be, in round numbers, $300,000—and that is an approximate estimate—that cost will be divided into three separate sums, deducting, first, the amount that will be expended by the railroad company. Assuming that we have $300,000 to pay for the work, $100,000 of that is to be assessed upon all the private property lying along the line, not per foot for the work done in front of it, but per foot throughout the whole length. The next third is to be assessed upon the general property of the city, and the last and final third the Government of the United States will pay for. Looking at the diagram which the Senator presented, it will be seen that that proposition is not equitable; that the charge to the Government of the United States really exceeds its interest; that the Government of the United States does not own one-third of the property upon that line, and that private individuals own more than one-third, but pay less than a third. Furthermore, with reference to the amount that is to be charged to the property-holders, it is not as onerous as it was when the original pavement was laid down. The original law provided that the property-holders should pay for the paving from the curb to within two feet of the line of the railroad. According to the proposition now, after deducting twenty feet from the center you have one hundred feet to provide for, and the property-holders will pay for thirty-three feet. Therefore the assessment will be less upon them.

Coming back to the proposition of the railroad companies in accordance with the circular that is laid upon our tables here to-day, I should be very loath to do those companies an injustice. I should be very loath to so stipulate in the law that a certain kind of pavement should be provided that would be detrimental to the railroad companies or injurious to their horses; but I look for the motive. I look for the conviction and the reason of the conviction upon the minds of these railroad companies that cobble-stones are the best. I find that this idea originated probably in this way: When we laid down the wood pavement we agreed that the company should select their material. Their material was selected, when the offer was made. They had cobble-stones there, and they were willing to adopt that because they had it, and were saved the expense of getting any other material. Hence their zeal in behalf of cobble-stones now. They have them now; but we must ask ourselves the question whether the interest of the railroad company alone is to be consulted or whether or not the public convenience has something to do with it. I think if Senators will reflect a moment they will find that the horses of the railroad company travel the tracks on Pennsylvania avenue as little as the horses of individuals. To be sure, those horses follow a beaten track, and at the present moment the travel on Pennsylvania avenue may not be so great in consequence of the imperfect condition of the roadways on either side; but you will find that a market-man's carriage, an omnibus, and everybody else's vehicle traverses those tracks. They are as much interested in having proper tracks and they are more interested in having a good pavement than the railroad company, because the railroad company's cars have smooth and level iron to travel on, whereas the individual's carriage has to travel over the cobble-stones and is affected by it. Therefore the pavement of the tracks will be not only for the convenience of the railroad company but of the general public, who will use those tracks, in my opinion, quite as much as the railroad company.

Furthermore, I think the proposition made by the company, and supported here on the floor of the Senate by some Senators who accede to their views, that cobble-stones are the best material for the railroad tracks, is scarcely borne out by the facts. They are more economical because they are right here within this District. There have been laid down miles upon miles of railroad track in the city of Washington within the last two or three years where the railroad companies, I believe without any compulsion whatever, without any requisite of law compelling them to do so, have voluntarily put down rectangular blocks. I do not know the name of the little road with the yellow cars that runs right along the foot of Capitol Hill. At all events Senators will recognize what I refer to when I say that it is the road that has been put in operation within the last eighteen months. I think its track is of rectangular blocks throughout. We should not be carried away by the proposition of the railroad company upon the supposition that cobble-stones are entirely the best, because, although those cobble-stones are to be used perhaps by the railroad horses, and may be some benefit to them, there are other horses that travel there which require the same advantages, and also the vehicles of private individuals, be they engaged in trade, convenience, or pleasure. They are subjected to travel over a road that shackles them and tears them to pieces. Cobble-stones being an obsolete idea in almost every city in the Union that is adopting new improvements, why should we not discontinue their use here? We should scrutinize whether this company is exactly correct in its proposition, because we know that that proposition is actuated altogether by its own interest.

But, coming back to the amendment that has been offered, it is tantamount to confining this commission to the selection of concrete pavement. That is what it will accomplish, express it as you will, either by the words of the Senator from Rhode Island or by the more direct and terse expression of the Senator from Indiana. Pass the bill in that way, and we shall have a concrete pavement; and that is what, in my judgment, you want; and I am ready to vote for the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. SARGENT in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WHYTE] to the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. BURNSIDE,] which will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is to insert after the word "wood," in line 7 of section 1, the words "or cobble or block stone." The amendment to the amendment is to strike out the words "or block;" so that if the amendment as proposed to be amended is agreed to the bill will read:

A commission to select and determine the best kind of pavement other than wood or cobble-stone to be used in paving Pennsylvania avenue.

Mr. CONKLING. That is an invitation to make it out of stone.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is an indication we do not want to interfere with their judgment. If we are going to have a commission to decide anything we ought to leave them something to decide.

The question being put, a division was called for; and the ayes were 19 and the noes 14; no quorum voting.

Mr. INGALLS. I think we had better have the yeas and nays on this proposition.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 27, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Bayard, Bogy, Cameron of Wisconsin, Cockrell, Davis, Dennis, Edmunds, Gordon, Hamilton, Hamlin, Howe, Jones of Florida, Kernan, Logan, McCreery, McMillan, Norwood, Oglesby, Randolph, Ransom, Saulsbury, Sherman, Stevenson, West, Whyte, and Withers—27.

NAYS—Messrs. Boutwell, Clayton, Conkling, Cragin, Dorsey, Ferry, Harvey, Ingalls, Key, Merrimon, Morrill of Vermont, Sargent, and Windom—13.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Booth, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Caperton, Christiancy, Conover, Cooper, Dawes, Eaton, English, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Hitchcock, Johnston, Jones of Nevada, Kelly, McDonald, Maxey, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morton, Paddock, Patterson, Robertson, Sharon, Spencer, Thurman, Wadleigh, Wallace, and Wright—33.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island as amended.

Mr. INGALLS. It appears to me that the result of the vote that has just been taken, unless it is in some way explained, will be to indicate to the commission appointed by this bill that a majority of the Senate prefer that the Avenue shall be paved with block stone.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What ground has the Senator for saying that?

Mr. INGALLS. Simply because the whole debate has turned upon that point. The Senate has been asked to discriminate between different varieties of stone, and has by this vote, in my judgment, expressed a preference in favor of block stone for the Avenue. It appears to me it would be a great deal better, rather than to leave that impression upon the minds of the commission or admit the possibility of its being made upon them, that all restriction should be removed and that the commission should be left entirely at liberty to select whatever material they may see fit to employ for the purpose of paving the Avenue.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will allow me, I can state to him upon what principle I voted for the amendment to the amendment. I voted for it upon the ground that I think the commission we select are honest, capable, sensible men, and that they will select the best material without any reference at all to my preference of material. That is the reason why I voted for the amendment.

Mr. INGALLS. I was not inquiring what reason the Senator had for voting. He is responsible to himself, and, like all the rest of us, is undoubtedly able to sustain his own view. The commission appointed by this act are the agents and servants of Congress, and we have as much right to instruct them in regard to the material they shall employ in carrying out the provisions of this bill as any private individual has to instruct his agent what material shall be employed in the construction of any edifice he may desire to have built. I believe if it were left to a vote of the members of this body, every member would vote to exclude the use of wood. I believe also that every Senator would be as explicitly opposed to the employment of cobble-stone, and that there is not a single member of this body who would vote to use either the Belgian or any other form of rectangular-block stone for paving the Avenue. If that is the case, what conceivable objection is there to an expression of opinion on the part of the Senate and a consequent instruction to our agents as to what we prefer they shall do? I submit that inasmuch as a discrimination has certainly been intimated, if not expressed, by the vote just taken, it would be a great deal wiser, as the Senator from Illinois suggests, to remove all restrictions and leave this commission entirely free to select whatever material they see fit.

Mr. HAMLIN. I wish to state in a word that I voted for the amendment which has been adopted because I believe the commission named in this bill are vastly better qualified than I am to determine what is the best material with which to pave the Avenue. I confess my ignorance. There are other Senators a great deal wiser than myself; but they tell me these gentlemen are eminent engineers. I think I know enough of some of them to indorse that statement, and I know that their opinion is infinitely better than mine. I would prefer to vote for the bill without the slightest restriction in the world; but if I cannot have a bill without any restriction, then I will vote for a bill that has out of it all the restrictions that I can get out.

Mr. KERNAN. I can only say, what has been already so very well said by the Senator from Maine. I voted to strike out those words. The suggestion was made, when the bill was up before, that these men were well qualified to decide upon this work and that we should leave them without restriction as to the material they should use. While I have the greatest respect for the learning of the Senate, I have sat here all day and heard them discuss what was the best for horses to stand on, pull on, and go on, and I have become very well satisfied that we had better leave it to some other body to decide what shall be the material rather than this body.

Mr. LOGAN. In voting a moment ago upon the amendment to the amendment, the fact had slipped out of my mind that I had paired yesterday evening with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] on the passage of this bill. There was nothing said about the vote on amendments; but he, not being here, might think the pair included all amendments. I should like to have permission of the Senate, on that account, to withdraw my vote.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I move that the Senator have permission to withdraw his vote.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not know how he would stand on the proposition which has just been passed upon. I did not remember until just this moment that he told me he desired to pair on the passage of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is all he meant.

Mr. LOGAN. There was nothing said about amendments to the bill; but I prefer to withdraw my vote, for fear that he might not agree with me on the proposition which has just been adopted by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there leave given to the Senator from Illinois to withdraw his vote on the amendment to the amendment?

Mr. EDMUNDS. As a matter of principle, after the result of a vote has been declared, that is not allowable. It might be very important sometimes; in this instance it is no matter, because it is merely on an amendment, which does not amount to a great deal; but the principle of withdrawing a vote after it is declared might raise some difficulty. The safest plan would be for the Senator to get a reconsideration, and then when the question is put again refrain from voting. I feel very sure that the common understanding always is when a pair is confined to the passage of a measure that it does not apply, and is not understood to apply, to amendments at all; and I have the impression on this particular point that the Senator from New Jersey would have voted exactly as the Senator from Illinois has done.

Mr. LOGAN. I will state to the Senator that I merely desired to make this explanation, so that the Senator from New Jersey would not feel that I was violating my pair. It did not occur to me until a moment ago that I had paired with him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote can be withdrawn by unanimous consent.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The Senator from Vermont says that the pair is not regarded as applying to an amendment, but to the vote on the final passage of a bill. Suppose there should be an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause, changing the whole character of the bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. We will decide that question when it arises.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I am speaking of it now as a matter that might govern us hereafter. The Senator himself raised the question by his statement that a pair applies only to the final vote.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The amendment to the amendment was agreed to by such a large vote that I do not know that it is material; but the Senator from Illinois has already made an explanat ion of the circumstance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois insist upon his request to withdraw his vote?

Mr. LOGAN. In order not to set a precedent and as there was such a large vote, after what has been said I will not persist in the request.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I am not going to bother the Senate to state the grounds upon which I voted in favor of the amendment that has been adopted; but I want to state that this bill starts out on the declaration and rests upon the principle that we are to appoint a commission of skillful, philosophic, and learned men, in whose capacity and integrity we confide, to select the best kind of a pavement for this avenue; and then we go along and say that they shall have no powers to do the thing that we have constituted them a commission to do; that they shall not select anything except one particular thing, one particular corner into which we drive them. There is no judgment or discretion left to them except to turn themselves to asphalt and inquire whether they will take, as the board of public works did, a slight mixture of coal-oil and broken brick, and a little bit of calcareous sand that will dissolve in rain, or whether they will take Neuchâtel or whatever it may be.

All these amendments in respect of confining their jurisdiction are in violation of the principle upon which the bill is founded. If you are not going to leave it to this body of gentlemen to determine, with their skill and experience and opportunities of inquiry and investigation, to exercise their judgment over the whole thing, then there is no need—indeed it would be almost disrespectful to do it—to ask these three eminent and high officers of the Army to devote themselves to the mere mechanics of laying a particular kind of pavement. You can get it done a great deal cheaper and with a great deal less fuss by employing John Smith or Tom Jones, or whoever it may be, to do it. I do not think the Senator from Kansas has any right to infer, because we refuse to cripple their discretion, that we are thereby declaring on the other hand that they shall exercise their discretion in a particular way. No such inference can be drawn from the vote that has been taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. BURNSIDE,] as amended.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the amendment be reported as it now stands.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert after the word "wood," in line 7 of section 1, the words "or cobble-stone;" so that if amended it will read:

To select and determine the best kind of pavement, other than wood or cobble-stone.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I would just as lief it should be rejected.

Mr. OGLESBY. If the amendment is adopted, of course it excludes cobble-stone. Wood is already excluded. I shall vote against the amendment, although I voted to amend it before. My object ultimately was to vote against this amendment. If we vote this amendment down, nothing will be in the exclusion except wood; and I think we can probably get that out finally, and then pass the bill.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DORSEY. I move to strike out the words "other than wood," in line 7, after "pavement;" so that, if amended, it will read:

To select and determine the best kind of pavement to be used in paving Pennsylvania avenue.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I move to insert in line 6, of the third section, after the word "thereof," the words "and of keeping the same in repair." Of course these railroads ought to be made to keep the track that they pave in repair. I believe that they are all now required so to do.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I was going to make that suggestion to the Senator. They are still under the obligation of the law to do that.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I do not know that they would be after passing this bill. I think out of abundant caution the words ought to be inserted.

Mr. DORSEY. If the Senator will allow me I will say that the charter of the railway company, under which they are now operating, requires them to keep this pavement in repair.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Yes; but this is to be a subsequent law, and there certainly can be no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 3, line 6, after the word "thereof," it is proposed to insert "and of keeping the same in repair;" so as to read:

The Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company shall bear all of the expense for that portion of the work lying between the tracks of their road, and for distances of two feet from the track on each side thereof, and of keeping the same in repair.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Now, Mr. President, it occurs to me after the action of the Senate that this commission ought to be trusted with the kind of pavement that is put down by this railroad company, and that they ought to put it down themselves, and not wait for the company to do it, and have one part of the pavement on the Avenue completed and another not. We have had considerable difficulty, not in the last two or three years, but some years ago, with even this road in relation to keeping the part that they are obligated to keep under their charters in repair, in compelling them to do so. Now on Ninth street, where we have a concrete pavement, there are two tracks with four rails, and there is a gutter on each side of each rail from one end of the street to the other, making it almost impassable.

I think, therefore, that it would be better to strike out all after the words of the last amendment down to and including all of the proviso in the eleventh line ending with the word "commission." I move to strike out from the sixth line, at the end of the amendment just adopted, all of the words, including the proviso, down to line 11, including the word "commission."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The words proposed to be stricken out will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 3, commencing in line 6, it is proposed to strike out:

Which shall be paved with rectangular blocks of stone, to be approved by the commission herein named: Provided, That the said railroad company may pave the space between their tracks as above set forth under the supervision of said commission.

Mr. DORSEY. I make no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHYTE. I desire now to offer this amendment, to come in after the word "then," in the fifth line of the second section:

They shall then invite proposals for such work by advertisements published in such cities as the said commissioners may deem advisable, at least two weeks in advance of the time fixed for the opening of the bids.

My object is to enable everybody who is in the habit of laying pavements to offer a bid of any sort of pavement to this commission, giving them an opportunity of examining the process and then determining, after they have all this information, as to the kind of pavement they will select.

Mr. INGALLS. The result of that amendment, if adopted, would of course be to defer the completion of this work for at least the period named in the amendment. It is now nearly the middle of April. The centennial exposition will open I believe about the 10th of May, and from that period until the close of that exhibition this Avenue probably will be seen by more people from more sections of the world and by men of more nationalities than it ever has been seen by before or probably will be for some time thereafter. It is at the present time in a condition that is alike dangerous to property and disgraceful to our civilization, and I respectfully submit to the Senator from Maryland that if this work is to be done, the sooner it is done the better.

If it were done, when 'tis done, then 'twere well
It were done quickly.

And inasmuch as the information that is sought to be obtained by this advertisement is all readily accessible, as the gentlemen named in this commission are skilled and experienced engineers and familiar with the work to be done and the material to be employed, I would submit that the time proposed is certainly unnecessary and would be detrimental to the public interest. I hope the Senator from Maryland will not insist on this amendment, because, at the best, using the utmost celerity that can be employed by this commission under the terms of this bill, it will be almost impossible to have the work accomplished before the 1st of August, and to insert the time for advertisement that is named in the amendment would defer the completion of it until some time late in the fall.

Mr. WHYTE. The time is only two weeks.

Mr. INGALLS. Six weeks, I understood.

Mr. WHYTE. Two weeks. It cannot possibly interfere with the completion of the work. It gives the opportunity to everybody to bid. If this should be adopted, I propose to offer an amendment afterward that the lowest responsible bidder shall have the work.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maryland.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 16, noes 13; no quorum voting.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask the Chair to count the Senate, and see if there is a quorum here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER counted the Senate, and declared that a quorum was present.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to say a word upon this amendment. I have voted against it, because I think it goes in the wrong direction. Here we have selected a board of three of the most eminent engineer officers in our service to do the best thing in respect of putting down a pavement. The second section as it stands requires them to contract, but without requiring any special notice, for doing this work, which implies on the face of it one solid contract for the whole work with one contractor. That is the fair meaning of the words. Perhaps they might possibly be twisted into something else, but that is the first impression which strikes one. Now, I may be entirely wrong, but it appears to me that the best interest of the United States, and of the people of this city, is to give these gentlemen authority, if they choose on looking it over to exercise it, not to make any contract at all in the sense of what is usually understood by a contract, but to employ days' work, to buy their material, and superintend the putting of it down themselves; and if we are to amend at all, as I rather think we ought, I should be in favor of inserting a clause which would give them the authority I have named, either to do it by contract or to do it under their own supervision and direction by the purchase of material and the hiring of laborers to do it; so that they will have the whole responsibility of judging of the nature of the pavement, and of every step in respect of economy and perfectness of the work in the progress of its being carried on. In that way I am very sure we shall have a pavement that when it is once paid for will be worth the money that is given for it and will be of great value to the city. That is my ground for voting against this amendment, and I shall propose, if I get the opportunity, an amendment in the opposite direction, to leave the whole question to their discretion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I think the amendment is a very proper one. I am not at all certain that it may not be proper for the commission to build the road after ascertaining what it can be contracted for, in the mode proposed by the Senator from Vermont; but, in order to enable them to determine intelligently whether it will be cheaper and more economical to build it by supervising it themselves, it is proper that they should ascertain and be enabled to ascertain what it can be done by contract for. Then they will be enabled to determine whether they can, as a commission, build it in a better manner or more suitably or more economically than they can do it by contract. It only delays the matter for about two weeks; and if the amendment of the Senator from Maryland prevails, the commission will have in their possession sufficient knowledge of what it will cost to do it by contract, and they can make their own estimates and calculations as to the cost if it should not be done by contract but by the commissioners. I think, therefore, that the amendment of the Senator from Maryland is absolutely proper.

The Senator from Kansas objects because the Centennial is upon us. I apprehend the people who go to the Centennial are not coming to Washington City. But if the people from foreign countries should visit the capital they might carry home a knowledge to their own country that this wooden pavement on Pennsylvania avenue had shown its failure in the capital of the American Republic, and I am not certain but that it would be a good exhibition to make to the world to prove the entire failure of wooden pavements.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. If the amendment of the Senator from Maryland should prevail, we make it as "fixed as fate and foreknowledge absolute" that some sneak will succeed in getting a contract that will give us a miserable kind of pavement. The only security we have is in the discretion of this commission that they are to examine and find out which is the best pavement, not which can be furnished the cheapest. If we allow it to be done under this system of bidding, of course the man who has the meanest pavement will be able to fasten it upon the commission; they will have no discretion about it at all. You might as well leave it to any other three persons as to leave it to these eminent scientific gentlemen. I am utterly opposed to having this work done by the job upon bids or anything of the kind, but wish to leave it entirely in the discretion of this commission.

Mr. DORSEY. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. INGALLS. I know the motion is not debatable, but we have no legislative session until Monday, and it appears to me that we might sit an hour longer and perhaps complete this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. DORSEY. I withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. WHYTE.]

The amendment was rejected; there being on a division—ayes 14, noes 25.

Mr. WHYTE. It may be very old fogyish in me to suppose that the position occupied under the Constitution by the President of the United States makes it more respectful for Congress to ask him to detail this commission, rather than for us to designate the commission ourselves and assign them to duty; but so believing, I offer this amendment:

Strike out beginning with the word "that" on the third line of section 1 down to "commission" in the sixth line, and insert:

That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to detail Brigadier-General A. A. Humphreys, Chief of Engineers, General H. G. Wright, General Q. A. Gillmore, of the Engineer Corps of the United States Army, to act as a commission, whose duty it shall be.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think this is the first time in a statute that it has ever been proposed to request anybody to do anything by law. I move to strike out "requested" in the amendment and insert "directed."

Mr. WHYTE. I accept that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The modification is accepted. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maryland as modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend section 2, line 7, by inserting after the word "shall" the word "by," and inserting after the word "contract" the words "or otherwise provide;" so as to read:

They shall, by contract or otherwise, provide for the paving of said avenue.

The object of this, as I shall not have to rise again before the question is stated, is to leave it to the discretion of this board of engineers not to be obliged to make what is ordinarily understood as a contract.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. It appears to me upon reflection that there is a defect in the second section, and that the commissioners of the District of Columbia ought to be the parties who should contract, if a contract is made, for the paving of the Avenue and the completion of the work. The bill in terms provides that the commissioners shall contract, and subsequently in the proviso that a good and sufficient bond shall be taken with sureties to be approved by the commission. That bond must run to some person or to some corporation, and it appears to me that the section should be amended to provide that this contract shall be made by the authorities of the District, and that the bond which is required in the proviso should be executed to the District of Columbia, in order that the parties in interest may have the right of action upon it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You had better make it to the United States.

Mr. INGALLS. Or "to the United States of America," as the Senator from Vermont suggests. I have not had time to deliberate upon this, it having occurred to me but a few moments since in running over the section; but I would suggest whether it would not be best to amend by inserting after the word "used," in the seventh line, the words "to report to the commissioners of the District of Columbia, who shall by contract or otherwise provide," &c.

Mr. WEST. That would do if you made the bond to the District. If you made it to the United States, this commission would answer the purpose.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it might be implied that this bond would be to the authority under which the commission acts, the United States; but to guard against any possible doubt, if you insert after the word "bond," in line 11 of section 2, the words "to the United States," it will accomplish the purpose, I think.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that amendment then.

Mr. WEST. Without the other?

Mr. INGALLS. Without the other.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is after the word "bond," in line 11 of section 2, to insert the words "to the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In line 13 (owing to the amendment which was agreed to in line 7 giving the commission a discretion not to contract unless they think it desirable) there should be a verbal amendment. I move to strike out the word "said" in line 13 and after the word "contract" insert "made;" so as to read "guaranteeing that the terms of the contract made shall be strictly and faithfully observed," so as to apply it to the alternative of there being a contract.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suggest to the Senator whether he had not better make the word "contract" "contracts," because it may be that the commission will find it to the interest of the United States to make contracts for different portions of the work.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well; let it read "any contract or contracts made."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, as modified.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. DORSEY. I move after the word "cost," in line 9, of section 5, to insert: "which shall be collected and paid in the proportions, by the parties, and in the manner herein provided for paving the Avenue;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That the cost of laying down said pavement, including the removal of the present pavement, grading the Avenue, and all other work and materials necessary to fully complete said pavement for use, shall not exceed the sum of $4.60 per square yard: Provided, however, That said commission shall have power to contract for the repair and maintenance of said pavement for a period not exceeding ten years, and at no greater cost than 3 per cent. per annum of the original cost, which shall be collected and paid in the proportions, by the parties, and in the manner herein provided for paving the Avenue.

Mr. WEST. What does the amendment mean?

Mr. DORSEY. The provision of section 5 authorizes the commission to make a contract for the maintenance of this pavement. The amendment, under that, is that the amount to be paid for such maintenance shall be paid in the same manner as the pavement of the Avenue; that is, one-third by the General Government, one-third by the property-owners, and one-third by the District. It is a necessary provision.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I very much question the propriety of that provision which confers upon these commissioners the power to make a contract for the maintenance of this pavement for ten years. It will be utterly impossible for the commissioners to be in possession of the proper knowledge to make an intelligent contract on that point. They will not be able to know what may be the necessary repairs that may be proper on the street for ten years. It may not require any for two, three, four, or five years. If the work is done faithfully and properly it may not require any at all. It is utterly impossible for these commissioners to now enter into a contract as to the cost of maintaining this street for ten years without at least more information than I can see that they can obtain. This is to pay for a guarantee that perhaps will not be required when the work is properly done. I think that matter may safely be left to Congress to determine hereafter what repairs should be done, or left to the District government, as is suggested by my friend from New Jersey, [Mr. RANDOLPH.] Surely the expense of maintaining the street should not form an element in the contract entered into by these commissioners. For that reason I am opposed to this amendment and to the provision entirely. I think we had better strike it out. I move, therefore, that that part of the bill be stricken out.

Mr. DORSEY. The Senator from Delaware seems to be under the impression that the provision permitting this commission to make a contract for the maintenance of the pavement for a period of ten years is likely to impose an unjust and oppressive taxation upon this District or upon the Government. The simple truth is that the entire cost, if such a contract was made, would be only thirty cents a yard for the whole ten years; and I believe that ordinary stone pavements, which are supposed to last longer than others, hardly last over eight or nine years, and they have to be replaced at a cost of four or five dollars a yard. I do not think there is a property-holder on the Avenue who will not object seriously to that provision being stricken out. It was put in at the instance of the property-holders, who said that, if this Avenue was to be paved and provision made for keeping it in repair, it could be kept in repair at a very slight expense if it is watched constantly; and thus the expense of repaving it will be greatly reduced. I am satisfied, if the Senator will consider the matter, he will withdraw his motion to strike out.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask that the amendment be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware moves to strike out the proviso.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. To strike out the whole section, according to the argument of the Senator from Delaware.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Delaware state his amendment?

Mr. SAULSBURY. To strike out the proviso in the fifth section.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed in the fifth section to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, however, That said commission shall have power to contract for the repair and maintenance of said pavement for a period not exceeding ten years, and at no greater cost than 3 per cent. per annum of the original cost.

Mr. SHERMAN. What is the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas moves to perfect this proviso, and that is first in order.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment of Mr. DORSEY is to add to the fifth section:

Which shall be collected and paid in the proportions, by the parties, and in the manner herein provided for paving the Avenue.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think that practically the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas will be very embarrassing to the District government. In the first place it compels them to keep up a special assessment on all the owners of property along the Avenue every year for ten years. It divides the responsibility of maintaining the streets of the city of Washington in good order. It takes away for ten years from the governing power of the District the control over the repairs of the Avenue. If this is to be a concrete pavement, as I think it ought to be, although I voted to enlarge the powers of the commission, it ought to be repaired probably every day or two, or every three or four days. Here and there where a spot becomes defective it ought to be repaired. Now, to make a continuing contract, and to give to a single party the exclusive right of making these repairs, and saying when they shall be made and how made, will be a very great embarrassment. Then, to single out this street and lay a special tax for its repairs for ten years would be very embarrassing in the administration of the government of the city. I shall therefore certainly oppose the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas.

The repair of Pennsylvania avenue, after it is once completed, ought to be a part of the general expense of the District, and ought to be conducted by the officers in charge of the repairs of other streets. It ought not to be placed in the care of contractors, who may die or move away, or whose condition may change entirely. It ought to be left to those having charge of the general affairs of the District.

I agree with the Senator from Delaware that when this pavement is made it ought to be made to last, and that if there is any risk about it the Government of the United States ought to take the risk and not leave it to contractors, not depend on contractors. The result will be that if it proves to be a failure, the contractors will not make the repairs; and if it proves to be a success and no repairs are needed, they will get the stipulated price; so that in either event we are likely to lose. If they bid too low, they will not make the repairs and the Government will be constantly emba rrassed by the failure to repair.

It seems to me we had better leave this proviso entirely out. At all events I hope we shall not adopt the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. DORSEY.]

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] to strike out the proviso to the fifth section.

Mr. EATON. I hardly think that proviso ought to be stricken out; perhaps it ought to be amended. My experience leads me to think that it had better not be stricken out, and I will give my reason very briefly. I will suppose that here is a contractor in New York, Baltimore, or elsewhere, who has great confidence in a certain pavement which he desires to put down. He will contract to keep that in repair for five or ten years. I should prefer a proviso of that character, that whoever the contractor is he should contract with the commission to keep the pavement in repair. I think we ought in some way to have that in the bill. The contractor might be willing to say that for $300,000, or whatever the sum might be, he would "contract to lay the pavement and keep it in repair for ten years and give good bond and security therefor." That is what we desire. That is what has been done in other places, and it may be done here.

Mr. SAULSBURY. In my opinion, that would be a very proper power to confer on the commissioners. By the terms of the proviso the expenses of the repairs are to be not exceeding 3 per cent. per annum, which would amount in the course of ten years to 30 per cent. of the cost of making the improvement of the street. Now any contractor entering into this contract knowing the price and the cost of the work would add at least the 30 per cent. which it is provided he may have, and it may not actually cost 10 per cent. in the ten years to keep up the repairs. We are burdening the property-holders on the Avenue enough when we require them to pay one-third of the cost of laying this pavement; and to add to that 30 per cent. to be levied and collected out of them on the cost for the purpose of keeping up repairs, when we do not know what amount of repairs may be required, is, in my judgment, unwise. I am therefore opposed to it. I think this matter had better be left to Congress to determine hereafter what repairs should be made, or to the District government, or to some other power than the contractor. We ought to have the control of this affair, and not place it out of our power, as was once done when the affairs of this District were placed in charge of the board of public works. We have to provide the money for it and we ought to hold the control of it. If we enter into any contract at all, limit that contract to simply laying down the pavement on the street, leaving hereafter to be provided for any repairs that may be necessary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. SAULSBURY.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEST. I desire to perfect section 5 by the insertion of certain words that I think will remove the section from somewhat of an ambiguity. There is a limitation on the cost of this pavement in section 5 to $4.60 per square yard, the language being that the entire cost of the pavement shall not exceed that. It is not a matter of interest to the property-holders or the Government of the United States how much it costs the railroad company to lay down their part; and I move to exempt their expense from the total cost, so as to make the cost of the pavement fall on the property and on the Government of the United States to the extent of $4.60. My amendment is to insert at the end of the first line of the fifth section the words—

Exclusive of the work charged to and paid for by the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company, but—that the cost of laying down said pavement, exclusive of the work charged to and paid for by the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company, but excluding the removal of the present pavement, &c.

So as to read—

Mr. DORSEY. That amendment is acceptable.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAYARD. I offer my amendment now and ask that it be read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. EATON. Will the Senator from Delaware permit me to offer an amendment to perfect the fifth section?

Mr. BAYARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. EATON. In lieu of the proviso which was stricken out on the motion of the Senator from Delaware nearest me, [Mr. SAULSBURY,] I propose to offer another in these words:

Provided, That said commission shall demand from the contractor or contractors good and sufficient security that said pavement shall be kept in good repair for the term of eight years.

Now, Mr. President, in my judgment this proviso ought to be attached to the bill. If any contractor has in hand material in which he believes and confides, and if he will make his contract to pave the Avenue and agree to keep it in repair for this term of years, it ought to be done. If not, the commission may possibly be deceived, and in two or three years large amounts may be demanded for repairs. Let the contract be made, let security be given, that the United States and the people of this District will not suffer in this respect, at least, for the term of eight years.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I suggest to the Senator from Connecticut, without expressing any opinion as to the propriety of his amendment, that he should insert after the word "contractors" the words "if any contract should be made," as it is optional now by the bill, as it stands, with the commissioners to do it under their own supervision.

Mr. EATON. I accept the modification.

Mr. RANDOLPH. My objection to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut is of a purely practical character. It is that no contractors of responsibility are likely to make a contract with the Government at a reasonable price for the term of eight years, and if they were disposed to do so, it is very questionable whether such bonds could be given as would be acceptable to a proper commission.

In addition to that, every member of this body will readily understand that in that event a certain percentage, largely in excess of that which would probably be necessary to make the needful repairs, would be added to the original price. For illustration, if a contractor was willing to do this work at $3 a yard and keep it in repair for a year or two, he would add to that $3 under the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut 10, 20, or 30 per cent. to provide for the contingency. Thus in advance we should be paying for that which may never arise. It amounts, as the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] suggests to me, in eight years practically to 24 per cent. on the basis of this bill.

I agree with the Senator from Connecticut that some provision should be made by which this pavement shall be kept in order a reasonable length of time, but the term of eight years strikes me, as one having some experience in such matters, as rather an unreasonable time. I do not think any responsible contractor would engage to do it, and if he did I question very much whether the bond of such a contractor should be taken. I wish, therefore, the Senator from Connecticut would modify his amendment.

Mr. EATON. Have you any objection to making it five years?

Mr. RANDOLPH. That is pretty long.

Mr. DORSEY. By a section of this bill the cost of removing the old pavement on the Avenue and keeping up the street, preparing the foundation for this pavement and the entire cost connected with it, is limited to $4.60 per square yard. It seems to me it is simply absurd to talk about making a contract for a good substantial pavement on the Avenue with a guarantee that it shall be kept in order for eight years at that price. That is an impossible thing to do. I move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut by striking out "eight" and inserting "three."

Mr. EATON. Say "five."

Mr. DORSEY. No; that is too long.

Mr. EATON. I do not like to accept three years; I have no objection to five. My friend from New Jersey has said that his is a practical objection. There can be, I think, no practical objection. I have myself made contracts where work was to be kept in order for ten years, and I made my contracts for a reasonable price. Therefore it was that I placed this at eight, and I have now modified it to five. I do not like to make it for less than five years.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The advantage the Senator from Connecticut had over the contractors as compared with others was that they expected him to live; but some of these contractors may not live ten years, and I, for one, would not like to be their bondsman.

Mr. EATON. They may assign the bond, and somebody else will carry it out.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I do not believe any responsible man would go on such a bond.

Mr. EATON. It is very easy for the Senator to say that he does not believe the bonds will be given after he has been assured that such contracts have been made time and time again. I have already reduced the time to five years. I venture to say that in this city, in Baltimore, and in every other city in this Union where public work has been done, contracts have been made upon these terms for the period of five years. I know myself personally that more than once they have been made for ten years.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I have no objection to "five."

Mr. EATON. I modify it to five years. If there is no bondsman there will be no work, and we shall have to travel over this Avenue as we do to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DORSEY] to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. EATON,] substituting "three" years for "five."

Mr. BAYARD. The Senator from Arkansas will observe that the Senator from Connecticut has modified his amendment to five years. That is so near the point that it might be accepted.

Mr. DORSEY. It seems to me five years is too long; the sum of money we allow for this purpose is insufficient.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think we ought to adopt either amendment. We have selected three commissioners to make a good pavement on this avenue, and I think after that pavement is laid down the District government ought to be charged with repairs, and that this avenue should be kept constantly in repair out of the general funds of the District. We have had a great deal of experience in reference to guarantees for three years in this District already. I do not think they have been of any real service whatever. The contractors neglect to carry out their contracts; they are then sued in the courts; in the mean time the Avenue is out of repair. I think we should lay down a good pavement here and pay for it, and then have it repaired from time to time out of the general funds of the District. Therefore I shall vote against both these amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut.

The amendment was rejected, ayes 10, noes not counted.

Mr. INGALLS. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to two defects in section 4. The first three lines read: "That the assessment contemplated in the foregoing section shall be made by the commission above authorized." The fact is that there are no assessments contemplated in the preceding section, and it is very doubtful whether the commission could make any if they were contemplated. The power to levy and assess taxes rests with the District authorities, and cannot be properly conferred upon the commission whose duty it is to pave this avenue. I would suggest that the section be amended by striking out the word "the" before "assessments" in the first line, and the words "contemplated in the foregoing section," and the words "commission above authorized;" so that the section will read:

That assessments shall be made by the commissioners of the District of Columbia.

And then add:

Upon the owners of private property abutting on said avenue and upon the said railway company the amounts respectively provided for in section 3 of this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. In order to complete the section in accordance with that amendment, it will be necessary, in line 11, to strike out "said" and insert "the," and after "commission" to insert the words "herein authorized;" so as to read:

On the warrant or order of the commission herein authorized.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCREERY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session, the doors were re-opened, and (at four o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 13, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of yesterday was read.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I rise to a correction of the Journal. On yesterday I reported from the Committee on Territories a Senate bill with amendments for the admission of the Territory of New Mexico as a State, and the bill, as amended, was ordered to be printed and recommitted. The order of the House was that the bill should not be brought back on a motion to reconsider. That order is not entered upon the Journal.

The SPEAKER. That was the order of the House, and the Journal will be corrected accordingly.

The Journal, as corrected, was then approved.

CORRECTION OF THE CALENDAR.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. I rise to a privileged question, the correction of the Calendar. On the 30th of March I reported to the House from the Committee on Railways and Canals a bill (H. R. No. 2798) to authorize the Washington, Cincinnati and Saint Louis Railroad Company to construct a narrow-gauge railway from tide-water to the cities of Saint Louis and Chicago, and it was made a special order for Tuesday, the 18th of April, as the RECORD will show. By some mistake the Calendar contains the statement that it was made a special order for Saturday, April 15. I desire to have the Calendar corrected.

The SPEAKER. That is not a question of privilege. The Journal is correct, and as that and not the Calendar will guide the action of the House, the error in the Calendar will not cause any difficulty.

BERTHOLD LOEWENTHAL.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I am instructed by the Committee of Ways and Means to report back, with a recommendation that the same do pass, House bill No. 1713, for the relief of Berthold Loewenthal, of Chicago, Illinois. It is similar to a bill that was passed by the House and the Senate some time since in the case of George Hibbard.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. HURLBUT. I raise the point of order that the bill containing an appropriation must receive its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. That point of order is well taken if insisted upon.

Mr. O'BRIEN. It is insisted upon.

The bill was accordingly referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

SURPLUS REVENUE.

Mr. THOMAS, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported back the joint resolution (H. R. No. 12) in regard to the surplus revenue, with an amendment striking out the third paragraph of the preamble; and moved that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 2450) to provide for a deficiency in the Printing and Engraving Bureau of the Treasury Department and for the issue of silver coin of the United States in place of fractional currency; and

An act (H. R. No. 2934) to provide for the expenses of admission of foreign goods to the centennial exhibition at Philadelphia.

MINING STATISTICS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting the report of the commissioner of mining statistics; which was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining, and ordered to be printed.

CATTARAUGUS RESERVATION, NEW YORK.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in reply to House resolution of April 3, papers relating to surveys in the Cattaraugus reservation, in New York; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

CONSTRUCTION OF MILITARY POSTS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the opinion of the General of the Army on House bill No. 2118, for the construction of military posts on the Yellowstone and Muscleshell Rivers; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

HARMON L. VAN NESS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report in the case of Harmon L. Van Ness, late private in Company D, Fourteenth Cavalry; which was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to taking from the Speaker's table, for appropriate reference at this time, the bills which have been received from the Senate?

There was no objection.

JOHN M. ENGLISH.

The first business upon the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 708) for the relief of John M. English, of North Carolina; which was taken from the table and read a first and second time.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. I ask that this bill be now considered with an amendment. The same bill passed the House, but with a provision in it providing that the man should give a bond.

The SPEAKER. This is a Senate bill.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. It is the same as the House bill, except the provision which I have stated, requiring a bond to be given to secure the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill at this time?

Mr. HURLBUT. I object

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. Then the bill should be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill was referred accordingly.

INTERMENTS IN CONGRESSIONAL CEMETERY.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 679) relating to interments in the Congressional Cemetery; which was taken from the table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

ADMINISTRATION OF OATHS IN THE SENATE.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 701) to further provide for the administering of oaths in the Senate; which was taken from the table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

INVESTIGATION OF MISSISSIPPI ELECTION.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 706) making an appropriation to defray the expenses of the committee appointed by the Senate to investigate the recent election in Mississippi; which was taken from the table, and read a first and second time.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know whether it is necessary to refer that bill. An appropriation of $10,000 to meet this expenditure is included in the deficiency bill passed by the House yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The bill had better be referred.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

DISTRIBUTION OF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 563) to provide for the sale of extra copies of public documents, and for the distribution of the regular official editions thereof; which was taken from the table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour begins at half past twelve o'clock. The regular order this morning is the call of committees for reports of a public nature, and the call rests with the Committee on Public Lands.

RESTORATION OF LANDS TO THE PUBLIC DOMAIN.

Mr. WALLING, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported as a substitute for House bill No. 1033 a bill (H. R. No. 3133) to restore lands conditionally granted, the conditions of which have lapsed, to the public domain; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

CLAIMANTS ON NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD GRANT.

Mr. WALLING, from the same committee, reported back, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 2473) to authorize claimants upon even-numbered sections of land within the twenty-mile limits of the Northern Pacific Railroad to make proof and payment for their claims at the ordinary minimum rate of $1.25 per acre.

The bill was read. It provides that claimants upon even-numbered sections within the twenty-mile limits of the Northern Pacific Railroad shall be entitled to make proof and payment upon their claims at the ordinary minimum rate of $1.25 per acre where settlement was made in good faith prior to the definite location of the railroad, upon making proper proof of settlement, cultivation, and occupation as required by existing law.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 4, after the word "railroad," insert the following: "According to its preliminary location, but not within the twenty-mile limits as definitely located."

Mr. WALLING. The object of this bill is that settlers who located and made claims within the preliminary location of the land grant of the Northern Pacific Railroad, and who were treated by the Department as maximum settlers under that preliminary location, shall now be permitted to pay for their lands as minimum settlers, their lands being outside the limits of the definite location of the road. Persons who have lands on adjoining sections are now entitled to pay for their land under pre-emption entries at $1.25 an acre, the minimum rate. This bill gives simply the same right to persons who settled there before the definite location.

Mr. DUNNELL. I do not know that anything further need be said in support of this bill. The facts can readily be understood. Certain settlers went within what was the temporary location of these railroad lands, expecting to pay for them at the rate of $2.50 per acre. Subsequently, when the definite location was made, they were thrown outside of the twenty-mile limit. Consequently they should not be required to pay more than $1.25 an acre, the same as settlers on adjacent lands. The bill simply secures to these men the rights they would have had but for the change of the location of the road.

The amendment reported by the committee was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WALLING moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD LANDS.

Mr. LANE, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported as a substitute for House bill No. 1552 a bill (H. R. No. 3134) to restore to the public domain land heretofore withdrawn in favor of the Northern Pacific Railroad north of Tacoma, its terminus on Puget Sound, and which is not opposite to and conterminous with its completed line; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

ARSENAL PROPERTY, LITTLE ROCK, ARKANSAS.

Mr. GAUSE, from the same committee, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 2383) for the dispostion of the arsenal grounds and buildings at Little Rock, Arkansas, and for other purposes, and moved that the committee be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

GRANT OF LAND TO THE CITY OF STEVENS POINT, WISCONSIN.

Mr. MOREY, from the same committee, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 1947) granting to the city of Stevens Point, Wisconsin, a certain piece of land, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The preamble recites that there is situated in the Wisconsin River, within the city of Stevens Point, Wisconsin, a small island containing less than one square acre of land, which has for many years been used for the storage of powder and other combustible or inflammable goods, and the people of said city are desirous that the said island be granted to the city for that purpose.

The bill directs the Commissioner of the General Land Office of the United States to cause to be patented to the city of Stevens Point, Wisconsin, the following-described piece of land, to wit, the island in the Wisconsin River, within the corporate limits of the city of Stevens Point, Wisconsin, in section 31, township No. 24 north, in range 8 east of the fourth principal meridian in said State.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MOREY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GRANT OF LANDS TO TERRITORIES FOR UNIVERSITY PURPOSES.

Mr. KIDDER, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 1549, a bill (H. R. No. 3135) to grant lands to Dakota, Montana, Arizona, Idaho, and Wyoming, for university purposes, with a substitute.

The substitute, which was read, grants to the Territories of Dakota, Montana, Arizona, Idaho, and Wyoming seventy-two entire sections of unappropriated lands within each of the said Territories, to be selected, located, and applied, under the direction of the Legislatures thereof respectively, with the approval of the President of the United States, for the use and support of a university in each of the said Territories.

Mr. KIDDER. I will send up a letter pertinent to this subject from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 12, 1876.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 9th instant, addressed to the honorable Secretary of the Interior, which has been referred to this Office for answer, I have the honor to state that Congress has set apart public lands for the benefit of universities in the Territories of Washington, New Mexico, and Utah to the amount of seventy-two sections, or 46,080 acres each; in Washington, by act of July 17, 1854, Statutes, volume 10, page 305; in New Mexico, by act of July 22, 1854, Statutes, volume 10, page 308; and in Utah, by act of February 21, 1855, Statutes, volume 10, page 611.

In Colorado the quantity of seventy-two sections, or 46,080 acres, was granted for university purposes by the act of March 3, 1875, Statutes, volume 18, page 474, providing for the admission of that Territory as a State of the Union.

In the Territories of Dakota, Montana, Arizona, Idaho, and Wyoming there has been no land set apart by Congress for the benefit of universities.

The foregoing embraces all the organized Territories of the United States, to which only your inquiry is understood to refer.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

L. K. LIPPINCOTT,
Acting Commissioner.

Hon. J. P. KIDDER,
House of Representatives.

Mr. KIDDER. It will be seen that all of the Territories except those named in this substitute have had lands donated to them in this way. The original bill included only the Territory of Dakota, while the substitute covers all of the remaining Territories.

Mr. DUNNELL. Is not this bill subject to a point of order?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to suggest to my friend an amendment to this measure. I will not press it, but I would be glad to have it considered by the House.

Mr. DUNNELL. I think this bill had better go to the Calendar. It will provoke discussion, and if the committee desire to avoid the waste of time it had better go to the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. It is subject to a point of order.

Mr. SAYLER. I desire to say to the gentleman who raises the point of order that this bill only gives to the remaining Territories precisely the same land for university purposes which has been given to all the other Territories. It only puts them on an equality.

Mr. DUNNELL. I insist on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is insisted on, and the bill must go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask to have an amendment pending to the bill when it goes to the committee, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

And nothing in this act shall prevent the Legislatures of the said Territories respectively from devoting the proceeds of said lands to the permanent endowment of a system of common schools within said Territories.

Mr. KIDDER. There is no objection to the pendency of that amendment.

The bill and amendments were referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

SALE OF DESERT LANDS.

Mr. HATHORN, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 125) to provide for the sale of desert lands in Modoc and Siskiyou Counties, California, with an amendment to the title.

The bill, which was read, provides in the first section that it shall be lawful for any citizen of the United States, or any person of the requisite age "who may be entitled to become a citizen, and who has filed his declaration of intention to become such," to file a declaration with the register and the receiver of the land district in which any desert land is situated, that he intends to reclaim a tract of desert land, "not exceeding one section, by conducting water upon the same within the period of two years thereafter;" said declaration shall describe particularly said section of land if surveyed, and if unsurveyed shall describe the same as nearly as possible without a survey. At any time within the period of two years after filing said declaration, upon making satisfactory proof of the reclamation of said tract of land in the manner aforesaid, and upon the payment to the receiver of the sum of $1.25 per acre for a tract of land not exceeding six hundred and forty acres to any one person, a patent for the same shall be issued to him.

The second section provides that all lands, exclusive of timber lands and of mineral lands, which do not produce grass or which will not, without irrigation, produce some agricultural crop, shall be deemed desert lands within the meaning of this act.

The amendment to the title is to strike out "Modoc and Siskiyou Counties" and insert "the State of."

Mr. HATHORN. As will be seen, this bill provides for the sale of barren, desert lands, upon which neither tree, shrub, nor blade of grass grows. The ingenuity of man has devised by means of reservoirs and irrigation a plan by which these sterile tracts may be made productive. This provides for the sale of such desert lands in California, and I do not see what objection there can be to a proposition so reasonable. It only affords an opportunity for the reclamation of these now worthless lands. I demand the previous question.

Mr. PATTERSON. I should like to ask the privilege of offering an amendment to the bill, so as to include the Territory of Colorado.

Mr. HATHORN. I am willing to allow that amendment to be pending.

Mr. LANE. I trust the gentleman from Colorado will withdraw his amendment, as it is in contemplation to present a bill of a general character applicable to all the desert lands of the United States, the provisions of which will cover the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. PATTERSON. I hope there will be no objection to allowing my amendment to the bill, as we are on precisely the same footing with California so far as that class of lands is concerned. Let us have the benefit of the passage of this bill as soon as possible.

Mr. LUTTRELL. Let it go.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the consent of the committee that this bill shall be recommitted. So far as I am concerned I have not had an opportunity to examine the bill, and being a Representative in part of the State of California I should like to do so before the bill is passed. I presume I will have no objection to it, but I should like first to examine it.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York, having charge of the bill, assent to its recommittal?

Mr. HATHORN. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The bill is recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I am very sorry the gentleman from New York has agreed to that course.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order. The bill has been disposed of.

HOMESTEAD ENTRIES IN MICHIGAN.

Mr. CROUNSE, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 2923, a bill (H. R. No. 3136) extending the time within which homestead entries upon certain lands in Michigan may be made; which was read a first and second time.

The bill reported as a substitute provides that section 1 of an act entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'an act for the restoration to market of certain lands in Michigan, approved June 10, 1872,'" approved March 3, 1875, be, and thereby is, amended so as to read as follows:

That the act approved June 10, 1872, entitled "An act for the restoration to market of certain lands in Michigan" be, and is hereby, amended so as to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to cause patents to be issued to three hundred and twenty members of the Ottawas and Chippewas of Michigan, for the selections found to have been made by them, but which were not prior to the passage of said act regularly reported and recognized by the Secretary of the Interior and Commissioner of Indian Affairs; and the remainder of said lands not disposed of, and not valuable, mainly for pine timber, shall be subject to entry under the homestead laws.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CROUNSE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RESTORATION TO MARKET OF LANDS IN UTAH.

Mr. CROUNSE also, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 2110) for the restoration to market of certain lands in the Territory of Utah.

The bill repeals so much of the act of Congress approved May 5, 1864, and entitled "An act to vacate and sell the present Indian reservation in Utah Territory, and to settle Indians of said Territory in the Uinta Valley," as directs the Secretary of the Interior to cause to be appraised and offer for sale upon sealed bids the reservations therein referred to; and authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to restore the same to the public domain for disposition as other public lands.

Mr. CROUNSE. This bill applies to lands which were included within a certain Indian reservation in the Territory of Utah. As far back as May 5, 1864, a bill passed Congress for the appraisement and sale of those lands. From that date to this there has been no bid for nor sale of any portion of those lands. This bill proposes simply to release them from the operation of the act of 1864, and to throw them open to the same disposition as other public lands.

Mr. DUNNELL. I desire to ask the gentleman from Nebraska whether the Indian Bureau approves of this bill?

Mr. CROUNSE. Yes, sir. I have a letter here which I will not take time to read, but which shows that the bill has the approval both of the Land Office and of the Indian Bureau.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CROUNSE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LIMITS OF RESERVATIONS FOR TOWN SITES.

Mr. CROUNSE also, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 1765) respecting the limits of reservations for town sites upon the public domain.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted &c., That the existence on incorporation of any town upon the public lands of the United States shall not be held to exclude from pre-emption or homestead entry a greater quantity than twenty-five hundred and sixty acres of land, or the maximum area which may be entered as a town site under existing laws, unless the entire tract claimed or incorporated as such town site shall, including and in excess of the area above specified, be actually settled upon, inhabited, improved, and used solely and exclusively for business and municipal purposes.

SEC. 2. That where entries have been heretofore allowed upon lands afterward ascertained to have been embraced in the corporate limits of any town, but which entries are or shall be shown, to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, to include only vacant unoccupied lands of the United States, not settled upon or used for municipal purposes, nor devoted to any public use of such town, said entries, if regular in all other respects, are hereby confirmed and may be carried into patent: Provided, That this confirmation shall not operate to restrict the entry of any town site to a smaller area than the maximum quantity of land which, by reason of present population, it may be entitled to enter under section 2389 of the Revised Statutes.

SEC. 3. That whenever the corporate limits of any town upon the public domain are shown or alleged to include lands in excess of the maximum area specified in section 1 of this act, the Commissioner of the General Land Office may require the authorities of such town, and it shall be lawful for them to elect what portion of said lands, in compact form and embracing the actual site of the municipal occupation and improvement, shall be withheld from pre-emption and homestead entry; and thereafter the residue of such lands shall be open to disposal under the homestead and pre-emption laws. And upon default of said town authorities to make such selection within sixty days after notification by the Commissioner, he may direct testimony respecting the actual location and extent of said improvements to be taken by the register and the receiver of the district in which such town may be situated; and, upon receipt of the same, he may determine and set off the proper site according to section 1 of this act, and declare the remaining lands open to settlement and entry under the homestead and pre-emption laws.

The amendments reported by the committee were as follows:

In lines 10 and 11 of the first section strike out the words "solely and exclusively."

Add to the third section of the bill the following:

And it shall be the duty of the secretary of each of the Territories of the United States to furnish the surveyor-general of the Territory, for the use of the United States, a copy duly certified of every act of the Legislature of the Territory incorporating any city or town, the same to be forwarded by such secretary to the surveyor-general within one month from the date of its approval.

Add the following section:

SEC. 4. It shall be lawful for any town which has made, or may hereafter make, entry of less than the maximum quantity of lands named in section 2389 of the Revised Statutes, to make such additional entry or entries of contiguous tracts, which may be occupied for town purposes as, when added to the entry or entries therefor made will not exceed twenty-five hundred and sixty acres: Provided, That such additional entry shall not, together with all private entries, be in excess of the area to which the town may be entitled at the date of the additional entry by virtue of its population as prescribed in the said section 2389.

Mr. CROUNSE. Mr. Speaker, as will be seen by reference to the laws relating to pre-emption and homestead entries upon the public lands of the United States, certain lands are excluded from the operation of those laws. Among these are "lands included within the limits of any incorporated town, or selected as the site of a city or town."

The laws respecting the incorporation of towns and cities within the several States and Territories which contain public lands are enacted by the Legislatures of such States and Territories. The limits of any city may be more or less extended as the special or general laws referred to may permit, and in some instances to which my attention has been directed they have been swelled beyond all propriety or any possible need for municipal purposes. The abuse of which I speak obtains more particularly in the Territory of Utah. Much of the legislation there for years is made up of charters to local municipalities and grants of special privileges of this kind.

Here is a list handed me of cities incorporated by the Legislature of Utah from time to time since the organization of that Territory, and as nearly as may be estimated the area of territory included in each:

	Square miles.		Square miles.
Parowan City	25	Provo Grove	25
Millard City	36	Springville Grove	25
Tooele City	9	Spanish Fork	30
Saint George City	25	Payson Fork	25
Beaver City	36	Manti Fork	16
Fillmore City	36	Salt Lake Fork	7
Grantsville City	18	Nephi Fork	16
Coalville City	20	Alpine Fork	4
Deseret City	36	Ogden Fork	20
Smithfield City	16	Logan Fork	16
Franklin City	18	Wellsville Fork	16
Hyrum City	9	Maroni Fork	40
Mendon City	9	Brigham Fork	12
Willard City	6	Richmond Fork	16
Washington	20	Kaysville Fork	18
Cedar City	36	Ephraim Fork	12
Lehi City	16	Mount Pleasant	16
American Fork	16	Spring Fork	16
Pleasant Grove	40

With but few exceptions the population of these cities must be quite insignificant, and for which a few acres in each would suffice to meet all demands for actual municipal purposes. Still here are something like seven hundred and fifty square miles of public domain, embracing a large portion of the lands there susceptible of cultivation, brought within incorporated limits and over which are extended municipal laws and regulations.

Now the construction given to the law denies the right of any one to enter any portion of any such town site, notwithstanding it may be unoccupied and not used or needed for municipal purposes. Such is the decision of the courts and such is the holding of the Interior Department.

A case of some importance involving this question arose in my State, that of Root vs. Shields, and was decided by Mr. Justice Miller, of the United States Supreme Court, whose opinion may be found in 1 Woolworth's Circuit Court Reports. I will not stop to read it in full, but will incorporate it in my remarks as they shall be printed in the RECORD:

1. The city was incorporated, and these lands included within the corporate limits in February, 1857.

2. Shields had no pre-emption claim to them prior to September, 1857.

3. The act granting to him such right, if any he had, provides that a party of the character therein described may pre-empt any portion of the public lands, except such as are included within the limits of an incorporated city. It does not need a single word to show that the law, on its face, does not authorize a pre-emption entry of the lands here in question. But it is insisted, on behalf of the defendants, that this exception in the law is inoperative here. One reason alleged is that the mischiefs of such a provision are so serious that Congress could not have intended the effects which would follow. It is said that the State or territorial Legislature, in which rests the authority of incorporating cities, might, by unduly extending their limits, exclude large bodies of land fit only for agricultural purposes from the beneficent operations of the pre-emption act, and defeat the object of Congress.

We do not stop to repeat what has been said a great many times of the duty of the court, when applying to a case a provision of a statute, the terms of which are clear and precise, and when urged to nullify it by considerations of mischief growing out of it. Here we think the mischiefs are imaginary rather than real. If the local legislature were so unwise as to endeavor to defeat the purposes of a law enacted for the benefit of its constituents, Congress could readily, and certainly would immediately, remedy the evil. And it is not conceivable that the local legislature would ever attempt any such thing.

The pre-emption law was enacted for the benefit of the settlers in the new States and Territories. It offers to that adventurous and worthy class of citizens the advantages of selecting and securing in advance of the speculator the more desirable tracts in the new region. And the uniform policy of the Land Department is to retain the public lands in such a situation for a long time, in order to give those who are willing to encounter the hardships and dangers of frontier life an opportunity to make selections and to settle upon them, and make payment for them at the minimum price before any portion of such lands are offered to purchasers in general. Accordingly such settlers constitute almost the whole body of citizens who settle in such regions. It is not conceivable that they would deliberately devise a measure which would defeat an enactment by which valuable privileges are secured to themselves, and by which the region of country in which they live would be populated and improved. Precisely this argument was urged in the case of Gilman vs. Philadelphia, 3 Wallace, 713, 731. It was held untenable there, for the reasons indicated above.

It is insisted that the clause in the law containing this exception is repealed by the provision in the act organizing the Territory, that its Legislature should not have authority to interfere with the primary disposal of the soil. It is said that if the territorial Legislature can, by incorporating a city, withdraw the lands included within its limits from the privileges of pre-emption, it may and it does thereby interfere with the primary disposal of the soil. This argument is specious rather than sound. If the provision of the organic act has the effect claimed, it is because it repeals the provision of the pre-emption law by implication. Between these two provisions there is no such repugnance that they cannot both stand. So that we cannot imply a repeal of the former by the latter. (United States vs. Ten thousand Cigars, ante.)

This provision in the act is the same as is found in most of the acts admitting new States into the Union. It is intended to withdraw from the local legislatures some special matter of general concernment, and indicates a settled policy in respect thereof.

In 1802, in the act admitting Louisiana, the words used were, "They," that is, the people of the new State, "forever disclaim all right or title to the waste or unappropriated lands lying within the said Territory; and the same shall be and remain at the sole and entire disposition of the United States." (2 Statutes at Large, 642.) And the very phrase here employed by Congress appears in the act for the admission of Michigan, passed on the 15th of June, 1836, (5 Statutes at Large, 59,) and will be found in all similar acts since passed. Having its origin in some reason of general application, it has been felt as a necessary, and adopted as an approved, provision in the legislation of Congress.

One or two considerations will disclose this. To incorporate a city located on the public lands, however contracted its limits, is to withdraw from the operation of the pre-emption law lands included within them. If including public lands within the limits of an incorporated city is an interference with the primary disposal of the soil, then the new States cannot pass an act incorporating a city located on the public lands. But this power in the States was never denied. It has always been exercised by them exclusively of the Federal Government. Indeed, the legislation of Congress concedes the power. So it cannot be that incorporating a city on the public lands interferes with the primary disposal of the soil, even though it has the effect to withdraw the lands within its limits from the operation of the pre-emption law.

I have thus far spoken of the power of States, and am reminded that the charter of Omaha was enacted by a Territory. But we have already seen that the provision has its place in acts admitting States, as well as in acts organizing Territories; and that it is universally used on account of a general policy. So the argument in the one case is of equal force in the other. An act incorporating a city which is located on the public lands does not, by its own force, withdraw lands from pre-emption. That effect is produced by the congressional provision, and is remote, indirect, and only consequential.

These obvious considerations show very clearly that when Congress provided that the Territory should not interfere with the primary disposal of the soil, it did not intend to deny the authority to incorporate a city on the public lands. But this exception in the pre-emption law was not inserted with any view whatever to the extent of the corporate limits of a city, whether they should be reasonable or unreasonable. It was assumed that there was a class of lands which the local authorities would regard as more desirable for town occupation than for agricultural use. Without any inquiry as to the correctness of the opinion on that subject of those who were on the ground, and without convenient means of answering such an inquiry, Congress deemed the short way the best way—to exclude them all from the operation of the act by a general rule. And when, with such a provision of statute before it, and with such obvious reasons for enacting it, Congress proceeded to organize the Territory with the clause which is before us, it is unreasonable to suppose that it intended to repeal or modify the former rule.

The clause in the organic act was intended to forbid the territorial Legislature passing any law to dispose of the public lands as if on its own authority, or intermeddling with the mode by which the General Government should dispose of them, or assuming any authority or jurisdiction in respect of that business. It was not intended to deny authority to pass a law which the Territory alone could intelligently enact.

Clearly the position of the defendants on this ground is untenable.

But we are met by still another reason against giving effect to the exception in the pre-emption law. It is that the act of May 23, 1844, (5 Statutes at Large, 657,) restricts the corporate limits of a city to three hundred and twenty acres. All that that act provides, so far as the matter here in hand is concerned, is that any portion of the public land actually occupied as a town site may, to the extent of three hundred and twenty acres, be by the corporate authorities entered at the proper land office, and at the minimum price, in trust for the occupants. Prior to the passage of that act there was no mode provided for the occupants of such towns acquiring their titles, except at public sales.

The public sales of lands are often delayed long after a large section of territory has been opened for settlement. This is in order to enable settlers to enjoy the preference in acquiring the more valuable tracts. And these sales are made in parcels of not less than forty acres each, and therefore do not afford an appropriate means to claimants of small lots for acquiring title thereto. Congress accordingly provided this mode of relief to such parties, expressly restricting the advantages which it granted to lands actually occupied, and to three hundred and twenty acres. The status of the remaining lands within the corporate limits was untouched. They could not be entered under this act, nor could they any more after than before the passage of it be pre-empted by an individual. The title to them could only be acquired at public sale.

No one of the reasons urged on behalf of the defendants against giving effect here to the clear and express provision of the law, that lands within the limits of an incorporated city should not be subject to pre-emption, are tenable. But if we look to the policy of the provision, we are led to the same conclusion.

Whenever a town springs up upon the public lands, adjoining lands appreciate in value. The reasons are obvious, and the fact is well known. So, too, when a railroad is built through a section of country, the same result follows. So, too, in respect of lands which have been reserved for the use of an Indian tribe, when the Indian title is extinguished, the same may be said. While such lands are held as a reserve, population flows up to their boundaries and is there staid; it of course constantly grows more and more dense, so that when the reserve is vacated, the lands have increased in value, and are always eagerly sought after. The other classes of lands mentioned in the exception, as for instance those on which are situated any known salines or mines, have some intrinsic value above others.

Now all these classes of lands are excepted from the operation of the act, and for the one common and obvious reason, that being of special value, the Government desires to retain the advantage of their appreciation, and is unwilling that any individual, because of a priority of settlement, which certainly can be of but brief duration, should, to the exclusion of others equally meritorious, reap benefits which he did not sow.

This is as true of lands within the limits of an incorporated city as of any other of the classes mentioned in the exception. And it is no answer to this view to suggest that lands thus excluded from pre-emption are not occupied for a town. They are included within its limits by the local legislature because likely to be required for such occupancy. And it is this fact and their proximity to the town which give them special value. This very circumstance of their situation brings them into the classes of lands mentioned.

The lands were not, at the time Shields first asserted a pre-emption claim thereto, subject to entry under the act, and the entry which he made was illegal and void.

* * * * * * * *

It is further insisted on behalf of the defendants that they are bona fide purchasers, and that they as such are entitled to the protection of the court. I think it pretty clear that some at least of these defendants purchased and paid their money without any knowledge in fact of any defect in the title. Yet they are not bona fide purchasers for a valuable consideration without notice in the sense in which the terms are employed in courts of equity. And this is for several reasons.

They all purchased before the issue of the patent. The more meritorious purchased after the entry had been assailed and decided against by the Land Office. But this is a circumstance not material to this consideration. Until the issue of the patent the legal title remained in the United States. Had his entry been valid, Shields would have taken only an equity. His grantees took only an equity. They did not acquire the legal title. And in order to establish in himself the character of a bona fide purchaser, so as to be entitled to the protection of chancery, a party must show that, in his purchase and by the conveyance to him, he acquired the legal title. If he have but an equity, it is overreached by the better equity of his adversary.

Besides, these defendants were bound to know the law. They were bound to know that these lands were within the limits of the city; and that lands within the limits of a city cannot be pre-empted. Knowing these facts, they knew that Shields's entry was void. They did not purchase without notice.

Again, the defect in the title was a legal defect; it was a radical defect. It was as if no entry had ever been made. By it Shields did not take even an equity. After he had gone through the process of making the entry, after he received the patent certificate, Shields had no more right or title or interest in the land than he had before. And, as he had none, he could convey no interest in the land. By the deed which he made and by the successive deeds which they received, his grantees took no more than he had, which was nothing at all.

In order to the maintenance of this defense, there must subsist an interest which the law approves and will support, and we have shown in this opinion that that never existed.

There must be a decree according to the prayer of the bill.

Decree accordingly.

This opinion, as I have said, confirms the ruling of the Land Department, and may be regarded as the settled law relating to entries made within the incorporate limits of any city. With the law standing thus, not only are homestead and pre-emption entries disallowed therein when the limits of any town site are known to the local land officers, but even where patents in such cases may have, by inadvertence, been issued, no valid title passes. Not only this, but I presume the same must hold where the lands have passed from the patentee into the hands of an innocent, bona fide purchaser.

From this brief statement of facts and the law as pertaining thereto, it must be evident to members that legislation is needed to cut down these needlessly and mischievously large city limits, to restrict those which may be created hereafter, and to confirm the titles to those lands which may have been settled upon under the pre-emption and homestead laws, where such settlement does not interfere with any municipal need. This is the object of the bill. It has been framed with care, and its object and also the details of the bill have the approbation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. I ask that the bill be put on its passage.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CROUNSE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRE-EMPTION AND HOMESTEAD ENTRIES IN SOUTHERN STATES.

Mr. SAYLER, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (S. No. 34) to confirm pre-emption and homestead entries of public lands in cases where such entries have been made under the regulations of the Land Office.

The bill was read, as follows:

That all pre-emption and homestead entries or entries in compliance with any law of the United States of the public land, made in good faith by actual settlers upon tracts of land of not more than one hundred and sixty acres each within the limits of any land-grant prior to the time when notice of the withdrawal of the lands embraced in such grant was received at the local land office of the district in which such lands are situated or after their restoration to market by order of the General Land Office, and where the pre-emption and homestead laws have been complied with and proper proofs thereof have been made by the parties holding such tracts or parcels, they shall be confirmed and patents for the same shall issue to the parties entitled thereto.

SEC. 2. That when at the time of such withdrawal, as aforesaid, valid pre-emption or homestead claims existed upon any lands within the limits of any such grants which afterward were abandoned, and, under the decisions and rulings of the Land Department, were re-entered by pre-emption or homestead claimants who have complied with the laws governing pre-emption or homestead entries, and shall make the proper proofs required under such laws, such entries shall be deemed valid, and patents shall issue therefor to the person entitled thereto.

SEC. 3. That all such pre-emption and homestead entries which may have been made by permission of the Land Department, or in pursuance of the rules and instructions thereof, within the limits of any land grant at a time subsequent to expiration of such grant, shall be deemed valid and a compliance with the laws, and the making of the proof required shall entitle the holder of such claim to a patent therefor.

Mr. SAYLER. I desired to explain the provisions of this bill at length, as it is an important one, but in view of the near approach of the close of the morning hour I abstain from so doing, and only ask that the bill be put upon its passage.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SAYLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. GOODIN. I desire to ask unanimous consent of the House, inasmuch as I do not wish to take up the morning hour, to print in the RECORD a few remarks upon the subject of the bill just passed.

There was no objection, and leave to print was granted. [See Appendix.]

PUBLIC LANDS IN SOUTHERN STATES.

Mr. MOREY, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. No. 2) to repeal section 2303 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, making restrictions in the disposition of the public lands in the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Florida.

The bill was read, as follows:

That section 2303 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, confining the disposal of the public lands in the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Florida to the provisions of the homestead law, be, and the same are hereby, repealed: Provided, That the repeal of said section shall not have the effect to impair the right, complete or inchoate, of any homestead settler, and no land occupied by such settler at the time this act shall take effect shall be subject to entry, pre-emption, or sale: And provided, That the public lands affected by this act shall be offered at public sale, as soon as practicable, from time to time, and according to the provisions of existing law, and shall not be subject to private entry until they are so offered.

Mr. MOREY. I think there will be no objection to that bill.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Yes, there is some objection to it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, this I believe is substantially the same bill which was before the House some time since, reported as a House bill and proposing to repeal the legislation of some years since in behalf of the homestead system in certain States of the South. If I understand the matter correctly, this bill is of the same character as that. When the House bill that was reported from the Committee on Public Lands was before the House some weeks since, it was objected to because the tendency of the measure was to repeal the homestead provision as applicable to certain Southern States. It was objected to, further, because the tendency of the measure was to monopolize the public lands in that section of the Union at a nominal price.

That is a policy that has been generally discountenanced and condemned by the people of this country.

The objection to this bill, if I understand it correctly, is that it limits homesteads in these States to forty acres, while the general homestead law allows one hundred and sixty acres of land. The objection to this bill is found in the fact that it limits homesteads to so small a portion of lands as forty acres instead of one hundred and sixty acres. If the Committee on Public Lands would report a bill to apply the general homestead law to the States to which this bill has reference, I think it would be exactly right.

To adopt the policy now of abandoning the homestead system and subjecting to sale what remains of the public lands, so that they may be monopolized at a comparatively nominal price by a few citizens, is certainly a very unwise policy. The system of disposing of the public lands of this country by sale was inaugurated at a time when the public domain seemed to be boundless, limitless, and when the needs of the Treasury required that even the small sums for which the lands were sold should be paid into the Treasury to meet the public necessities. But in view of the rapid exhaustion of the public domain and the increase of the landless people of this country and the certainty that their number will largely increase in the future, it seems to me that a policy which will enable a small number of persons to monopolize the public lands at a nominal price is the worst possible policy upon which we can enter, I do not care what the character of the public lands may be.

If there is any well-defined policy in regard to the public lands in this country, as announced by all parties, democrats and republicans of all shades of opinion, it is and has been for several years past the policy that the remaining public lands of the United States should be secured for actual settlers under the benign provisions of the homestead law. I understand from the reading of this bill that these lands are not even subject to settlement under the homestead law until they shall first have been offered at public sale. I admit that up to this time the evils of land monopoly are not felt in this country. The enterprising landless citizen can press forward to the West and still find a home on the public domain. But that state of things is rapidly passing away. What remains of the public domain, as we see from the reports of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, is being rapidly exhausted, not so much for actual homes for settlers, but by the monopolizing of the land for speculation.

Under a Government like ours, where the ownership of land by the great body of citizens seems to be actually indispensable to good government, a policy which would subject the public domain to a system of speculation, and that speculation fostered and encouraged by the Government so as to enable capitalists to acquire land at a merely nominal price, is in my opinion a very fatal policy.

In the confusion which existed in the House at the time this bill was read I may have misapprehended its purpose. I ask that it be again read.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be again read; and the Chair begs members of the House to give attention to the reading.

The bill was again read.

Mr. MOREY. Without desiring to take the floor from the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] but by his consent, I wish to say, as the morning hour is about to expire, that I propose, having charge of this bill, that it shall be discussed in the morning hours just so long as the House desires to have it discussed, giving the opponents of the bill ample opportunity to present their views and giving the friends of the bill the same opportunity. With that understanding, the gentleman from Indiana still holding the floor, as the morning hour has expired I will call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HANCOCK. I rise to make a report from the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. SCALES. I desire to move that the rules be suspended and the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the bill to transfer the Indian Bureau to the War Department.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to raise the question of consideration in regard to that bill; or rather I move to amend the motion so that the rules be suspended and the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes as first entitled to the floor the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. HANCOCK.]

HERMAN HULMAN.

Mr. HANCOCK. I am directed by the Committee of Ways and Means, to which was referred the bill (H. R. No. 256) for the relief of Herman Hulman, of Terre Haute, Indiana, to report the same back with an amendment filling the blank in the bill, and to recommend that as amended the bill do now pass. I will state that this is the unanimous recommendation of the Committee of Ways and Means.

The bill directs the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to allow the amount of the claim filed by Herman Hulman, of Terre Haute, Indiana, for abatements in his office for the sum of $———, as the abatements asked for by him are right and proper, and he should not be required to pay that amount to the Government.

The amendment reported from the committee was to fill the blank with the sum of $1,809.41.

The question was upon agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The report was read in part, when,

Mr. HOLMAN said: I learn by the report, so far as it has been read, that this bill proposes merely to remedy a mistake of the deputy assessor, and my colleague, [Mr. HUNTER,] representing that district, has assured me that he is familiar with all the facts involved.

Mr. HUNTER. The difficulty all arises out of a mistake of the officer.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am satisfied without further reading of the report. I apprehended that the question involved might be of general application.

Mr. HUNTER. No, sir; it merely arises out of the mistake of the officer.

The amendment reported by the committee was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HANCOCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

A bill (S. No. 293) authorizing the commissioners of the District of Columbia to cancel and annul the condemnation of the ground in square 762 in the city of Washington for a public alley, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. No. 336) to authorize the construction of a ponton-bridge across the Mississippi River from some feasible point in La Crosse County, in the State of Wisconsin, to some feasible point in the State of Minnesota; and

A bill (S. No. 435) to amend section 5546 of the Revised Statutes of the United States providing for the imprisonment and transfer of United States prisoners.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed without amendment:

A bill (H. R. No. 726) changing the name of the steamboat Charles W. Mead.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles with amendments; in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

A bill (H. R. No. 1922) providing for the recording of deeds, mortgages, and other conveyances affecting real estate in the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2951) to provide for the separate entry of express packages contained in one importation.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SCALES. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole to resume the consideration of the special order, the bill transferring the Indian Bureau to the War Department.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to amend that motion so as to provide that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. SCALES. Can that amendment be made while I am on the floor?

The SPEAKER. The question will be first upon the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. SCALES;] if that should fail, the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] will then be voted upon.

Mr. RANDALL. I will say to the gentleman from North Carolina that as the remarks of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COOK] were not completed yesterday I do not wish to tear his speech in half. Therefore, if the gentleman from North Carolina will consent to this compromise, I will agree that the gentleman from Georgia be allowed to finish his speech to-day and that we then proceed with the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill. This is the course dictated by courtesy, and I do not wish to depart from it.

The SPEAKER. As both bills are under consideration in the Committee of the Whole, the Chair would suggest that the gentleman from Georgia might speak in either committee.

Mr. RANDALL. The difficulty is that the legislative appropriation bill is being considered under the five-minute rule.

The SPEAKER. That makes a great difference.

Mr. SCALES. In this matter I am acting as the organ of the committee. I feel that we have done all that we can for the gentleman from Pennsylvania. We have voted for night sessions and we have devoted a great deal of time to the appropriation bills. Now the gentleman cannot advance a step until this bill is acted on. It must be debated and the question decided or we cannot go through with the appropriation bill.

Mr. RANDALL. The motion which I make leads to practical legislation; it reaches its results as it goes step by step, while the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina will perhaps involve ten or fifteen speeches, so that the debate may continue for hours.

Mr. SCALES. The saving of $3,000,000, which I believe the gentleman concedes will be accomplished by the transfer of the Indian Bureau, is, I think, a practical result.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir; I believe the proposition of the committee on this subject to transfer the Indian Bureau will save $3,500,000.

Mr. SCALES. That is a very practical result.

Mr. COX. Well, that is a question which ought to be discussed.

The SPEAKER. The question will be first taken on the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SCALES] that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the bill for the transfer of the Indian Bureau.

Mr. RANDALL. With the understanding that, if that motion be voted down, I will yield sufficient time to enable the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COOK] to complete his speech. If the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina is not voted down, then the legislative appropriation bill must go over.

Mr. SCALES. The sense of the House on this question might be tested after the gentleman from Georgia has finished his remarks.

Mr. RANDALL. We might as well test the question now as then.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. SCALES, there were—ayes 83, noes 86.

Mr. SCALES. I call for tellers.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the yeas and nays. We may as well settle the matter at once.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to a single point which, when stated, he will I think recognize as worthy of consideration. If we go on with the legislative appropriation bill, we come pretty soon to a clause providing for the transfer of the Indian Bureau.

Mr. RANDALL. We do not do any such thing.

Mr. GARFIELD. Well, the courtesy and gentleness and urbanity of my friend from Pennsylvania are such that it is hardly necessary for me to reply to his remark.

Mr. RANDALL. I did not mean any discourtesy at all.

Mr. GARFIELD. Do we not in the legislative bill come to this question of the transfer of the Indian Bureau; and when we reach it, must it not be decided under the five-minute rule?

Mr. RANDALL. That is the fourth section of the bill; and it is not probable we shall reach that to-day.

Mr. GARFIELD. But I speak of the general policy of going on with that without hearing the Indian Committee. It seems to me we ought to have a pretty full debate on that question—such a discussion as we cannot have under the five-minute rule. This is the reason I think we ought to allow the Indian Committee to have their measure discussed.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 134, nays 94, not voting 62; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Ainsworth, Ashe, George A. Bagley, Ballou, Banks, Banning, Blackburn, Blaine, Blair, Bliss, Boone, Bradford, Bradley, Bright, William R. Brown, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. Burchard, Cabell, John H. Cald-

Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walls, G. Wiley Wells, Whitthorne, James D. Williams, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., and Fernando Wood—62.

So Mr. SCALES's motion was agreed to.

During the vote,

Mr. JAMES B. REILLY stated that he was paired with his colleague, Mr. WOOD, and not knowing how he would vote if present, he would refrain from voting on this question himself.

Mr. RUSK moved by unanimous consent that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

TRANSFER OF INDIAN BUREAU.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair) for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2677) to provide for the transfer of the Office of Indian Affairs from the Interior to the War Department.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COOK] is entitled to the floor to conclude his speech.

Mr. COOK. Mr. Chairman, when the House adjourned yesterday evening I was reading the evidence of the Indians in behalf of themselves and against the recklessness and faithlessness of the agents employed by the Government. I will read this morning from a statement of one or two others as furnished to the commissioners who went among them.

I will read from the seventh annual report of the Indian commissioners for the year 1875.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] held that this was a peace commission, having the greatest influence in christianizing and civilizing the Indians. The only conclusion to be drawn from all this testimony of the Indians themselves is directly to the contrary. Every Indian heard from, so far as I know—the universal testimony of chiefs and individual members of Indian tribes—is that they have been swindled; that they have been defrauded in the most shameful and outrageous manner. They say that the clothing which they get is of the most inferior and worthless character; that the money appropriated for them, specifying the years and the amounts, they have never seen. Now it must be perfectly manifest these Indians believing and entertaining this view of these men who have control of them as Indian agents never can christianize them. No man can be civilized and christianized by men he regards as thieves and plunderers.

I am glad to see present to-day the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. YOUNG,] who wished to hear what the Indians had to say for themselves.

I propose to read now from the testimony of Ignatius Hole-in-the-Day. This communication is from White Earth reservation, Chippewa tribe of Indians, and is addressed to "the honorable Congress of the United States of America," and forwarded by Charles Ewing, Commissioner of Indian Affairs:

To the honorable Congress of the United States of America:

We, the undersigned, chiefs of the Chippewa Indians, at White Earth reservation, would respectfully represent to your honorable body that we are all greatly dissatisfied with the course pursued by the present agent of the White Earth reservation, and desire the management of this agency transferred to the Roman Catholic church.

We make the request at the earnest entreaties of our respective bands, who unite with us in this petition.

The reasons upon which our request is based are as follows:

First. Our present agent has uniformly used the most unjust discrimination in distributing our annuities and supplies, and has failed to pay over to us large sums of money that are rightfully our due.

Second. We have never been consulted by him as to the manner in which the money left in his hands to be expended for our benefit should be laid out, and our rights have been violated in thus debarring us from having any voice in such matters.

Third. Our people are suffering most severely and are in great danger of losing their lives by freezing, as the clothing which should have been distributed among them has not been issued only in exceptional cases.

Fourth. We have in many instances performed labor for the agency for which we were to have been paid in supplies, and the supplies were issued; but instead of their being considered by the agent as payment for labor, they stand charged to each individual Indian who drew them, as the books of the agent will show to-day.

Fifth. We are all of the Catholic faith and have greater confidence in that denomination than any other, and believe that our rights will be more respected and our interests better served by their management than they would under the management of any other sect or denomination.

We would further show to your honorable body that we have been heretofore greatly imposed upon in the matter of papers purporting to be an expression of our feelings, such papers having fictitious signatures attached thereto; but in this instance our wishes are correctly expressed and our signatures are genuine and true, and we perfectly understand what we are doing.

This, sir, is an outrage. The accusation is made against the Indian agents and the whole Bureau, of excluding them from all care and protection, and especially of withdrawing them from their own religious teachers and placing them under teachers of an entirely different faith.

He says again:

We do not see why they should steal from us and use us as they have heretofore daily done. They are surely not so instructed to do by God's Holy Book, hence our decision is to leave them and flock to the true followers of Christ, who are the Catholics, as they have never been known to steal anything. We humbly beseech our Great Father to remove our officials and replace them by true Roman Catholics.

So outrageous was the conduct of these agents among them professing the Protestant faith that they actually drove them to the care and custody of the Catholic priests and the Catholic Church.

They say again:

On the 1st of July, 1874, there was appropriated $28,000 for the benefit of my people here on our reserve, but instead of our getting any assistance from this money, we are told that he, the agent, has only received $3,000 of this money, and that he has already spent all this; but still we cannot see in what way, for we are to-day poorer and more pitiful than we have ever been, being compelled to be self-supporting without least means of implements.

That, sir, is the accusation in that petition. Here is the complaint of another Indian chief, who has a name I will not undertake to pronounce for fear of the lockjaw. It is in this same Commissioner's report. This is what he says of their agent:

He injured our people a great deal, because he keeps back from us what you send us. This was surely not your intention when you sent him here. One hundred and twenty Indians did not get their pay last fall. But we saw him; he had their money in his pocket. Therefore we pray you most earnestly to take this agent away.

Now, here is what another band of Indians say:

1. That their money is taken from them by the agent, who is countenanced in this by Bishop Whipple and Preacher Johnson.

I do not know what preachers these are, or to what churches they belong.

2. That the above named are working hard and secretly to sell the pine lands of the Indians against their will.

3. That the Pembina Indians are moving on their reserve without having yet paid any part of what they had agreed to pay.

4. That the agent is building a new saw-mill, and that his intention is to use it to saw their pine-logs and sell them for his own profit.

5. That if they do any work they are not paid in money, but only in old clothes from Bishop Whipple's hospital.

6. That they have to pay the agent for everything they get from him, i. e., clothes, calico, &c., though the treaty provides that many things should be given them and not sold.

7. That there are Indians on the reservation who have not received the payment of their annuities for two years.

8. That many Indians, even chiefs, are still living in wigwams of birch-bark, because the agent refuses either to build them houses or to give or lend them oxen to enable them to haul logs and lumber to build the houses themselves.

Now, sir, I will read what Little Bear said. This is in the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for 1875:

From this on we want our Great Father to help us; give us a great deal more than we get now. What we get does not go around. After this, when our Great Father sends us annuity goods, we would like to get a list of them, so that one of our own men can look over it. Tell this to the Great Father. When you help me to all that I will think over what you ask me.

They do not want to trust these agents. They want a list of the goods, and they want one of their own race and their own blood to examine that list and see that they get the goods.

Now, here is what Fast Bear says. No man, I do not care who he is, could have put more in fewer words than this Indian when he spoke of the treatment the Indians were receiving.

The beef-cattle that the Great Father has issued to me, no doubt each steer has been weighed twice and called two, and some of them have been put away somewhere else, and I wish the Great Father would track them up.

I say the expression of the manner in which they have been swindled, and of their contempt for these men who dispose of their goods and annuities for them, could not have been put in more forcible or stronger language by any gentleman upon this floor.

Then Flying Bird says:

From this treaty on, every time the Government delivers an annuity to our agents, we shall choose a half-breed who lives among us. The chiefs must take this list and give it to that man, for we well know that there are many rats between here and the Great Father's door. But if our Great Father only knew he would go on and drown them out, and find many rat-heads all the way.

There is another Indian stating in his homely phraseology, but in a forcible, logical manner, that the rats consume their money, and their clothing, and their provisions between the Great Father and the Indian agent. And they are the men to whom my friend from New York [Mr. COX] would commit these people.

If gentlemen will look into the present appropriation bill, amounting to $5,778,000, they will see a large amount asked to be appropriated for farmer's tools and farming utensils, and for a number of laborers to work for these Indians, and especially for the Sioux Indians. They take great credit for what has been done among these Indians; but the productions and the stock which have been raised among the Indians belong to the tribes that were civilized in 1849, when this Bureau was taken from the War Department. I have got the evidence here, which I will read, from men familiar with the history of Indian affairs, that will show there is not a civilized tribe of Indians to-day that were not civilized in 1849. We are asked now to appropriate perhaps $150,000, or $300,000, or $400,000 to aid in the development of agriculture among these people. I want to show from the reports of this commission and the commissioners who visited this Territory what they think of it:

From all the evidence derived from agents, employés, and the Indians themselves, the commission is of opinion that the annual value of all the products secured by a cultivation of the soil by the Indians at the several agencies would not exceed $5,000 per annum for the last six years. In this estimate we do not include the products of the Santees or the Yanktons, neither of which tribes resides on the Sioux reservation. And the commission is of opinion that, if the present policy is continued—the results of the next six years will not differ materially from those of the last. Indeed, the commission very much doubts whether enough has been raised in the aggregate to re-imburse the annual appropriations made for the salaries and expenses of the farmers employed by the Government at the various agencies.

That is to appropriate money and hire laborers for them—

You appropriate thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars for farms, and here the commission, at the end of six years, say they have not raised enough to pay their expenses. And the testimony of General Sherman, General Ord, General Terry, General Sheridan, and of every man familiar with the country, and of the commission that went there is that the 2,500,000 acres of this reservation for the Sioux tribes is wholly and utterly unfit for any agricultural purposes. And yet we are asked to teach these people the science of agriculture. We are invoked to appropriate money for that purpose, and to send them laborers, common laborers. And I shall show you before I get through the number and what it costs to send them. And yet the commission say that the land where they have been located is wholly and utterly unfit for agricultural purposes. That shows in this matter the grossest and most woful and most infamous mistake or fraud, and the only reason ever assigned for it by any witness before the committee was by General Sheridan, who stated that no human being upon the face of the earth was benefited by the removal of these Indians from the Missouri River to the Red Cloud and Spotted Tail agencies except the contractors. They are the men who profit by it.

The commission say:

There are at Red Cloud and Spotted Tail at least twenty thousand Indians now subsisted and cared for by the United States. Our observation leads us to the conclusion that the character of this region is such that farming operations are impracticable, even when conducted by those familiar with the best methods. Small tracts could be made productive by means of expensive irrigation, but the volume of water is not sufficient to irrigate on an extensive scale, even if the country were suitable.

These gentlemen of the commission say further:

For the reasons just stated, and for others equally obvious to any who will visit their country, but not within our province to discuss, no progress whatever has been made toward civilization or self-support at either of these agencies, or among the tribes receiving their rations and annuities at these agencies, during the last six years, unless we should call progress that dependence which makes the Indian rely upon the Government rather than the chase, or labor for the necessaries of life. During these six years, whatever of food, clothing, or shelter they have had has been provided by appropriations from the national Treasury, and the Indians have done absolutely nothing but eat, drink, smoke, and sleep, except indulging each day in the healthful exercise of horseback riding, (each Indian having at least one pony,) and at intervals, for diversion, engage in a hunt to the north or south.

That is the condition of our wards. That is the location in which they have been placed by our agents. That is the progress they have made at the end of six years in civilization. "They eat, drink, sleep, and take horseback exercise, while the white men that we employ to labor for them are attempting to cultivate the waste, arid, and worthless soil, which is wholly unproductive." Is that the way in which the people of the country expect, when they pay taxes to support these people, that they are to be appropriated? Is that the way the money is to be expended? Is it common honesty?

If we are bound by the testimony of our own commission, of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, of the Indians themselves, and by the unbroken chain of evidence of every Army officer who has ever been among these people, I say we ought to break up the system.

I come now to reply to so much of the speech of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] as went to show that troops are not needed among these Indians; that they are not wanted either by the Indians or by the agents. General Sheridan, in his testimony before the committee, said that he had applications from four Indian agents themselves to establish as many military posts in order to protect those Indian agents.

Who is the better able to judge whether the military are needed at these agencies, the Indian agents themselves or the gentleman from New York? Who best understands what power will control these Indians, the gentleman from New York, drawing his morals and opinions of Indian policy from the morals of Tammany Hall, or the men stationed upon the frontier, whose sworn duty it is to protect, not only these Indians, but the white settlers? Here is what the Commissioner himself says in reference to the influence of troops upon these Indians, and I ask the attention to it of gentlemen who are opposed to the presence of troops among the Indians:

The fact of the presence of troops within the Territory has, however, exercised a moral effect of which agents have availed themselves in keeping order without calling for actual interference by the soldiers; and there is little doubt that Sitting Bull and his followers among the northern Sioux have been restrained from overt acts by the fact of military posts being stationed on the Upper Missouri.

Now I will read what the agent of the Flathead agency in Montana Territory says:

Under date of August 6 last the governor of Montana complained that certain Flatheads were roaming over the settlements without escort, causing fright and committing depredations. The whole correspondence on the subject was submitted to the Department for instructions, under date of August 16. I believe the establishment of a military post in the vicinity of this reservation to be an urgent necessity. An outbreak on the part of the strange Indians coming over the mountains annually has long been feared by the citizens; and, although the Indians belonging to my agency are considered peaceable, it is not known at what time they may enter into a combination with the non-treaty Nez Percés, Spokanes, &c., and cause serious disturbance, as has been the case with other equally peaceable tribes. But, setting aside all danger of hostility, I still believe a company of soldiers to be a necessity, to keep roving bands of Indians from leaving their reservations, and thus exercising a salutary influence toward their civilization. An Indian will naturally work rather than starve, and, confined within the limits of his proper country, he would have to turn his attention to some industrial pursuit.

I could read other views of Indian agents establishing the same facts, but I do not care to consume the time of the House now in doing so. I will call the attention of the House, however, to a few statistics connected with these Indians. Here is the statement of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in reference to the depredations among these Indians: The number of Indians killed during the year 1875 are: by members of the same tribes, 30; by hostile Indians, 27; by United States troops, 30; and by citizens 23—making a total of 110—of whom 57 were killed by Indians. The number of white persons killed by the Indians was 54 males and 27 females. Where the various Indian tribes are at peace with the United States the military have been called upon to establish military posts and to send troops for the purpose of protecting these tribes, not against the soldiers, not to protect the whites against Indians, but to protect the Indians from the larger and superior tribes who have been their traditional enemies for centuries. I will refer gentlemen to the evidence taken of the names of tribe after tribe who have to be protected as white citizens do against the hostilities of the Indians.

I will now read from the evidence of a number of officers of the Army as to the propriety of transferring the Indian Bureau to the War Department, both as a matter of justice to the Government and of humanity to the Indians. That testimony will confirm in every particular every charge made against the Indian agents as to their thieving. General De Trobriand says, in reference to the transfer:

I have no doubt that such a measure would be both eminently proper and beneficial. The present Bureau of Indian Affairs is a Pandora's box, whence endless evils issued and are still issuing. The greater part by far of our difficulties with Indians arise from the shameless way in which they are cheated out of the most of the annuities of all kinds which they are supposed to receive from the Government, and for which the people pay in full. It would be a great error to believe that because they do not know how to read and write those Indians are unable to keep good accounts and to figure exactly to what extent they are cheated. I have heard Indian chiefs who could tell me how many sacks of flour, how many flannel shirts, how many blankets, how many knives, &c., had been taken away from the agency where they had been stored for them; on what nights these goods had been loaded on wagons, the number of which they stated; to what distant posts the stolen articles had been sent, there to be sold in retail by traders to some other tribes. Many times they asked me why I could not take control of the distribution of their goods among them, unable to understand how their Great Father in Washington, who kept so many warriors, could not secure them their rights and save them from being plundered year after year by those very people who were sent especially for their aid and protection. The general corruption which prevails in Indian affairs is a matter of public notoriety, and has been, in some cases, demonstrated by irrefutable evidence.

The above is therefore stated, not to criminate anybody in particular, but only to show that I speak of my personal knowledge, not from hearsay. As all efforts have been unvailing to remedy those evils with the present organization of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, it has become necessary to try some different system to realize the reforms so much needed, and it does not appear that there is any other which could attain that end but the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department. The administration of Indian affairs could not be trusted to better hands. The officers of the Army do not desire it. They understand well that such a transfer will bring to those who will be concerned in it much more trouble and labor than credit or compensation. But their devotion and their patriotism would make them accept their new responsibilities and perform these new duties in the same spirit and with the same efficiency which have maintained so high the integrity and the honor of the United States Army.

Colonel Van Vliet says:

In reference to transferring the Indian Bureau to the War Department, I would beg to state that I am now and have been for years strongly in favor of such transfer. The advantages are so obvious that it is hardly necessary to give any reasons for it. I have served among the Indians in Florida and on the plains for many years, and have given considerable attention to the government of the Indians, and it is my firm belief that they would be governed more efficiently and economically by the Army than they are at present. Indians are governed to a great extent through their fears, and an officer with two or three troops of cavalry at his back is a great deal more respected than is an agent with no power. We have in the Army all the machinery at hand to take care of the Indians without additional cost. The Commissary and Quartermaster's Departments could furnish them with all their supplies without any increase in their force. By placing the Indians in charge of the War Department all chance of a conflict of authority between two co-ordinate Departments will be avoided, and the Indian will more readily understand what is required of him. I was with General Harney in his Sioux expedition in 1856, and while we were fighting the Indians on the Platte River the Indian agents were issuing arms and ammunition to them on the Arkansas.

Captain Corbin, who is stationed among the Indians, says:

Of course there are some good Indian agents, and some of them have had a great deal of influence with the Indians; but as a general thing, when any serious question has come up among the Indians where I have been stationed, when the agents have told them the wishes of the "Father," (as we call the President on the frontier,) they invariably go and ask an Army officer whether it is true or not, and I think if you will bring the agents here they will tell you the same thing. The Indian's idea of the Army officer is that he will tell the truth and deal with him honestly; that if he is going to hang him he will tell him so; and, if he is going to provide him a home, he will tell him the truth about it; while, on the other hand, they look on the agent as a sort of speculator. I know that was the case with the Navajoes and the Arapahoes. I believe the Navajoes are about the largest tribe we have now. We moved them from the Fort Sumner reservation a number of years ago farther west, and there was a number of agents employed there, and they did some good, but in any case of trouble the Indians will always come to an officer of the Army.

Here is what General Jeff. C. Davis says; he has a C. in his name, and that gives him credit in this House:

The Indian Bureau has of recent years become a synonym for rascality and corruption. I do not think, however, the officers of the Army, as a general thing, covet the responsibility this charge would place upon them, but they can and will, with proper encouragement, perform the task with more efficiency, honesty, and with less hypocritical cant about christianizing and civilizing the Indians, than is now done. The military can teach the Indians how to lay down the rifle and take up agricultural implements and use them; this done, and our honest and sincere Christian workers will see to it that civilization and christianization follow right along as the savage is prepared for these blessings.

General Sykes testifies as follows:

It seems superfluous to repeat that the Indian respects only the power of hunger and the power of the sword; and it is notorious, outside of the "Indian ring," that the word of an officer of the Army will be trusted by an Indian beyond that of any other white man. It arises from two causes: the one, that an officer rarely makes a promise to them that he cannot perform; the other, that he represents the force, which, to an Indian, appeals more than any other to the instincts of his own existence. I have had considerable experience with a large tribe of Indians on a military reservation in New Mexico, (Navajoes,) and had very little trouble with them. I carried out the promises of the Government in their behalf, and rarely called upon them to do an act of justice which they were not prompt to recognize and enforce. Most of our trouble with the Indians would cease were their annuities honestly distributed, and treaties with them faithfully carried out. Everybody knows this who know anything on the subject.

I will close my extracts from the testimony of the Army officers by referring to what was said by General Sanborn. He says:

There is really no progress made, that is perceptible, with the uneducated or wild Indians, under this system. The civilized tribes of to-day were civilized Indians in 1849, when the transfer was made from the War Department to the Interior Department, and there is scarcely a tribe that our civilization has come in contact with during the twenty-seven years that the Interior Department has administered Indian affairs that has not as a tribe been annihilated and disappeared. Civilization under that system, of an Indian tribe as a tribe, I consider impossible. Nearly all the tribes on the Pacific coast have disappeared. The Modocs have disappeared within the last two or three years under that system. There is a loose, careless management of the Interior Department which is necessitated from a lack of force, unless the military is near at hand; and that encourages these savages to outbreaks and disregard of the authority of the Government, which, in the end, must be repressed by an absolute military campaign, and by that time the Indians have become so encouraged that they fight with confidence and with all the zeal of savages, and of course, as a rule, they are nearly annihilated by the superior power of the Government, which, of course, ultimately must succeed in all cases.

I have not visited the Sioux Indians of the plains since we closed our treaty with them in 1868; but I am informed by General Terry, whose headquarters are at Saint Paul, and who was on the commission that visited them this year, that during the eight years that have elapsed since that treaty there has been no perceptible progress in their disposition to try to help to support themselves, or to obey the requirements or follow out the purposes of the Government, but that, if anything, they are more savage and barbarous now than they were then, although the Government has expended, under the provisions of that treaty, from a million and a half to two millions annually, and which we fully expected at the time would, in five years, carry them so far along that they would become at least successful herders, and be able to raise at least enough meat to support themselves, in a good grazing country like that south of the Arkansas, which we looked forward to as the permanent home of the Indians, regarding that as a temporary arrangement; so that I am, and have been, since giving a thorough examination to the whole question, hopeless of our being able to civilize any of these large Indian tribes, the Sioux or the Apaches of Arizona, under the present system. As a nation, their annihilation is as inevitable as doom under the present system; while I have full belief that if the Army had control so that the presence of power would be always felt by the Indians, and the consequent obedience to the purposes and plans of the Government secured, they would become a civilized people, productive as herders, and we shall always need a large population of that kind on the plains—for they are suitable, generally speaking, for no other purpose, and will subserve no other great end in the economy of this Government—a large portion of that country.

In regard to the economy of the service, I believe there would be a large saving in the procuring and issuing of supplies. I think that in the expenditure of six or eight million dollars for supplies there would be a saving of from a million to a million and a half in the cost of transportation. I think that active campaigns in the field, which now occur every two or three years, would be entirely avoided. I have no doubt but that the entire expenses of these campaigns would be avoided. If the Army had full control the Indians never would be encouraged to resist the power and authority of the Government to such an extent as to take up arms against our people at all, and in that view comes the saving. On an average, it would amount to from six to ten millions a year. I am confident that from 1860 to 1870 the expenses of the military establishment were increased annually, on account of our Indian difficulties, to the amount of ten millions on an average, or one hundred millions during the decade. This estimate includes the campaign in Minnesota, the campaign in New Mexico against the Navajoes, and the campaign on the Arkansas, closed out by myself in 1865, in doing which I had under my command seven thousand mounted men and one or two regiments of infantry; and they were supported at an expense that was really alarming, corn at many of those posts being purchased, at the time I arrived there and took command, at $8 a bushel, an expense so great that I concluded it was better to procure a remount every ninety days than to try to keep horses alive by purchasing forage at those rates. I can but consider it, after the study I have given it, as one of the most perfectly one-sided questions connected with the public service, as to where that Bureau should be.

* * * * * * *

Q. Do the agents ever turn over beeves on the foot to the Indians so that they can drive them off?

A. Frequently; at least I think so. I have looked at this question very closely and have given it a great deal of study, and my impression is that the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department, by dispensing with civilians whose duties can be performed just as well by officers of the Army—my impression is that the saving in that alone will be $1,500,000. My impression is (and I think I have seen enough of these matters in the last fifteen years to enable me to come to a correct conclusion) that it will save in supplies furnished that never reach the Indians at all fully $500,000; that makes two millions. It will save in the administration of the Army directly, by enabling them to bring the Indians down to navigable highways where supplies can be distributed without the monstrously expensive transportation that is now necessary, fully $3,000,000, making $5,000,000. Take, for instance, the Red Cloud and Spotted Tail agencies, the two largest agencies on the continent, I believe; it costs as much to haul the flour from the point where it is landed on the Missouri to those agencies as it costs to purchase the flour. The distance of those agencies from the river is about three hundred miles, and they are in a poor country, whereas the country on the river is pretty good. In addition to that, our Indian wars for the last twenty years have cost $120,000,000, over $6,000,000 a year, and we are just as sure to be afflicted again with that enormous expenditure as we have been in the past if we continue the present system. Therefore you may add $6,000,000 to the $5,000,000, which will make a saving annually of $11,000,000 by turning the Indians over to the War Department.

I think that our Indian wars have been the direct results of the miserable policy that has prevailed under the civil administration of Indian affairs. Now we have the officers already paid for doing all the duties that are discharged at present by the agents. The surgeon at the post can prescribe for the Indians, and the labor that is to be paid for now can just as well be performed by the soldiers who will be called in at the military posts to aid the quartermaster and the commissary in making their issues. Of course you have to have a head farmer, a head blacksmith, a head carpenter, and where there is a mill, a miller, but all the balance of the labor can be done just as well by the Indians, provided you have force enough at the posts to enable the agent to compel obedience to his orders.

The gentleman from New York, whom I am endeavoring in a feeble way to follow, attributed all the Indian wars to the Army—to the soldiers. I want to show him how badly mistaken General Sheridan, and General Sherman, and General Ord, and General Marcy, and a number of other generals are in their recollection and knowledge of the cause of these Indian wars. General Ord testifies that his father was an Indian agent for a number of years, and nearly all the time under the War Department. He says:

It ought to be entirely transferred, and, as far as practicable, under the control of permanent officers of the Army. It was formerly under the control of the War Department, and officers were sometimes assigned to temporary duty in the Indian Bureau as ex officio agents. My father was an Indian agent for fifteen or sixteen years; under the War Department nearly all the time.

He then refers to the two agencies, the Red Cloud agency and the Spotted Tail agency. He says:

I came on here to Washington—

He had been applied to by an Indian agent to furnish more troops, not that they were needed by the Army or by the Indians, but the agent applied for them. He says:

I came on here to Washington and got an appropriation to build up the post; and I had some conference with the Indian Committee, in order to satisfy them that the Indians could not be taken care of without the military. The agent had come to me and applied for a guard, and insisted upon it, saying that his agents had been murdered, and that he could not get anybody to live with the Indians unless they had the military right alongside of them.

Here is what he says about the Modoc war; and this will answer a part of the report of the minority, which charges the responsibility for that war somewhere else. He says:

I have some little knowledge of the Modoc war, Florida wars, Rogue River war, and other wars. I have been in some half-dozen of them. They nearly all originated from mismanagement of the Indians. I believe the Modoc war originated because certain parties wanted to get possession of the Indian lands, and wanted to move the Indians down to where the Klamaths were. The Klamaths were a large tribe on the lower river, and outnumbered the Modocs probably twenty to one.

He goes on to say that if the agent had been a military man he would have known that it would not do to undertake to move those Indians with only a handful of men:

The Modocs did not want to go to the Klamaths, because the Klamaths, being a very large and overbearing tribe, would not let them have any show in the distribution of supplies. The Indians made some representations in regard to it, but they all seemed to be ignored by the Indian Department. The Department seemed to take it for granted that all that was needed to force them to go was a military guard. The handful of men were attacked and driven back. The agent asked for a little larger force, which was still insufficient, and found difficulty—the Modocs taking the war-path, as they say. Whereas the difficulty could have been avoided if there had been a military man in control, and he would probably have had a sufficient military force immediately at hand.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SEELYE obtained the floor.

Mr. COOK. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SEELYE] to yield to me five minutes.

Mr. SEELYE. I will yield the gentleman that much of my time if he so desires.

Mr. COOK. I thank the gentleman; and I do so the more cordially, because I want to reply to a part of the minority report. That report states that General Sherman, General Harney, General Terry, General Augur, and a number of others have expressed their opinion against this transfer. But whatever they may have reported in 1868 has long since been taken back by those men. The report says further that while this question has frequently been before Congress, that body has always refused to pass upon it. Now, in 1868 this House passed an act by a large majority, including the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE,] the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS,] the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] and a number of other distinguished gentlemen upon this floor.

I desire especially to ask attention to one passage of this report. I had hoped that there might be presented here in this House some measure in the discussion of which the southern people would not be slandered, traduced, or vilified. But in this minority report I find to my utter astonishment this language, in reference to placing the military over the Indians:

The people of our Southern States, since the late civil war, have made grievous complaints of military interference. Whatever reasons and arguments against military government in the South are valid, apply with equal force to the military government of Indians.

Great God, have we lived to this day to find men so far forgetting their obligation to all that is proper and right—to say nothing of what is just and generous—that eight million of people in the Southern States are to be compared with these savages! Those southern people have fought under that flag from the time of the Revolution; they have watered every battle-field with their blood; they have sent to these Halls some of the distinguished men, the peers of any men whom this country has ever produced. They have organized State governments and framed constitutions and laws which will not suffer by contrast with the work of the men from any other section. But now, because our governments were overthrown, our governors removed, our State Legislatures dissolved in time of peace, and the military sent to prey upon us; and because we have felt this to be an outrage, we are to be compared with the savage men of the forest, 170,000 of whom, as we are informed, are living to-day undressed, unclad, without any form of government, without any respect for law, destitute of every instinct of civilization and every sentiment of Christianity. Because we have felt the grievous wrongs inflicted upon us, the deep outrage upon everything sacred by human or divine law, we are to be compared with the savage of the forest!

I had hoped that the time had come when our feelings and our sensibilities would receive some respect, would command the attention at least of gentlemen on this floor. I had hardly supposed that any man from the walks of civil life whose feelings had not been imbittered by party strife would give assent to such an insult, such an outrage, such an indignity upon 8,000,000 of his fellow-citizens.

I will not trust myself, sir, to speak of this as I feel, and justly feel. If the gentleman can conscientiously make upon us, upon our character and the character of our people this accusation, comparing us deliberately to the savage tribes of the West, if he can reconcile it to his sense of justice, to his sense of propriety, and to his own feelings of right, let him do it.

Mr. SEELYE. Mr. Chairman, I doubt if any topic comes before the present Congress in all respects more important and in some respects more difficult than this. The magnitude of the Indian question is much larger than one who has not given it a special study is likely to suppose. How to adopt a system which shall wisely care for 300,000 Indians, some of whom are citizens, some of whom are wards, some of whom are friends and some foes of the nation, differing among each other as they differ from us in their languages, and thoughts, and ways, and representing nearly every grade of civilized and savage life, whose original rights to a large portion of our national domain we have recognized by purchases and by treaties which have pledged the faith of the nation for their protection and support; with whom we certainly desire to live in peace, but with many of whom we are in constant danger of war—how, I say, to arrange a method for the treatment of these people which shall wisely maintain our rights and at the same time righteously fulfill our obligations, is a problem upon which he who has thought the most will perhaps speak the least. One point is, however, quite clear and will receive the assent of every one. These Indians have not only cost us a great deal in the past, but they are certain to cost us a great deal more for some time to come. This is true whatever treatment of them be pursued. The game upon which the wild tribes have subsisted is disappearing much more rapidly than the wild tribes themselves, and it is a literal fact that without the interference of our Government, starvation must stare these Indians in the face. But when starvation faces a wild Indian, who does not know how to work and who would not work if he did know how, we all know the exact alternative before him. He will murder and plunder white settlements rather than starve. He has always done it, and, little as we like the fact, all the power of this Government cannot stop him in like circumstances from doing it again. If we seek to guard against his starvation by feeding him, the cost is vast, and, if we seek to stop his raids by fighting him, the cost is vastly more. In either case our relations to the Indian involve a prodigious expense to us, which there is no way to avoid, whatever course we take.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is not a pleasant fact, and no member of this House can be willing to think of it as a permanent one. However inevitable for the present or the immediate future, we would all like to find some plan of ultimate relief. But this relief can, of course, only come through some change in the Indians themselves. Any change on our part, unless it be our decadence and consequent withdrawal from all contact with the Indian, leaving him to roam again untrammeled over his wilds, would only increase the difficulty. In fact, the growing burden comes from our increasing growth.

But what sort of a change in the Indian would secure for us relief? To this inquiry high military authority, echoed, also, by some high in civil life, has answered sternly that extermination of the red man is the only remedy against him which the whites possess. "The only good Indian is a dead Indian." But, Mr. Chairman, in this presence, surrounded by the Representatives of the American people, I should not expect to be pardoned, if attempting to discuss this remedy. We are not ourselves savages; we represent a humane and Christian people, and this House might properly deem itself insulted if it were supposed that arguments against attempting the extermination of the Indian were needed here. I pass this policy, therefore, without a word.

But there is here only one alternative. Unless we are satisfied to let the Indians remain as they are—some of them, indeed, educated, industrious, and Christian, but others ignorant, poor, wild, lawless, needing our constraint and dependent on our support—unless we are content to bear continually the burdens which the Indians now lay upon us, burdens which, if permanent, would be as disastrous to them as they would be oppressive to us, we must maintain a treatment of these people which shall seek to bring them all to a knowledge of the rights, and a fulfillment of the duties of Christian civilization. This surely is the only aim worthy of us and well for them.

Need I stop to prove the possibility of this? The history of the world for the last eighteen centuries proves it. The actual results of attempts thus far made to christianize and civilize these Indians prove it. The wildest and most savage races have been changed from barbarism to a civilized life. The wildest and most savage of these Indians themselves have been transformed into peaceable, and law-abiding, and enlightened men. That which has been done can be done. But how? "Civilization," says Niebuhr, "is never indigenous to any people." No savage ever civilized himself; no barbarous tribe ever rose by its own efforts to an enlightened life. The lamp which lights one people in their advancement, has always been lighted by a lamp behind it. And, in every instance thus far, civilizing movements have had their impulse in civil means. The history of the world has yet to show the first instance where civilization has ever been conveyed to any people, save indirectly, by an army or by military power. Armies have often opened the way for civilization; wars have broken down the doors which kept civilization out, through which civilizing steps have subsequently entered; but war itself does not civilize. Armies alone have never improved the world. The distinguished soldier now General of our Army, among his many terse and true sayings, never crowded more truth into fewer words than when he said at Atlanta, "War is barbarism, and you cannot refine it." War is barbarism, and you cannot, therefore, make military means, in any sense save indirectly, a ministry of civilization.

But if any one supposes that in the present instance we can make a new experiment with results different from all thus far known, I simply wish to call his notice to the actual influence of our Army on the improvement of the Indian. And unhappily—I wish it were otherwise, and that facts would set aside this argument of mine—unhappily this influence does not tend to his improvement. On the contrary, the testimony is not only positive, but well-nigh universal, that in respect of the lowest vices and the most loathsome diseases the Indian is made worse thereby. Military officers, high and low, soldiers of the Army, traders and travelers and explorers, Indian agents, Indian inspectors, and Indian commissioners, missionaries, and teachers, have testified that the presence of a military post among the Indians is always a source of unqualified and awful demoralization. Are we dreaming, therefore, when we seem to hear it gravely proposed to employ the military arm to lead these people unto virtue? Is this the agency by which we shall seek to christianize and civilize them? And if you say that we will separate the military post from the Indian and suffer no contact of the two, how are you going to do this, if you have nothing but the military to do it with? And if you could do it, what need would there then be of the military management? The gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. SCALES,] chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, for whose judgment as well as character I have learned to hold a high respect, said a few days since, in discussing this matter, though arguing for the transfer of the Indian management from the Interior to the War Department:

Now, sir, I would not be understood as underestimating the value and importance of the services rendered by these different religious bodies in the efforts of the Government to civilize the savage races. They must have schools, they must have teachers and preachers, and they must be taught the Christian religion; and to have this efficiently and faithfully done we must in a great degree rely upon the noble and self-sacrificing men and women who, taking their lives in their hands, with no reward or hope of reward here, go out as missionaries of the Gospel among the Indians. But I would give all the largest liberty; I would open wide every door of access into that country and shut it to none. I would have the Government give its countenance and protection to all, and leave the results to their own faithfulness and energy, to the truth, and to God.

The gentleman makes no claim, it will be noticed, that the Army itself will have any tendency to civilize the Indians. Such a claim is made by no one. If civilizing agencies come in, they must be brought from civil life. This is a notable admission, and ought to be fatal to the bill before us. But will the gentleman let me push an inquiry just here? What sort of success does he judge these "teachers and preachers" would have upon the Indian when confronted by the influences of the military post having the teachers and preachers and Indians also in charge? Granted that the Gospel is able to subdue all vices and to change the demoralizing tendencies of even an Army post by changing the character of the men in the Army, but I want to know if this would not be the first work which, under the system proposed by this bill, these "missionaries of the Gospel among the Indians" would have to undertake? Could there be any rational hope of success until this were done? I do not suppose that our Army officers are any worse or any better than other educated men, but the Army itself, the soldiers who enlist in time of peace, and who are the men actually manning our military posts to-day, need no description here. They are not the men, to say the least, whom we should choose as colaborers in missionary efforts to convert the Indians. Till their influence is checked or changed either by their own conversion or their removal, you can no more work benignly on the Indian by any kind or quantity of missionary agency than you could neutralize the poison of obscene books by binding up Bibles with them! This any one can see who thinks upon the matter but for a moment, and he who thinks upon it most will wonder most that any one should ever think of civilizing Indians in this way. But the truth is, Mr. Chairman, no one does think this. The whole proposal to transfer the Indian management from the Interior to the War Department is either without thought or it involves a confusion of thought. I say this, meaning no disrespect to those who have advocated this course, but I am compelled to say it, because in all their advocacy, when it comes to the question pure and simple of christianizing and civilizing savage Indians by military power, nobody ventures to claim that it can be done. Nobody has claimed this. I venture to say nobody will. And yet this, as we all admit, is the exact end we ought to seek. This alone can solve the Indian problem; by this alone shall they and we cease to disturb each other. Can any man, therefore, who desires this, and who knows also what the Army does and what the Army is and must be, directly argue in favor of this bill with a clear understanding of what his arguments imply? I would put no construction on such a man's mental processes save what they obviously indicate, when I say that he is not thinking here of the main issue, but on some other matter quite subordinate thereto. Questions of economy, the actions of officials, the details of administration, these, and not the question how to transform ignorant and hostile savages into enlightened friends and fellow-citizens, are uppermost in the thoughts as they are foremost in the speech of the advocates of this bill.

But these are side issues. I admit they are important, and upon each of them I also have somewhat to say. But if the civilization of these Indians be the one thing indispensable, and if this end must come through civil rather than through military means, then is it wise to cast aside this agency through some supposed defect in its machinery, or shall we not rather set our powers at work to perfect the machinery itself? If you are conducting a military campaign, will you give up your army and let your enemy triumph because the army costs too much, or because it may be badly officered, and perhaps also badly manned; or will you seek, by wise economy, and careful oversight, and energetic discipline, to maintain your own resources and to make the army strong for victory? In like manner, to use the words again to which the present General of our Army penned his name in 1868:

> If we intend to have war with the Indians, the Bureau should go to the Secretary of War; if we intend to have peace, it should be in the civil department.—Report on Indian Affairs, 1868, page 47.

It is not easy to put this whole matter into a simpler shape than in these clear words. And when we look at it in this form, there is, there can be, no dispute about the question before us among intelligent men. It is only when we turn aside from this main issue and put something quite subordinate or accidental in its stead that our thoughts become confused, and we find ourselves discussing whether an agency which perhaps has not been properly conducted is thereby an improper agency. But as these subordinate issues are quite prominent in many minds, and as they are in themselves important, though subordinate, I think it well to inquire into the wisdom and efficiency of our present management of Indian affairs as judged by the actual facts. Do these facts warrant any sweeping condemnation of it, or do they justify our continued confidence and support?

In reference to this inquiry, one general fact should always be remembered. We should not forget, though I apprehend we often do, the magnitude and the difficulties of the Indian problem, and the likelihood that any class of men or set of means may sometimes seem to fail in dealing with it. No man, whether in military or civil life, whether educated or unlearned, is beyond the liability to temptation; and in dealing with these remote, and ignorant, and savage people, temptations are not only so numerous and strong, but opportunities of concealment are so manifold and easy, that we ought to expect—it would be almost incredible to find it otherwise—that some men's virtue, put to such a test, will easily yield, and that some who might for a time stoutly resist will at length give way, and also that bright hopes of Indian improvement may be disappointing. Forgetfulness of these facts is always liable to foster careless criticisms of the conduct of Indian affairs, but these criticisms we should notice were just as frequent and just as forcible when the Indians were managed by the War Department as they have been since. From 1832 to 1849 the Indian Bureau was under the direction of the War Department as it is now proposed to make it again, but in these seventeen years the treatment of these people was so cruel and forbidding, that the people of the land almost with one voice demanded a change. Granted that the change has not been all that could be desired; admitting, if you please, the very worst that has been charged against the present system, it may yet safely challenge comparison with that which it displaced. No worse state of things, even at the worst, has existed in the management of the Indian since 1849 than before, and it is childish not to have learned these things, and imbecile if, having learned, we have forgotten them.

But, Mr. Chairman, it cannot be admitted by any one conversant with the facts that the present Indian management is justly liable to the criticisms often urged against it. Since the so-called peace policy was adopted, a policy which crowns the present Administration with unfading luster, not only has there been a manifest increase of economy and efficiency and integrity in the treatment of the Indian, but also a most marked improvement on the part of the Indians themselves. If gentlemen will turn to the report of the board of Indian commissioners for 1875 they will find evidence which, as the commissioners themselves say, "will convince the most skeptical that in the main there has been an honest purchase and delivery of annuity goods and supplies for this year."

Let me briefly state the method now employed by the board for furnishing the Indians with these supplies. Advertisements are issued and bids solicited, which bids must be accompanied with samples as well as prices of the articles required. The samples and prices are then submitted severally to experts, who are also men of high mercantile standing and who, having first made oath that they have no private interest in the pending bids, advise in each case as to the contracts to be made. The samples of the goods contracted for are retained by the commissioners, while the goods are forwarded to the agents, who in return send back samples of the same for comparison here. To guard against all further possibility of wrong, the commissioners during the last season also sent a special agent to procure from the lodges of the Indians samples of the goods actually furnished them, which again have been compared with those sent by the agents and those originally in the commissioners' hands. Under such a system fraud is almost an impossibility, and under it no wonder the chronic complaints of the Indians have ceased.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SCALES] read from the records of 1862 an odd list of annuity goods furnished certain Indians, a list which certainly provokes a smile; but what has a matter of this sort, occurring, moreover, fourteen years ago, to do with the case in hand? The gentleman surely knows that in the last six years there has been adopted in the management of Indian affairs a system of oversight and inspection under which nothing of that kind has occurred or can occur. Everything is not yet perfect. Undoubtedly there are frauds still. The board of Indian commissioners found last year certain beef-contractors altogether too smart for them. A system of straw bids against which they had carefully guarded, but which was so deftly handled that the wariest watchers might have fallen into the snare, entrapped and outwitted these commissioners, as they themselves have discovered and declared. They are not likely to be thus deceived again. Indeed, with the Indian Bureau as now organized; with the board of Indian commissioners supervising all purchases and watching carefully the entire treatment of the Indians—doing this also at great labor and without hire—with the Indian inspectors consisting of three trusty men—who should be five—who actually make the tour of all the agencies and closely examine each, fraud cannot go long undetected or shiftlessness or inefficiency fail of being promptly rooted out. I venture to say that neither Congress nor the country is generally aware of the amount of careful, faithful, and successful work now doing for the Indian. We have had such stories of corruption and mismanagement—some of which are certainly true and many of them as certainly false—that we have come to think of these as representing the prevailing state of things. It is no wonder that we believe these stories; no wonder, because the evidence of some of them is beyond dispute and because also they accord so well with what we might expect from subjects of this Government in their dealings with the Indians. We should not forget what a potent example the Government itself has set in this particular; what treaties, what solemn pledges it has broken to the Indian, and with what cruelty, as well as fraud, it has so often treated him. No wonder that our people should be so prone to follow where our Government has so conspicuously led the way. But, notwithstanding all this it is true that under the existing order of things, changes for the better are taking place among the Indians which we ought to acknowledge gratefully. So much was never done in their behalf nor with such good results as now. That this is not a vague and general assertion without proof is evident from almost every page of our recent official documents relating to this subject. Let me quote, for example, from page 123 of the last report of the board of Indian commissioners, a statement showing results accomplished in the last seven years in the central superintendency, embracing Kickapoos, Pottawatomies, Kaws, Osages, Quapaws, Peorias, Ottawas, Wyandotts, Senecas, Sacs and Foxes, Absentee Shawnees, Cheyennes, Arapahoes, Wichitas, Kiowas, and Comanches, aggregating 16,000 Indians, some of whom have in former years given us great disturbance.

But this is not a single case. If gentlemen would only take the trouble to examine what is done; if they would only read the record of results such as appear, for example, at the Yakama agency, in Washington Territory, and the Round Valley agency, in California, and the San Carlos agency, in Arizona, where three years ago the wild Apaches could not be kept in peace by all the army we could send there, and the Santee Sioux agency, in Nebraska, and the Sisseton and Yankton agency, in Dakota, and many others—if gentlemen would only remember that in these last six years, since the present or so-called peace policy was adopted, we have had peace with the Indians to a degree never known before, and this notwithstanding that the advancing tide of western emigration has never so largely encroached upon their reservations and narrowed their hunting-grounds as in this time, they would no more think of abandoning this policy and endangering this progress than in the raging of a pestilence they would reject the remedy under which the sick and dying were becoming restored to health and life again.

But, Mr. Chairman, I am aware that these considerations are sometimes shut out from some minds by other thoughts. Questions of economy and administration are raised and urged in favor of the transfer which this bill proposes. But would it be economical? Here I take issue, and affirm that, besides the great disorder and consequent enormous waste which could not but ensue upon the transfer of so vast and complicated a machinery as this from one set of hands long accustomed to its management to another set all unacquainted with it, the present administration is vastly more economical and efficient than there is any likelihood of obtaining from the War Department. I challenge contradiction when I say that there is no Department of the Government where the sum paid and the work done are so disproportionate as in that which administers our military affairs. This is not, perhaps, anybody's fault; it is perhaps inherent in the system, but it is the literal truth; and the facts within the knowledge of every member of this House will justify the statement. Why, Mr. Chairman, one acquainted with the facts must smile, if he does not stare with wonder, to hear this bill advocated because the War Department can purchase and furnish supplies to the Indians more economically than the Department of the Interior has done. I hold in my hand a tabular statement prepared from official data furnished me from both the War Department and that of the Interior, in which the comparative cost is given of beef and flour per hundred weight as contracted for and furnished to certain military posts and Indian agencies lying in close proximity to each other. And will it be believed, after all the sweeping assertions we have heard respecting the superior economy of the War Department, and the great saving in the cost of Indian supplies to be expected from the passage of this bill, that the average cost of beef and transportation of the same at these military posts was, in the fiscal year 1874-'75, 78 per cent. more; and in the present fiscal year 38 per cent. more than at the neighboring Indian agencies? Take a single instance, and a perfectly fair one, for illustration. Camp Robinson is a mile and three-quarters from Red Cloud agency. The cost of beef at the two, therefore, ought to be just about the same. But during the present fiscal year the average price paid for beef delivered at the camp was $3.50 per hundredweight, while at the agency the average price was $2.46½ per hundredweight gross weight in both cases. Now, the amount of beef contracted for at Red Cloud agency from July 1, 1875, to February 8, 1876, is 10,608,012 pounds, and the difference betweeen its actual cost ($261,487.50) and the cost ($371,280.42) of the same under the Army management is a difference of $109,792.92, a sum almost large enough to pay the entire salaries of all our Indian agents. The same facts are seen in the cost of flour, as the table shows, and I have no doubt the same would appear also wherever the same sort of supplies have been furnished to the Army and the Indians, the two lying side by side. In the case of flour, it might be said that the flour furnished the Army is of a better grade than that purchased for the Indians, which is probably true and rightly so; but this is not the case with beef, and this will not explain the full difference in the case of flour. I know no other explanation for it than the fact that the Indian Bureau is vastly more economically managed as it is than it would be under the War Department.

But will not this transfer permit us to get rid of a great expense of management? Let us see. The Indian Bureau costs $69,880 per year, which could be saved, or largely saved, it is said, by transferring it to the War Department. This sum is not large, though by no means inconsiderable, but how can any one expect it to be thus saved? Why, this transfer is actually proposed in an appropriation bill which cuts down the salaries in the War Department 10 per cent., and reduces the force there 20 per cent., and though I wish to speak with all deference of those who have had larger experience in this House than I, yet I must say that to seek to save the cost or reduce the cost of the Indian Bureau in this way is to trifle with legislation, and to treat with contempt the grave duties we have been sent here to perform.

But the agents in the field, the superintendents, and inspectors, and commissioners—all their expenses can be saved by detailing Army officers for this service without additional cost? Army officers? And are these then so plenty, and with so little to do, that we have enough at hand for all this work? Then other questions are suggested to which the advocates of the maintenance of our present Army force might not find it easy to reply. But, waiving this, does any one expect that either the officers or the soldiers of our Army are going to do the work now actually accomplished or needing to be done at our Indian agencies? Are Army officers going to teach Indian children, or Indian adults? Are the soldiers of the Army going to act as herdsmen or husbandmen to show the Indians how to care for cattle and how to till the soil? Is the patient and laborious employment of instructing these ignorant people in the arts, and inciting them to the ways of civilized life likely to be congenial to military men of any grade, or, when you come to the point, is it likely to be done by them? The truth is—and why should we not see it before the disastrous experiment is made—either the work would not be done in this way, or we should need as large a force of civilians as now to conduct it. I quote again from the words to which the General of our Army penned his name in 1868:

> Not one in a thousand of the officers of our Army would like to teach Indian children to read and write, or Indian men to sow and reap. These are emphatically civil, and not military occupations.—Report on Indian Affairs, 1868, page 48.

When the great reduction in our Army took place in 1869 we had supernumerary officers who could be detailed to act as Indian agents, many of whom were thus detailed in 1870. But the experiment was not satisfactory, so far as I can learn, to anybody, least of all to the officers themselves, and the practice was abandoned. But we have no such supernumerary officers now in numbers sufficient for this work, and therefore, if this bill should pass, the detailed Indian agents must be taken directly from the Army service. Let us see how this will work. Of course these men will not be taken from the ranks of field officers, but officers of the line will have to furnish the supply, and as the bill reported by the committee making provision for this transfer directs that Indian agents shall not be of lower rank than first lieutenant, this, or that of captain, is the rank from which these men would generally come. Now, Mr. Chairman, whether the first lieutenants and the captains of our Army are in point of years and character and wisdom just the men for Indian agents I will not inquire. But every one knows that in the Army the rule of such detached service is the rule of rotation, while the one thing needed in an Indian agency, if the agent be fitted for his place, is that he be kept there. But how are these two requirements to agree? They cannot agree. They are irreconcilable. One must yield to the other, and is it difficult to see which this will be? When the efficiency of the Army and the success of the agency have this divided interest, and the Army or the War Department has the sole power to decide the issue, does any one doubt on which side the decision will be? And is it wise in any aspect to take a step which leads to such an end?

But besides all this, as stated in the minority report accompanying this bill, at the root of Army organization lies the principle of readiness to move at any time to any place as orders are received. The transfer of Indian affairs to the War Department would therefore not only be a departure from the policy of peace and civilization of the Indians, but would also be destructive to the efficiency of the Army itself.

But this question of economy assumes much larger proportions than the cost of the Indian Bureau and agencies discloses. Since the Government began we have no parallel, nor aught approaching it, to the magnitude of outlay and meagerness of result which our military relations to the Indians have shown. During the forty years prior to 1868 the cost of Indian wars—the direct cost to the Government, without including the cost from the plundering and destroying of private property—was, according to the estimate of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for that year, not less than $500,000,000, the interest of which alone would pay five times over the largest amount ever asked for to maintain the peace policy and keep the peace with the Indians. Now, I know it is said these Indian wars have been necessary; but let us not blink the issue here. On what does this necessity hinge? I wish to make no sweeping assertions, and therefore call the attention of the House to the actual source of these wars during the last twenty or thirty years. Take the great Sioux war of 1852-'53-'54. It started thus: A Mormon emigrant train lost a cow upon the road, which a band of Sioux, who were living in perfect peace in the neighborhood, found and took. The Mormons, discovering this, made complaint at Fort Laramie, near which the loss occurred, and a lieutenant with a squad of soldiers was dispatched for the recovery of the cow. But the cow was by this time past recovery. In the language of the protoplastic theorists, she was fast undergoing transmutation into Indian. The Indians offered to pay for her, but the brave lieutenant now demanded that the man who had taken her should be surrendered for punishment. The Indians said he could not be found, whereupon—will it be believed?—the lieutenant, with no other provocation, commanded his troops to fire, and the Indian chief was slain! Those troops never fired again. They were instantly surrounded and massacred, every one; and this was the beginning of that terrible war with the Sioux which lasted nearly three years, which cost the Government $40,000,000 and hundreds of soldiers' lives, and left our relations with the Indians in a worse state than they were before.

In the report accompanying this bill we have from the man probably more competent to testify to the actual facts than any other man living the statement that "the wars in Oregon in 1854-'55 were brought about entirely by the indiscretion of the Army." The troops were ordered out of Oregon in 1851 because the superintendent of Indian affairs appointed for that Territory would not consent to go until the troops were removed, and they were ordered back in 1853 because it was said that the peaceful state which existed in the interval brought no money into Oregon. During the three years of 1851, 1852, and 1853 the entire cost of keeping the Indians at peace by peaceful means in Oregon and California and Idaho altogether was only $25,000, while in 1854 and 1855 it cost the Government $10,000,000 in Oregon alone to quell disturbances by the Army which the Army itself had created.

But these are not single cases. The same facts appear all through our Army intercourse with the Indians. The Cheyenne war of 1864 and 1865 was directly due to the mismanagement of the military. First a lieutenant undertook to arrest some Indians with no authenticated cause; then a major guaranteed protection to a band who were ready to lay down their arms and live in peace; then a colonel ordered this same band to be surrounded, and though he knew the guarantee they had received and also that they had since committed no offense, and though he saw, as he drew near the hapless wretches, women and little children as well as men huddling around a United States flag, up to which they were gazing for the protection which a United States military officer had promised they should receive—though he knew and saw all this, for we have sworn and copious testimony to the fact, he ordered and secured their massacre with such atrocious cruelties to the living and such indecent mutilations of the dead that one wonders whether the perpetrators could be human beings or whether they were fiends in the guise of men. And yet, after these hellish deeds, the commanding colonel vaunted his infamy in the words: "This fight will put a star upon my shoulder." But it was told us the other day that these were militia-men, a Colorado regiment, and the colonel was not an officer of the regular Army, but, forsooth, a Methodist minister, strangely reconstructed! But what shall be said of the major in command of the regular garrison at that point, whose words were:

> I told the colonel I was glad he had come; that I would have gone before and cleaned out the sons of guns if I had had force enough.—Report on the Condition of Indian Tribes, 1867, page 91.

And what shall be said of the Piegan massacre and the massacres at Washita and Powder Creek, or of the lieutenant-general and major-general and brigadier-general and colonel by whom these deeds were done? I never heard any of these men called Methodist ministers or any other than officers of the regular Army regularly bred. These deeds are only equaled in horror and some of them are hardly surpassed by that at Sand Creek, and are a blot of damning infamy not only on the guilty perpetrators, but on the War Department, which still sustains the men who did them. But my object in alluding to these crimes is to call attention to the undoubted fact that by such procedures our Indian wars have been precipitated. So far as I know, it has never been denied that the massacre at Sand Creek caused the dreadful Cheyenne war which followed. This deed taught the Indian that he could trust no one but himself, and told him to let his savage instincts run untrammeled. The Cheyennes and Kiowas and Comanches were all inflamed, and conflagration, death, and pillage reigned all along our borders. It took two years to stop this terror, during which time, besides the immense loss to private individuals of property and life, it cost the Government $35,000,000 and many lives of soldiers; while, leaving out the Sand Creek massacre, only twenty Indians, all told, were slain. In 1865 a treaty of peace was made, but in 1867 war broke out again among the Cheyennes. I will let a report, made to this House from the Indian Bureau, July, 1867, tell the story of its source:

> In April, 1867, the Cheyennes, who had been at peace since the treaty of 1865, were quietly occupying their village on the grounds assigned to them by that treaty, when a military command under Major-General Hancock, without any known provocation, burned down the homes of three hundred lodges, (including about one hundred lodges of friendly Sioux,) and all their provisions, clothing, utensils, and property of every description, property being thus destroyed to the value of $100,000.

From this we had another war lasting through 1867 and 1868, which it is reported cost us $40,000,000 and the lives of over three hundred men.

In 1866 we were at peace with the Sioux, when the military officer in command—another major-general of the Army—in direct violation of treaty stipulations, planted the military posts of Phil. Kearney, Reno, and C. F. Smith in the actual territory of these Indians. The Indians flew to arms, and it cost the Government at the rate of a million of dollars a month and many lives before they could be subdued, and when peace came, and new treaties were made, the Government acknowledged the original rights of the Indians, and ordered the forts to be vacated which had caused the war. In the same line must be set the Modoc war, the war in Arizona, and the present troubles in the Black Hills. There has not been an Indian war for half a century but that the whites have been the aggressors, and hardly one for the same period but can be traced directly to the mismanagement of the military. Military men have often said that the Army does not wish to fight the Indians. Such fighting is hard work, and dangerous, and without much glory. All which is doubtless true, but all which does not bar the facts I have recited.

Our treatment of the Indian, Mr. Chairman, has been a dark stain upon our history. But during the last six years, for the first time since the Government began, it has sought to introduce directly among these people Christian influences. It has selected its agents and superintendents, not from the Army and not from the retainers of a political party, but from the churches of the land. The result has been better and larger than one who knew the difficulties, however sanguine, might have hoped. It has not been all that was desired. The work is very great, and the workmen, though thus selected, have sometimes turned out very weak. But never before could a Christian philanthropist find so much hope in our treatment of the Indians as now. I implore the House not to retrace these steps nor retard a forward movement in the same direction. Do not let either the Army or a dominant party have again the management of these affairs. Save the Indian, I entreat, from the cruelty of the one and the corruption of the other, and from the selfishness of both. Let the Christian spirit which has begun to breathe through our relations with the Indian fully penetrate them. Let the strong bear the infirmities of the weak, and not please themselves, even as Christ pleased not Himself, which, I take it, Mr. Chairman, is the highest law of a Christian nation, as it is of a Christian man, and in which the treatment of the Indian for which I plead has both the principle which justifies it and the promise which assures success.

During the delivery of the above speech, Mr. SEELYE'S hour having expired, his time was extended by unanimous consent on motion of Mr COX.

Mr. HOOKER. MR. Chairman, if the premises laid down by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. SEELYE,] who has just concluded his remarks, and those which were assumed by the distinguished gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] who spoke so eloquently on this subject the other day, are to be taken for granted as true, then there can be no doubt at all but the mind of every member of this committee will gratefully and cordially follow the lead of those two gentlemen. I say if the premises upon which they started out in discussing this bill in the committee are true, then there is no difficulty in reaching the same conclusion they did.

They started out with the declaration that the object of the bill which the committee has now under consideration is to declare war against the Indian tribes and nations. Is that true? Is that position verified by the recitals in the sections of the bill? Can we say such is its object and purpose? I am happy to say, Mr. Chairman, to this committee that in the investigation of this matter the Committee on Indian Affairs entered into it in no partisan spirit. They entered upon it with a desire primarily and with the main and prominent object of giving protection to the Indian and carrying out the treaty obligations of our Government.

Now, this has been a question which has vexed the minds of statesmen from the first foundation of the Government. The Indian has been a subject of anxious consideration. He has been swept on to the West by the tide of civilization from the East; and now two tidal-waves, one flowing from the Atlantic and the other from the Pacific slope, meet him upon the western border, and there are no longer any happy hunting-grounds farther west to which he can be pressed.

This committee, sir, has had no desire or wish to violate one single treaty obligation of the Government; and in the conclusion to which the majority have arrived they have been animated, I say, primarily by the consideration of the Indian's welfare. They find now the Indian is confined to Indian territory under treaties made with the Government, and they have no disposition to violate those treaties. When they yielded the vast possessions we now enjoy, and, under the treaties made by former administrations, retired to the West, they were assured by that man of iron will and comprehensive mind who then presided over the destinies of this country, General Jackson, when this territory was assigned them, that it should be theirs and their children's and their children's children, in perpetuity forever, using the beautiful and figurative language so well calculated to strike the Indian mind and impress him with the conviction that the white man did not speak with a forked tongue. He said to them, "This territory shall be yours while the rivers flow and the oaks grow."

And there is no disposition on the part of the American Congress to violate one single obligation assumed either in the ancient treaties with this race or in the modern treaties, but on the contrary we desire to carry out in good faith every pledge of our Government. But it was a question as to what was the most expedient mode of carrying out in good faith the treaties of the Government and of the American people with this race. I wish to say, however, that the committee in investigating this question have been animated by this desire primarily, but they have not forgotten what the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Massachusetts seem to have forgotten, that we have a people upon our own frontier immediately and directly in communication with the uncivilized Indian tribes, whose property, whose houses and lives, are seriously jeopardized by contact with uncivilized Indian tribes. They seem to have forgotten we have another people of our own to guard and protect. They seem to have forgotten the conventions and treaties between the Indian nations of this country, like all treaties and conventions, impose obligations upon both parties entering into them to observe their stipulations.

You would not have supposed in listening to the eloquent speech of my distinguished friend from New York or that of the gentleman from Massachusetts there had ever been a single act of Indian barbarity or Indian outrage perpetrated during the whole history of the Government. You would have supposed, on the contrary, that the only men guilty of wrong, the only men who had infracted these treaties, the only men who had broken their words and disturbed the plighted faith of our nation were the officers and soldiers of our Army.

It was said by the distinguished gentleman from New York in the progress of his speech that men upon the border could not understand this question; that they might think it a little singular that a gentleman from the great metropolitan district of New York should undertake to determine this Indian question better than the men who live upon the border. Sir, I was very much reminded, as the gentleman dwelt upon this idea and inculcated this opinion, of a description given by Dickens of the wonderfully charitable woman who was knitting socks and making garments for the children of the people of Timbuctoo Island while her own children were unshod and unprovided for. She looked from a distance, as my distinguished friend from New York does on this question; and he thinks he understands it better than the long array of witnesses we have examined by our committee who have lived more than a quarter of a century in that territory in daily contact with the Indian. Was it really an unjust thing to suppose that these men, thus examined by this committee in the spirit and in the temper in which they were examined, did not understand the subject as well as my distinguished friend from the metropolitan district of New York, or as well as the gentleman from the State of Massachusetts, [Mr. SEELYE?]

We had no partisan object to accomplish. We had no consideration for the Army in determining this question as the majority of the committee have determined it. We looked alone, first, to the rights the Indian had and to our duty for his protection; and, secondly, to the equally just rights which under the treaties we were bound to observe to our own people of the Caucasian race.

It was said by the distinguished gentleman from New York, in the progress of his remarks, that he himself had witnessed the wonderful effects of the civilization which had been produced by the Army; and he had previously said, accounting for his own interest in this matter and his understanding of the subject, that he was himself from a distinguished tribe, the Tammany tribe, in the State of New York, but that he had not derived his information from that tribe or its history; and I suppose he had not, for if I read the history of the country aright, I think it is written that the chief of that tribe departed some time ago from the island of Manhattan, taking all the wigwams and almost all the property of the tribe along with him.

I suppose that my distinguished friend from the State of New York, who seems to think that there is so much to be feared from the Army, when he stood upon the top of that lofty mountain, D'Afrique, and looked upon the wondrous spectacle of the civilization of the Kabyles, guarded by five hundred French soldiers in the French uniform, but whom my friend from New York would have denominated wolves in the French uniform—I suppose when he stood upon this lofty mountain and witnessed this spectacle and congratulated himself on the progress of civilization, he had forgotten the fact that he admitted the five hundred soldiers were there for the purpose of protecting and guarding that civilization; and indeed the admission was made that they were the authors and means by which it was produced. But still the five hundred soldiers were necessary to perpetuate and keep alive this civilization.

I thought that some of the ancient blood of the tribe to which the gentleman belonged must have stirred his veins when he stood on this mountain, for he grew so savage in his temper that he was not willing to be interrupted by a courteous remark from my distinguished friend, General SPARKS, who has charge of this bill. The gentleman from New York further stated in the course of his speech that it was necessary the Army should be strengthened, and that the Indian forts should be strengthened. Afterward he seemed to argue it was unnecessary to have any Army at all. Is that the opinion of the distinguished gentleman from New York, and does the gentleman from Massachusetts agree with him? Do they think now that in our Indian Territory there is no Army? Why in the Indian Territory itself, where we have five civilized tribes—the Cherokees, Chickasaws, Choctaws, Creeks, and Seminoles—we have troops even there; though this bill does not propose by transferring to the War Department the conduct of Indian affairs to interfere in the slightest degree with any one of these civilized tribes.

The distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts and his colleague upon this question from New York have alluded to the half-breeds of the Indian nation as constituting evidences of reproach to these people. Permit me to say to the gentleman from New York and to the gentleman from Massachusetts, that the most intelligent gentlemen whom we had before us of that tribe were of this class, and that they advocated the idea that the chief sources of civilization were to be found in contact with and intermarriage with the Anglo-Saxon race. And during this session of Congress and before this committee we have had half-breeds of the various tribes, some from the Cherokee Nation and some from others, who constituted the most intelligent and the ruling portion indeed of these various civilized tribes. They were here to speak for themselves. They were here to say that that civilization with which the tribes had been blessed was attributable to contact with the white men.

Now, I say that in this Indian Territory we have at Fort Vincent soldiers of the Army and officers of the Army, and nobody proposes to take them away. We have also at Fort Sill and Camp Supply officers of the Army and soldiers of the Army. They are scattered all over your western frontier. They are necessary there for two purposes: to see that the rights of the Indians are protected, and to see that the rights of the white men living upon our frontier are guarded and protected.

Do I understand that the gentlemen who opposed this bill and who opposed the views of the majority of the committee agree with the idea that we no longer need any troops there at all? Such certainly is not the sentiment of the distinguished gentleman from New York in the speech which he made the other day. But, on the contrary, he seems to be of opinion that it is absolutely necessary that these forts should be kept up and the Army increased, for in the progress of his well-considered and able speech, elaborately pondered over, not uttered on the impulse of the moment, but considerately, he says:

> I agree with the gentleman from Texas that the Rio Grande needs protection and that the forts need manning in the Indian country.

A little further along on the same page he says:

> We want no standing army, either for the South or the frontier.

So that we see here an admission that the Army is necessary, and yet upon the proposition to transfer the Indian Bureau to the War Department the gentleman says that no army is necessary, either upon the border where we have savage tribes or in the Indian Territory.

This bill, sir, does not propose to affect at all the five civilized tribes. This Government, however, has always kept soldiers there during the progress of this civilization. For what purpose and when have they acted? It is said by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SEELYE] that they have occasionally acted improperly. Would you therefore hold the whole Army responsible on that account? It was said by the distinguished gentleman from New York that you should not trust the Army because of the improper conduct of some one officer, and he alluded especially to the action of General Sheridan in the city of New Orleans, in January, 1875, when he was sent there for certain purposes. He alluded to a memorable historical dispatch which was sent by General Sheridan to the Secretary of War, proposing that he should be invested with power to establish military commissions and to try those parties alleged to have been guilty of offenses whom he declared were banditti; and the gentleman alluded also to the response of the Secretary of War to that message. That response is yet fresh in the memory of our whole people:

The President and all of us approve the course you pursue.

Now, I say that while these instances of military assumption of authority may here and there exist, and while there may occasionally occur in our history instances in which military men have acted without authority and have exceeded their just powers, and even stained with dishonor the epaulets on their shoulders and the uniforms they wore, there have also been instances, yet fresh in the memory of the country, in which officers of the Army have preserved and observed all the rights and privileges which belong to the citizens of the country under the Constitution and laws of the country made subject to their control.

If the gentleman had looked a little further back in the history of Army officers at New Orleans he might have found that in 1867, two years after the war closed, a distinguished general of the Army, General Hancock, who was assigned to the command of the fifth military district, when Governor Pease, of the State of Texas, asked of him that he should supersede by his own military order the great body of the common law that existed in Texas, and that he should wipe out by one dash of his pen the great body of civil laws that prevailed in the State of Louisiana, his reply is yet fresh in the memory of the people. In order to show that there are officers of the Army who understand something of the Constitution and the rights of the people under it, I quote his reply to this demand of Governor Pease, who was probably a legitimate cousin of Kellogg, of Louisiana, and Ames, of Mississippi, the latter of whom has just gone back to the region of country from which he came, and we think for our country's good. In answer he said:

Solemnly impressed with these views, the general announces that the great principles of American liberty are still the lawful inheritance of this people, and ever should be. The right of trial by jury, the habeas corpus, the liberty of the press, the freedom of speech, the natural rights of persons, and the rights of property must be preserved.

So I say, sir, that we cannot single out one instance of assumption of authority, either in Indian wars or elsewhere, by the military, and then say that we cannot trust the officers of the Army and the men of the Army on that account.

In this instance a proposition is made—to do what? To use the Army for the purpose of making war upon the Indians? Not at all; but the result shows, when you look at the past management of Indian affairs under the War Department, that the expenditures have increased since it was transferred, in 1849, from the War Department to the Interior Department then created; the expenditures for the Indians, then numbering four hundred thousand, were only $900,000 per annum; not quite a million. What do we see now? And the statement of these results is an answer to the argument of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. SEELYE,] and all the details of his argument may be answered satisfactorily by other details that can be produced. The expenses for the Indian service have been on the increase from year to year until they have swollen up during the last fiscal year, and probably during the present fiscal year, to from $5,000,000 to $8,000,000. And what has been the number of Indians? In 1849 they numbered, as I have said, more than four hundred thousand according to the census; now they are said not to embrace more than three hundred thousand, including both the savage and the civilized tribes. It appears, therefore, that the expense of the administration of this Indian service under the peace management which has been alluded to by the gentleman from Massachusetts has increased from $900,000 to nearly $8,000,000 per annum, while at the same time the number of Indians has decreased nearly one hundred thousand. Why is this so? I say it is sufficient evidence of the fact that there has not been that just and economical administration of the Department to which the Government is entitled.

Now, where does the fault lie, and can it be remedied? It is said by gentlemen that you must remedy this trouble by getting honest agents; that you have not tried this peace arrangement long enough. Why, sir, you have tried it since 1849, and have seen its operation during all these years. You have seen the expenses of this Department gradually increasing from year to year, until now they have swollen to the enormous amount I have just named. I say this is sufficient evidence of the fact that there has not been an economical administration of Indian Affairs. Why is it that we hear complaints from every Indian tribe that their annuities are not distributed to them, that their supplies are not carried to them.

Your committee took a large amount of testimony on the question of the economy of the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department. It is not proposed in so transferring it that we shall banish from the Indian territories or Indian tribes all civilization and Christianity. The distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts has said that under the peace arrangement the Indians have advanced wonderfully in civilization and Christianity. Who is it that proposes, because the Indians are transferred to the War Department and that Department given the power to purchase these supplies, to make the payments of the annuities, to administer all the Indian affairs by officers of the Army—who proposes to take from the Indians the teacher who goes among them to instruct them in Christianity and civilization? Is it to be presumed that because this transfer is made therefore all effort to civilize and christianize the Indians is to be dispensed with? This very peace commission, upon which the distinguished gentlemen from New York and Massachusetts predicated their remarks, return their thanks to the officers of the Army for the extraordinary kindness and courtesy they received at their hands when they went there for the purpose of investigating the condition of the Indians. My friend from Massachusetts, when he read what was said by the peace commission in 1868, forgot to read the concluding portion of their report, in which they recommend that this transfer to the War Department shall be made.

It will be observed that the very basis of the speeches of the gentlemen from New York and Massachusetts is the fact that this peace commission in 1868 was opposed to this transfer. Let me call the attention of the gentlemen very briefly to what that peace commission said. Mark you, this is the peace commission sent out for the purpose of ascertaining how the affairs of the Indians had been managed. That commission says:

That there are bad men connected with the service cannot be denied. The records are abundant to show that agents have pocketed the funds appropriated by the Government and driven the Indians to starvation.

Does the gentleman from Massachusetts believe that part of the report? Does he think that that part of the report states what is the fact? The report goes on to say—

It cannot be denied that Indian wars have originated from this cause. The Sioux war in Minnesota is supposed to have been produced in this way. For a long time these officers have been selected from partisan ranks, not so much on account of honesty and qualification as devotion to party interests and their willingness to apply the money of the Indians to promote the selfish schemes of local politicians. We do not doubt that some such men may be in the service of the Bureau now.

Again, they say—and I read this in answer to the argument of the gentleman from Massachusetts—

In this connection we deem it of the highest importance that no governor or Legislature of States or Territories be permitted to call out and equip troops for the purpose of carrying on war against the Indians. It was Colorado troops that involved us in the war of 1864-'65 with the Cheyennes; it was a regiment of hundred-day men that perpetrated the butchery at Sand Creek and took from the Treasury millions of money.

My distinguished friend from New York alluded warmly in the progress of his remarks to the Sand Creek massacre.

The commission say again:

A regiment of Montana troops last September would have involved us in an almost interminable war with the Crows but for the timely intervention of the military authorities.

So, that, according to this commission, these Indian wars are not attributable to the Regular Army.

This is a report signed by the president of the commission, N. G. Taylor, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, by J. B. Henderson, General Sherman, General Harney, John B. Sanborn, General Terry, Mr. Tappan, and General Augur. What I have read is from the first report of this commission, the one alluded to by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, and the one upon which my friend from New York based his argument.

Now, what do the commission say when they come again to treat of this question? When they met in Chicago, October 9, 1868, they speak of this question again. They had already given their testimony that it was undoubtedly true that thousands of dollars had been pocketed by the Indian agents and that the Indians had not received the annuities and goods to which they were entitled. They attributed the Indian wars to what? To the Army of the United States? How does the Army operate? Only upon the call of the Interior Department and these very men who have control of this peace arrangement. The officers of the Army act in obedience to orders; they are so trained.

The gentleman from New York said, among other things, that if you give these Indians over to the Army it would be a sentence of death to the Indian. His declaration was that it was a sentence of death to the Indian to give him into the custody of the War Department. If this is the case, let me ask whence came all these massacres and wars to which he and the gentleman from Massachusetts have alluded in the progress of this debate? They have all occurred since 1849, during your peace administration, while the Secretary of the Interior has had control and management of Indian affairs. You do not propose to remove the Army, do you? And if you do not, and continue your peace establishment, what evidence is there of the assertion that if you turn the Indian over to the War Department it will be death to the Indian? Can you turn him over to a more certain death than that of the peace management? When this convention met in Chicago in 1868, this very same peace commission, what did they then say?

They passed a series of resolutions and I will read the two last:

Resolved, That the military force should be used to compel the removal into said reservation of all such Indians as may refuse to go after due notice has been given to them that provision has been made to feed and protect them within the same.

Again they said in their concluding resolution, and I call the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SEELYE] to this language:

Resolved, That in the opinion of this commission the Bureau of Indian Affairs should be transferred from the Department of the Interior to the Department of War.

So that in point of fact the only ground upon which the distinguished gentleman from New York and his friend from Massachusetts stand is swept from under them. Their arguments in opposition to this bill are built upon pillars of ice; the first warm breeze of truth that comes across them sweeps the foundations from under them and leaves nothing for their magnificent fabric of war, bloodshed, and massacre to rest upon.

Now the distinguished gentleman from New York presented in this very argument a complete answer to his own assertion that to turn over the management of Indian affairs to the War Department is to turn them over to sentence of death and destruction and extermination. The gentleman from Massachusetts has predicated his argument upon the idea that this peace commission was opposed to the measure, and that their testimony on this matter is to be relied upon in preference to that of anybody else. It has been said, Mr. Chairman, that the most formidable opponent a distinguished man has to encounter (and both these gentlemen have evinced marked ability in the progress of this debate) is himself. Therefore I put the argument made by the gentleman from New York on one page of his speech against the argument made by him upon another page. But we may be able to excuse it upon the ground that even Olympian Jove does not always nod with the same power and significance, and that "Apollo neque semper tendit arcum."

You cannot expect therefore that these gentlemen shall be credited by the committee when the very evidence on which they ask the committee to believe them is swept from beneath their feet.

Mr. KASSON. Will the gentleman yield to a motion that the committee rise, so that before the hour for the recess arrives an order may be made touching an adjournment over to-morrow?

Mr. HOOKER. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. SCALES. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BANNING having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. BLACKBURN reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the special order, the bill (H. R. No. 2677) to transfer the Office of Indian Affairs from the Interior to the War Department, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ADJOURNMENT TILL SATURDAY.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Saturday next.

The motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to Mr. WILLIAMS, of New York, till Monday, the 24th instant, on account of important business; to Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania, for one week; to Mr. LEVY for five days; to Mr. HATHORN till Monday next; and to Mr. WALSH for one week.

The hour of half past four o'clock having arrived, the House, according to order, took a recess till half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House re-assembled at half past seven o'clock, and was called to order by Mr. BLACKBURN as Speaker pro tempore.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. ATKINS. I ask my colleague on the committee [Mr. RANDALL] whether the time for discussion on this paragraph has been limited?

Mr. RANDALL. I understand it has been limited to five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the motion to limit debate upon the pending paragraph was not adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. I move, then, that all debate in Committee of the Whole on the pending paragraph of the legislative appropriation bill be closed in ten minutes. I understand that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] desires to speak.

The motion was agreed to.

The question then recurred on the motion of Mr. RANDALL, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the legislative, &c., appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. COX in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2571) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the pending paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bureau of Statistics:

For the officer in charge of the Bureau of Statistics, $2,250; chief clerk, $1,800; three clerks of class four; four clerks of class three; six clerks of class two; four clerks of class one; five copyists, at $900 each; one messenger; one laborer; and one char-woman, at $480; in all, $33,790. And all the duties imposed upon the Bureau of Statistics by the legislation of the second session of the Forty-third Congress shall be performed by the clerical force herein provided for.

The pending amendment, offered by Mr. CAULFIELD, was to strike out "three clerks of class four," and insert "five clerks of class four."

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. As an amendment to the amendment, I move to add at the end of the paragraph what I send to the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

For collecting statistics concerning commerce, as provided by the act of the second session of the Forty-third Congress, $5,000.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the Legislatures of the different States, the chambers of commerce of the great cities, and boards of trade, agricultural societies, and individuals, producers of our staples and consumers, have sent petitions to Congress asking interference in interstate commerce to stop discrimination and extortion in the transportation of the products of the Northwest and Southwest to the seaboard. The last House took the question up and passed a bill for the purpose of giving relief from the exactions of the half dozen autocrats who control American commerce. That bill did not pass the Senate, but that body appointed a committee of its own number for the purpose of collecting statistics in order to have information on the subject before it was acted on, who compiled the first reliable facts and statistics Congress has had. As a result of all these demands from all classes of our people an amendment was put upon a bill making provision for the Bureau of Statistics to collect detailed information to be laid before Congress in order that we might act intelligently.

We are well aware, Mr. Chairman, there are two theories abroad in the land respecting the settlement of this question, considering the question from a national stand-point. One is by positive enactment by law regulating freights and fares, either directly or through a commission. The other is by an enlightened public opinion, of which such men as Charles Francis Adams are the representatives. I do not believe, sir, that the people of this country expect the majority of this House to do anything in the direction of controlling this matter by legislation. The gentlemen who comprise the majority upon this floor believe the States should regulate this matter each for itself, and no representations from the suffering millions seem to reach them. They do not believe Congress has the constitutional power to do it, and, as I have said, I do not think the people expect this House to do anything. I believe, however, the people do expect, in furtherance of the other theory that they get all the facts in this connection, an enlightened public opinion may perhaps compel those great corporations, which control seventy-five thousand miles of railroad, capital equal to twice the amount of the public debt, the prosperity and growth of so many of our interests, and employés in greater number than are embraced by our whole civil service—they do expect, I say, we shall have information to secure that enlightened public opinion which will compel these overgrown corporations to do what is just and right, as no legislation is to be looked for from gentlemen who deny the right of Congress to legislate on the question unless to collect statistics.

I do not believe, sir, when you come to sum up the total amount of your savings you can present to the country with any degree of assurance the fact that you have starved the public mind, that you have refused to give information on this our great question, upon which there is nothing upon the statute-book providing for its regulation—I say I do not think you can appeal to the country with any just pride that you have saved this small pittance by refusing to give the people the information they ought to have and cannot be obtained by any other authority.

There is nothing appropriated in this bill to continue the collection of these facts and statistics. The Bureau has to avail itself of the ripe experience of experts, such as the secretaries of the boards of trade of Chicago, Cincinnati, Saint Louis, Buffalo, Boston, and Montreal, men whose experience in compiling commercial statistics is such as no bureau clerk can acquire in years, and whose experience will enable the Bureau to furnish the country with information not easily obtainable elsewhere. The amendment I propose will enable the Bureau to give such experts reasonable compensation. If it is rejected our resources will be no more ample in the future than in the past, when the people send here representatives who will find a solution to the transportation problem. The majority here expect the States to deal with what is beyond their jurisdiction, and deny national remedies to evils that have become national in their magnitude. You have the majority, gentlemen, and will be responsible to the producers of the Northwest and consumers of the East. I yield the half of this grudged time to my friend from Wisconsin.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I only wanted to rise last evening to indorse, and if I could emphasize, the words so gracefully and gallantly uttered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] and so forcibly seconded by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] in behalf of the interests of the Northwest. Sixty-five minutes were accorded in committee here last night to the discussion of what was denominated hand-mash-copper-bottomed-sheet-iron whisky-machines in the South, whose capacity I believe was stated to be a jugful a day. [Laughter.] Yet when a question was raised involving the interests in some sense of 40,000,000 of people, affecting the transportation of every bushel of grain, every pound of merchandise, throughout the country, and relating to a tonnage equal to the ocean-borne commerce of the world, twenty minutes were accorded for its discussion, ten of which were consumed on the opposite side of this Chamber, and when ten additional minutes were asked for on this side an hour and a quarter was spent in dilatory motions, and a peremptory adjournment taken rather than that further time should be given to two or three gentlemen on this side.

Sir, so far as I am concerned personally I make no complaint. It is a pleasure for me to acknowledge the uniform kindness and courtesy of gentlemen of the opposition. But this question goes beyond that, and fully accords with the consistent record of gentlemen on that side of the House upon this question heretofore.

I must hasten, as my two minutes are nearly expired. I ask the gentleman from Maine to yield to me for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine has not yet been recognized as entitled to the floor.

Mr. HALE. The gentleman from Wisconsin had better go on without yielding on my part.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. Very well; but I see that ominous mallet suspended in the air like the sword of Damocles. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I should like to know on which side the gentleman is?

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I do not blame the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. HALE. I will give the gentleman from Wisconsin a minute to state his point.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. Minute-men were very well at Concord, but that was no such time as this. [Laughter.] I respectfully decline the proffered generosity.

Mr. HALE. I should not have ventured to give so little time as one minute to anybody else than the gentleman from Wisconsin; for I know he can, if he chooses, do more in one minute than most of us in five.

On this matter of the appropriation for the Bureau of Statistics, I wish to say that the subject came before the Committee on Appropriations at the last Congress and was investigated very thoroughly, and the committee then decided to strike out the Bureau entirely because they believed that a good deal of its work was fanciful, that its importance was exaggerated, not entirely manufactured but largely exaggerated, and that the work of compiling statistics for the benefit of the people and of Congress and the Government could be done in other Bureaus of the Treasury Department, as it had been done before.

In this Congress the Committee on Appropriations does not recommend the abolition of the Bureau. One reason is what has been hinted at by gentlemen of the West, who have spoken in favor of a certain appropriation for the compilation of railroad statistics. Last year the Senate put on a clause giving a gross appropriation devoted to that purpose exclusively for the benefit of the people seeking information upon that great subject. The Committee on Appropriations in this House reduces the whole force of the Bureau; but yet we leave twenty-nine clerks to do the work of this entire Bureau. And in order to provide for the wants of the people seeking information upon the question of railway traffic and transportation, instead of leaving it out, the committee has declared expressly that all of the duties upon that great subject confided to this Bureau in the last Congress shall be performed by the force that is left.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have no hesitation in saying from my own knowledge that I believe this force of twenty-nine clerks is amply competent, in connection with the more than sixty clerks we have for that purpose in the different custom-houses of the land, to compile all the statistics in relation to commerce and navigation, and do all the work that is necessary to be done—and it is great—in reference to the subject of transportation; and it was largely for that reason that the committee left so much of a force as it did. It was purely for that reason that the committee put in the clause at the end of this section that all of the duties imposed on the Bureau by the legislation of the last Congress shall be performed by the force that we give them now. Now, if any gentleman will think for a moment how much valuable work in the way of compilation of statistics for congressional documents and speeches a single clerk can do, if a competent man, he will then realize how much of this work twenty-nine good clerks that we have left in this Bureau can do. I have no hesitation in saying that for all legitimate needs the force that has been left by the Committee on Appropriations is ample. There is a deal of fanciful work that has been done heretofore by this Bureau. There are men in that Bureau whose minds I believe run in a fanciful direction rather than in a practical direction. I do not deny that they have done good.

Mr. CONGER rose.

Mr. HALE. My friend from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] who is now on his feet has made good speeches here in the interest of commerce and has presented columns of figures that are unassailable, and I have no doubt he has been helped in the compilation of those figures by the Bureau of Statistics and that his information has been mainly correct. But I believe this, that, while any information from this Bureau is largely correct, yet it is proper for gentlemen making use of it to scrutinize the figures of that Bureau, because I know of instances in which my friend could not depend upon it.

Mr. DUNNELL. I rose some time ago to suggest to the gentleman from Maine that I find in this bill but eighteen clerks in the Bureau of Statistics, while he talks of twenty-nine.

Mr. HALE. There is one head of the Bureau: one chief clerk; three clerks of class four; four clerks of class three; six clerks of class two; four clerks of class one; and five messengers.

Mr. DUNNELL. That is twenty-three.

Mr. HALE. The gentleman's figuring is different from mine. I make it twenty-nine; and besides there are three messengers and laborers.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CONGER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Maine——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine has expired.

Mr. CONGER. I wish the Chair would not interrupt me while I am asking a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is not in order.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman from Maine had promised to allow me to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all debate on the pending paragraph was to close in ten minutes. That time has now elapsed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent to ask the gentleman from Maine just one question.

There was no objection.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Is the gentleman from Maine aware that in the collection of those statistics the Bureau is compelled to employ experts to furnish statistics; such, for example, as the secretaries of boards of trade, who have spent their whole lives in compiling statistics and who furnish such statistics and do such work as no clerk in that Bureau can? And is he aware that no appropriation is made in this bill to pay that class of men?

Mr. HALE. I do not believe there is any information requisite from that Bureau that the regular clerks cannot get up.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I am well satisfied there is.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, there were—ayes 36, noes 85.

So (further count not being demanded) the amendment was not agreed to.

The question recurred on Mr. CAULFIELD'S amendment; and, being taken, it was not agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. I move to insert the following as a new paragraph to come in before the next paragraph of the bill:

For expense of collecting statistics by said Bureau, $5,000.

Mr. RANDALL. That is an amendment to the paragraph on which debate has been closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand that it is an amendment to the paragraph, but a new paragraph.

Mr. RANDALL. It is a proposition to increase the force of the Bureau of Statistics, and it is an evasion of our action in cutting off debate upon that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand that the gentleman from Michigan offers this as an amendment to the paragraph in reference to the Bureau of Statistics?

Mr. CONGER. No, sir; I very carefully avoided that.

Mr. RANDALL. It relates to the Statistical Bureau, and I raise the point of order that it belongs to that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order; it is properly an amendment to the paragraph on which debate has been closed.

Mr. CONGER. I am free to say that the Chair hastens to decide the point without listening to the persons most interested in being heard; but I accept it as a part of the system.

The CHAIRMAN. What system?

Mr. CONGER. The Chair can understand.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot understand the gentleman, and therefore cannot retort.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

For Chief of Bureau, $4,500; one assistant, at $2,250; accountant, $2,000; five clerks, at $1,200 each; three copyists, at $900 each; and four laborers; in all, $20,330.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I move to amend the paragraph in line 665 by striking out the word "5" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "6;" so as to make the appropriation $4,600 as a formal amendment. This bears somewhat directly on the question on which I was speaking. I will only say that the remarks of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] will serve as a parenthesis for mine; and if he will appear again to-morrow night and do what we saw him do last night, fire and fall back and leave the rest of us to fight for five minutes additional time for debate, which he graciously comes in and appropriates to himself to-night, and in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WILSON,] I for one will work as bravely as Julius Cæsar for his benefit. [Laughter.]

Now, as I was saying when I took my seat, the course pursued on the former paragraph is perfectly consistent with the record of gentleman on the other side of the House upon this question of cheap transportation. When the resolution of Mr. Hawley was introduced in the Forty-second Congress, asking only for the collection of statistics and information on this question, of the 75 votes given in its favor only 5 came from the other side of the House. When Mr. Smith's (of Ohio) resolution came up in the Forty-third Congress, simply announcing the jurisdiction of Congress over the question, of the 172 affirmative votes only 14 came from the other side.

When the bill of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MCCRARY] came up for final action and passed by a vote of 121 in the affirmative, the old proverbial five democratic votes only were found in its favor. And now when we come here, not burdening this Congress with fruitless measures which we know cannot pass because of the political complexion of the majority of this House, and when there is coming to be a better understanding between the railroad corporations and the masses of the people, and when in defiance to that sentiment my own State has just repealed what has been styled the obnoxious "Potter law," and when we come here and ask the poor privilege of providing a sufficient number of clerks in the Bureau of Statistics to collect the facts and complete the work already begun and which is indispensable to a settlement of this question upon a just and generour basis, then gentlemen on the other side of the House with their old-time tenacity oppose the giving of even this poor pittance, and accord us ten minutes for debate and filibuster for one hour and a half to save five minutes' time, shouting themselves hoarse that the public business should go on!

Gentlemen, if you can afford it, we can. You may stifle a hearing here, but thank Heaven you cannot do it elsewhere. The people will yet be heard upon this question, and though by arbitrary power and the application of gag-rule you may shut off a half dozen gentlemen who would be glad to speak on this side of the Chamber, you may yet learn that this investment of power is a poor one, and that loaded guns for

Duck or plover,
Bear wide and kick their owners over.

[Laughter.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLACKBURN. I hope the gentleman's time will be extended.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Chairman, it is a matter of great grief and self-reproach to me that I was not side by side with the gentleman from Wisconsin last night in that tremendous struggle which agitated the Committee of the Whole for an hour and a half as to whether ten minutes or seven and a half minutes should be accorded for debate. The gentleman does not realize why it was. He says that I made a five-minute speech and then retired from the debate. I should not have done so if I had not looked about me and seen the gentleman from Wisconsin in his seat. There was nothing more needed after that.

One blast upon his bugle-horn
Were worth a thousand men.

I beg to assure him that hereafter when upon any subject I have made a five minutes' speech and where a solid debate is required and an illumination of the subject, if I see him in his seat I shall always feel at liberty to retire and leave the gentleman in possession of the field.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I forgive the gallant and generous gentleman.

Mr. HALE. I knew the gentleman would.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following:

Office of assistant treasurer at Philadelphia: For assistant treasurer, $4,500; for cashier and chief clerk, $2,430; book-keeper, $2,250; chief interest-clerk, $1,710; assistant book-keeper, $1,620; coin teller, $1,530; chief registered-interest clerk, $1,710; assistant coupon-clerk, $1,440; two assistant registered-loan clerks, one at $1,350 and one at $1,260; assistant coin teller, $1,260; receiving teller, $1,170; assistant receiving teller, $1,200; superintendent of building, $1,100; seven female counters, at $900 each; five watchmen, at $930 each; in all, $35,480.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to amend by inserting after the words "assistant coin-teller, $1,260," these words, "assistant fractional-currency clerk, $1,260."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'BRIEN. For the purpose of making a suggestion to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, I will move a formal amendment, to strike out the last word of the paragraph. It will be observed that this bill abolishes the independent treasury now located at Baltimore. I would suggest to the gentleman the propriety of moving an amendment—and I think this is the proper place for it—restoring the independent treasury at Baltimore as it now exists.

Mr. RANDALL. I am glad to say that the Committee on Appropriations are disposed to meet the views of the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. O'BRIEN,] for I am authorized by that committee to move as an independent paragraph, to follow the one now under consideration, that which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of assistant treasurer at Baltimore: For assistant treasurer, $4,500; for cashier, $2,250; for three clerks, at $1,620 each; for three clerks, at $1,260 each; for two clerks at $1,200 each; one messenger, $840; five vault watchmen, $3,600; in all, $22,230.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following:

Office of assistant treasurer at Saint Louis: For assistant treasurer, $4,500; chief clerk and teller, $2,250; assistant teller, $1,620; book-keeper, $1,350; assistant book-keeper, $1,200; messenger, $1,000; four watchmen, at $700 each; in all, $14,720.

Mr. RANDALL. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to move as additional paragraphs, to be inserted immediately after the paragraph just read, that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of assistant treasurer at Chicago: For assistant treasurer, $4,500; for cashier, $2,250; for paying teller, $1,620; for book-keeper and receiving teller, at $1,350 each; for one clerk, $1,200; for one messenger, $840, and one watchman, $720; in all, $13,830.

Office of assistant treasurer at Cincinnati: For assistant treasurer, $4,500; for cashier, $1,800; for book-keeper, $1,620; for assistant cashier, $1,350; for chief clerk and interest clerk, $1,200 each; for fractional-currency clerk, $1,000; for messenger, $600; for night watchman, $720, and two watchmen at $120 each; in all, $14,230.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

Office of assistant treasurer at New Orleans: For assistant treasurer, $4,050; for cashier, $2,250; receiving teller, $1,800; book-keeper, $1,350; porter, $900; two watchmen, at $720 each; two night watchmen, at $720 each; in all, $13,230; and so much of section 3595 of the Revised Statutes as provides for the appointment of assistant treasurers of the United States at Charleston, Baltimore, Cincinnati, and Chicago, respectively, is hereby repealed from and after June 30, 1876; and the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to discontinue the depositories at Buffalo, New York; Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; Santa Fé, New Mexico; and Tucson, Arizona.

Mr. REAGAN. I would inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] why the salary of the assistant treasurer at New Orleans is fixed at $4,050?

Mr. RANDALL. That is 10 per cent. off the present salary of $4,500.

Mr. REAGAN. I notice that the assistant treasurers at Saint Louis, Baltimore, and Chicago are given by this bill $4,500 each.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is 10 per cent. off their present salary of $5,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to amend the paragraph just read by striking out the words "Baltimore, Cincinnati, and Chicago, respectively;" also by striking out the words "assistant treasurers" and inserting in lieu the words "an assistant treasurer;" so that it will read: "So much of section 3595 of the Revised Statutes as provides for the appointment of an assistant treasurer of the United States at Charleston is hereby repealed," &c. That amendment is rendered necessary by the amendments which have just been adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOPKINS. I move to amend the paragraph just read by striking out, near the close, the words "Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania." I feel encouraged to make this motion in view of the liberality shown to-night by the Committee on Appropriations in restoring the assistant treasuries at Baltimore, Cincinnati, and Chicago. While I recognize the propriety of every section of the country contributing something to a reduction of the expenditures of the Government and while I hold myself ready to co-operate with the Committee on Appropriations and to contribute to that purpose the amount necessary to keep up this depository at Pittsburgh, yet for the sake of the general convenience of our community I would ask that that depository be retained.

The amount of business transacted there is in the aggregate about $3,000,000, and the total cost of the depository amounts to only about $\frac{1}{4}$ of 1 per cent. of that amount, a trifle compared to the advantage of the facilities which it gives to our different interests in Pittsburgh. I thought the Committee on Appropriations had in a measure agreed to this amendment, but as it has not been moved by the chairman of that committee I will move it now.

Mr. HOLMAN. By this bill the depositories at Buffalo, New York; Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; Santa Fé, New Mexico, and Tucson, Arizona, are abolished. Until 1873 all such points as Cincinnati and other cities of corresponding importance in the Northwest were simply depositories; but, by the legislation of that year and upon an appropriation bill, the office of assistant treasurer of the United States was established in those cities. The subject of the importance and necessity of these depositories is one essentially within the knowledge and official duties of the Treasurer of the United States. He has informed the Committee on Appropriations that the depositories at the places named in this paragraph may be dispensed with without any injury to the public service. It is altogether upon the opinion entertained and expressed by the Treasurer of the United States that this action was taken by the Committee on Appropriations.

I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HOPKINS] that such cities as Louisville, Kentucky, and other like cities have not even a depository; it is not found necessary for the public business that a separate office shall be kept up in such cities for that purpose. The national-banking system affords the necessary means for the only convenience and benefit that system is to the country, and the only thing that justifies the existence of such a system under the Constitution of the United States is that the various national banks are made fiscal agents of the Government, and are convenient depositories for the public funds, both for their receipt and disbursement, without any expense to the Government.

Where coin is collected, as in the case of all ports of entry—and Pittsburgh is a port of entry under what is known as the interior-port-of-entry bill—it is within the scope and power of the Treasurer, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to make provision for the coin that thus accumulates.

At Pittsburgh some $40,000 or $45,000 a year would be received as duties on imports coming directly to that port. As the gentleman from Pennsylvania is aware, Pittsburgh and Cincinnati within recent years, and Chicago and Saint Louis not so recently, have been made ports of entry. Pittsburgh, I believe, was made a port of entry but two years ago; and it is not regarded, I believe, as a point of great importance, so far as the amount of duties is concerned.

But inasmuch as we wish to avoid any unnecessary expense and to diminish as far as possible the number of employés drawing salaries from the Government, I think it ought to be sufficient that the Treasurer of the United States does not deem the perpetuation of these four depositories necessary to the public service. But I will make this proposition to the gentleman from Pennsylvania: that by unanimous consent, which I presume will be readily given, this subject shall be recurred to again if, on further correspondence with the Treasurer of the United States, it should be deemed important to the public interests that this office should be continued.

Mr. HOPKINS. The gentleman will allow me to ask whether he has any recommendation from the Treasurer in writing?

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir.

Mr. HOPKINS. Then I beg to say——

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to say that no part of this bill, I believe—especially no portion affecting the public revenues and their safe-keeping and disbursement—has been drawn without very careful interviews with the officers of the Government having charge of this subject-matter. All these provisions have been considered by the Committee on Appropriations in connection with the officers of the Government having direct connection with them. The committee has not addressed any communication to the Treasurer on this point, but he has been before the committee again and again, and this matter has been talked over very fully.

Mr. HOPKINS. Pro forma I move to strike out the last word. My reason for making the inquiry of the gentleman from Indiana was because there is some misapprehension in regard to the Treasurer's views. The Treasurer stated to me that he had been represented as recommending the abolition of this depository, but that he certainly had not done so. In regard to the duration of the existence of this depository, it was established some twenty-five years ago. True it is only a few years since Pittsburgh was made a port of entry; but, as the Treasurer said to me, "This depository is a part of the old democratic system, and if your Congress chooses to break it up, I have no objection." The port of entry I think was created in 1870.

Mr. HOLMAN. O, no; only two years ago.

Mr. HOPKINS. Probably so; but the office to which I have referred as being a proper one to abolish, thus saving as much as the expense of keeping up this depository, was created only a few years ago. However, if the gentlemen of the committee are willing to leave this matter open for future consideration, I have no objection to allowing it to pass in that way.

Mr. HOLMAN. I presume the committee have no objection to that, and I have no doubt unanimous consent will be given. Allow me one further remark. If I have said that the Treasurer of the United States recommended the abolition of these three offices, the language I used was perhaps too strong. I think the question submitted to the Treasurer, a gentleman of very great competency in this branch of the public service, upon whose opinions most perfect reliance is placed by the Committee on Appropriations and I presume by all members of the House—I think the question submitted to him was whether the offices could be dispensed with without any embarrassment to the public service, and he answered, as I recollect, in the affirmative.

Mr. RANDALL. And I desire to corroborate the statement of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] on that point.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the pro forma amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is withdrawn.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HOPKINS to strike out "Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania," in line 24, it was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES MINTS AND ASSAY OFFICES.

Office of the Director of the Mint:

For Director, $4,000; examiner, $2,000; one computer of bullion, $2,000; one clerk of class four; one clerk of class two; one clerk of class one; one translator, $1,200; one copyist, $900; one messenger; one laborer; making in all the sum of $15,760. And hereafter all salaries under the Director of the Mint at Washington and at the various mints shall be at the rates appropriated for in this act.

Mr. RANDALL. Under instruction of the Committee on Appropriations, I move to insert in the paragraph just read, after the words "one computer of bullion, $2,000," the following: "one assay clerk, $1,800;" also to strike out "one clerk of class two," and make the total $16,260.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For contingent expenses of the United States mints and assay offices, namely: For specimens of coins, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, $200; for books, balances and weights, and other incidental expenses, $700; and refining and parting of bullion shall be carried on at the mints of the United States and at the assay office, New York; and it shall be lawful to apply the moneys arising from charges collected from depositors for these operations, pursuant to law, to the defraying in full of the expenses thereof, including labor, materials, wastage, and use of machinery; but no part of the moneys otherwise appropriated for the support of the mints and assay office at New York shall be used to defray the expenses of refining and parting bullion.

Mr. WOODBURN. I wish to offer an amendment to the paragraph just read.

Mr. GARFIELD. Before any amendment is offered, I wish to raise a point of order on the last clause of this paragraph—all after the words "incidental expenses, $700," in lines 860 and 861. I submit that this is a change of the law and does not come under the new rule. It proposes to authorize what is not now authorized by law. It allows moneys coming into the Mint in the usual way of charges to be used there directly without being covered into the Treasury and without the regular annual appropriation by law. I believe it is always a wasteful method to appropriate money in that way, without a definite annual appropriation. It certainly cannot be claimed to be retrenchment to do this. The paragraph proposes a clear change of the law, without any manifest retrenchment. I believe that the operation of it will be the contrary of retrenchment. I make the point of order against the provision, and I do so because I think it ought not to be here.

Mr. HOLMAN. I should like to say one word on the question of order. The gentleman from Ohio, I think, will remember that the rule of law prescribed by this paragraph is in harmony with the legislation as it stood, I believe, up to 1868. Since then, instead of applying the revenues resulting to the mints from this separation and refining to the expenditure, direct appropriations have been made, and whatever was received by the mints for doing this mechanical process for the benefit of private parties was covered into the Treasury. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the effect of this change in the law is to retrench expenditure, is to reduce the appropriation, and therefore would seem to come within the spirit of the rule. In other words, it makes this refining process a purely private matter, paying its own way. Instead of the appropriation of three or four hundred thousand dollars a year, no greater sum can be expended than the revenues which arise from this refining by the mints.

I come right back to the proposition I started out with, that it does retrench expenditure from the public Treasury, that it does reduce appropriation from the public Treasury. If it turns out that no bullion comes into the Mint for the purpose of being refined, then there will be no expenditure. In contemplating this subject it may reasonably be assumed there may or may not be. In fact the adoption of this principle will relieve the Treasury of the appropriation of some hundreds of thousands of dollars every year.

Mr. HALE. Let me see whether I have the gentleman's idea. Does he mean to say if an amendment or proposition in the bill simply decreases the aggregate of the bill, but substitutes another and looser method, that that brings it within the rule of retrenchment and economy? I do not think the gentleman can go so far as that.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not use that form of words, because that form of words does not convey the idea. But I do say this, that the effect of this proposition is to prevent the necessity of drawing money from the Treasury.

Mr. HALE. That is drawing it in that way?

Mr. HOLMAN. No, not in that way; in no shape, manner, or form. The gentleman cannot assume there will be revenues resulting to the mints from refining, yet if money is appropriated it will be expended. The gentleman cannot say no revenues will accrue to the mints by refining—either revenues or expenditures. That cannot be assumed as a proposition of law, but it can be assumed with mathematical certainty under the provision of the pending bill, you will avoid drawing from the Treasury $300,000 a year.

Mr. HALE. Let us see how this will be in practical operation. As the gentleman from Ohio said this was the old method until a few years ago. Now the old method was changed in the interest of retrenchment and economy.

Mr. RANDALL. It has not proved to be so.

Mr. HALE. Because specific appropriations were provided instead of loose appropriations. For the experience of all men is when you particularize, itemize, and confine to specific appropriations you get along much more cheaply than if you give any one of the Departments any general fund to use without any limit or stint. But so far as this proposition being in the interest of the new rule, it seems to me it is opposed to the new rule in its scope. The theory of the gentleman would be, if in an appropriation bill for a given object $500,000 are specifically appropriated, he could by reducing that appropriation $250,000 in amount submit a proposition for a general fund to be used instead of $250,000; that therefore, as he reduced his appropriation one-half, it was in the interest of economy, and it would be subject to the rule.

I have always believed, Mr. Chairman, (if the Chair will permit me,) the rule which we adopted in the early part of the session in reference to amendments changing existing law in the interest of retrenchment and economy comprehended simply patent reduction, patent retrenchment, patent reform in that direction.

Mr. HOLMAN. I agree to that.

Mr. HALE. It must not rest on speculation; it must not rest on the say-so of the mover that what he proposes is economical, nor must it rest on the say-so of any committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. I agree to that.

Mr. HALE. But it must be a patent reduction of a specific appropriation.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman allow me a single moment. Now I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the estimates for this purpose, that is, for the purpose of refining, are two in number, one for $313,210, and the other for $332,000, making in all about $645,000. These are the estimates if we retain the old system, the system in vogue for the last seven years, that which is proscribed by the law. If we adopt the system in existence for seven years we will appropriate $645,000, and we will appropriate that whether we receive revenues resulting from this mintage or not. But as this provision now stands in this bill we will make no appropriation of $645,000, and this refining will be made a purely private matter at the mints of the United States. The citizen takes his bullion there and it is refined, and he pays for it. That is all there is about it. It is simply alienating the Government of the United States from a business that is in its very nature private, and does not belong to matters of public concern any more than other private business.

The effect, therefore, following the very argument the gentleman has submitted, is that anyhow you avoid the appropriation of $645,000 and leave this private enterprise to pay its own way.

Mr. GARFIELD. The rule under which we are acting does not say retrenchment of "appropriations," but retrenchment of "expenditures." When the gentleman from Indiana and I had a little controversy a few evenings ago about retrenchment in the Post-Office Department, he insisted on figures which counted as expenditures $37,000,000, in which were included all the revenues of the Post-Office Department. I stated I would be glad if the law was changed so as to cover all that money into the Treasury, so that we should have to appropriate all the money out of the Treasury; but the law was such that we had only to appropriate the deficiency. Now we have a case where we appropriate the whole amount needed in our judgment for the refining and parting of bullion, a thing which the Government of the United States has for years thought it ought to attend to; and all we have charged for that we have returned into the Treasury, so that there flow into the Treasury the total charges received from depositors, and we have appropriated out of the Treasury the cost of doing the work. As a matter of fact, we make a little out of it every year. We receive more into the Treasury for this service than we pay out. But if the law now proposed by the gentleman is enacted, they are entitled to use all the receipts from refining and parting for meeting the expenses, and there will come no residuum into the Treasury at all.

We shall therefore have the appearance in this bill of not making the usual amount of appropriation. But we shall have the reality of giving up the whole of this receipt from the parting and refining of bullion and have no residuary amount coming into the Treasury at all. I say it is plainly on the face of the record not a retrenchment of expenditures, although it may be an apparent cutting down of appropriations.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman's argument is purely speculative, while the question whether or not $645,000 shall go from the Treasury is an absolute fact about which there is no dispute. You avoid drawing that sum of money from the Treasury by the adoption of this rule and leave this private business to private enterprise, as far as may be consistent with reasonable accommodation between private establishments for refining and this public establishment.

Mr. HALE. If the Chair will allow me, I will suggest an illustration. The receipts in this case from what the gentleman from Indiana refers to as a private enterprise at present go into the Treasury. Let me give an illustration which, it seems to me, is exactly in point. It may be it is not; I am trying to get at the truth in this matter.

Take the law at present in regard to the sale of Government property. Everything received from this source goes into the Treasury and swells the receipts. Now take a navy-yard—and I ask the gentleman from Indiana to give his attention to this, as it seems to me a case exactly in point—take an appropriation for a navy-yard. We appropriate for a particular navy-yard $500,000 in a gross sum per year. Under the theory of the gentleman we can this year appropriate $250,000, and provide that a portion of the navy-yard may be sold and that the avails of that sale may be used for the expenses of the navy-yard. By doing that you undoubtedly reduce your appropriation, but you allow the expenses of the yard to go upon a fund that is at present turned into the Treasury; and instead of its being in the interest of retrenchment it puts the expenditures on a looser and wider footing. It seems to me that is an illustration in point.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the proposition of the gentleman cannot be regarded as an illustration in point. This is a matter of expenditures from the Treasury, and the only question is whether the $645,000 shall be taken from the Treasury or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule on the point of order. The rule adopted this session as Rule 120 reads, as amended, as follows:

> No appropriation shall be reported in such general appropriation bills, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress, nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

The Chair would certainly hold that this is germane to this section of the bill. The Chair cannot see but what this clause tends toward economy, toward retrenchment. It does not add to the appropriation certainly. It takes no money from the Treasury. It prevents money from going from the Treasury. The Chair will therefore overrule the point of order made by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.]

Mr. GARFIELD. I regret the decision of the Chair, because it seems to me that it would involve us in great difficulty hereafter.

Mr. RANDALL. The country will not regret it.

Mr. HOLMAN. It has been the law for fifty years.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to strike out the paragraph upon which I raised the point of order. I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that it has been the purpose for the last six years—yes, for the last eight years—to work in one direction, namely: as far as possible to bring all the appropriations of the Government under the annual review and supervision of Congress; to have no great operations by the Treasury hidden from the annual inspection and inquest of this body.

Sir, when I first occupied the position of chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, a little more than four years ago, more than half of all the expenditures out of the Treasury never came under the review of Congress at all. They were under the head of permanent appropriations, operations going on by force of general law, whereby the Department expended what they saw fit under a general provision of law; and the Committee on Appropriations set their face as flint against that policy except in the matter of the interest on the public debt and the payment of a few items that were fixed and certain and could not be more or less. But wherever we found expenditures like that, for instance, for printing the national greenbacks and fractional currency and bonds that had gone on to the extent of three or four millions of dollars a year and the employment of twelve hundred persons employed in the Treasury to carry on this work, their salaries determined by the Secretary's will and discretion, the number of persons employed determined by his will and discretion, all that we cut off and put it into our bills, annually swelling them to the amount of more than $2,000,000 apparently in those appropriation bills, but really cutting down the expenditures.

Now we come to a case like that; all the operations of the departments of refining and parting bullion are now carried on under the rigid inspection, not only of the Mint officers, but of this House. We have said for years how much money we were willing to appropriate to carry on this great and important business, and in providing for it we determined how many persons might be employed; we fixed the rates at which it might be done, and all the contingent expenses of the mints that relate to the refining and parting of bullion. We have had under that system the control of all of these matters everywhere. Of course it added $500,000 or $600,000 to the appropriation bills to do it, but now our friends on the other side propose to take the back track on that question; they propose, for the sake of an apparent reduction of $400,000 or $500,000 in the appropriation bill, that we shall throw ourselves back into the old method and say that all these large operations—which are certainly going to be very large now in view of the large amount of gold and silver bullion—shall be carried on wholly between the officers of the mints and the depositors. The number of people that shall be brought into our public offices and the amount they may be paid in this business of parting and refining bullion and the number of persons that shall be employed in this business are no longer to be left under our control. The amount of contingent funds for all purposes are no longer to be supervised by us. If this provision prevails, the work is to be carried on in the old way that the printing of the national bonds and fractional currency was carried on two years ago.

Now I hope, sir, that we shall pause and reflect seriously before we take this very unfortunate action. For instance, we have tried for two or three years past to undo what we consider the great mischief that results from a permanent appropriation of $5,000,000 for the collection of the customs, and there are $5,000,000 now going annually without our supervision into the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury to pay just such salaries as he pleases, and employ as many people as he pleases to collect the customs.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly, if my time will permit.

Mr. HOLMAN. Do you think that the true policy of this Government is to be engaged in a business such as refining bullion, which is a private business in its character, a mere private enterprise? Do you think it is a proper matter for the Government to be engaged in?

Mr. GARFIELD. If the gentleman raises that question, it is an open question. If we ought to abolish this policy, why do it; but so long as it is the public policy to carry it on as it has been for half a century, as long as we do it at all, let us have it under the supervision of Congress, and not have the work done in a corner without our inspection.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall ask to have read the fifth and fourteenth sections of the act of March 3, 1853, so as to indicate what has been our policy for a long time past. This has been regarded as a mere private business, and I will say to the gentleman from Ohio that the only object of incorporating this provision in the bill is, on the suggestion of the Director of the Mint, to prevent the effect of the absence of competition, to prevent, in other words, for the present, a monopoly in this business, which would be injurious to the citizens who have bullion to be refined.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman will allow me to occupy the residue of his time?

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to have the sections of the law which I have indicated read.

Mr. GARFIELD. I only wish to use the remainder of his time, now he is through.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to have read the sections of the law of 1853 which I have indicated.

Mr. GARFIELD. I thought the gentleman was through.

The Clerk read the following:

SEC. 5. That when private establishments shall be made to refine gold bullion, the Secretary of the Treasury, if he shall deem them capable of executing such work, is hereby authorized and required to limit the amount thereof which shall be refined in the Mint at Philadelphia from quarter to quarter, and to reduce the same progressively as such establishments shall be extended or multiplied, so as eventually, and as soon as may be, to exclude refining from the Mint, and to require that every deposit of gold bullion made therein for coinage shall be adapted to said purpose without need of refining: Provided, That no advances in coin shall be made upon bullion after this regulation shall be carried into effect, except upon bullion refined as herein prescribed.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Clerk need not read the fourteenth section; I can state its substance. It contemplates the payment to the Government of the simple expenses incurred in the process of refining, making it a source neither of profit nor of loss to the Government. And that is the spirit of the provision incorporated in the pending bill, which is intended for the purpose I have mentioned; not that the members of the Committee on Appropriations, or a majority of them, believe that the Government should be engaged in the strictly private business of refining bullion any more than in any other private business, but for the purpose of preventing combinations being formed in consequence of the small number of private refineries in the country, both on the Atlantic and on the Pacific, which would run up the price so high as to operate to the prejudice of the persons engaged in that branch of industry.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to strike out the last word. The point made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is quite aside from the subject of this discussion. It makes no difference whether this is a private business or not in its origin; if we still continue it in the law, I insist that we ought to continue it under the wise and judicious rule of keeping it an open matter over which the House shall have supervision and perfect control. Every reason which can be given why this should be put in this shape may be given for going back to the old system of printing our bonds and greenbacks under an arrangement with which Congress had nothing to do.

I tell you that you can by just such legislation as this reduce your appropriations $75,000,000, but you will not reduce your expenditures by that means. You can make your annual appropriation bills $75,000,000 less by a permanent arrangement by which the officers of the Treasury Department may make whatever expenditures they may deem necessary and report at the end of the year. In this way you may get the ostensible credit of reducing your appropriation bills, but you would obtain a wretchedly bad practice in regard to the protection of your revenue.

The report of the Mint shows that on one single item alone, parting charges, there were charges amounting to $188,720.68; and there are a number of other charges amounting to close on a quarter of a million of dollars. In all these cases there is a small profit, the profit increasing as the business increases every year, which comes in and makes a residuum of profit to go into the Treasury.

Now, if you are going to give up that business, then strike out the whole of this provision; that would be a fair proposition. But I insist that so long as we do keep this in operation, so long as the Government does supervise it at all, it ought to come into our annual appropriation bills and be subject to the annual inspection of Congress. I say this in no party sense; for it is a thing I have been trying to preach to the House for four years past. In so far as we succeeded in doing that, I believe we have accomplished a great reform.

I appeal to the gentleman in charge of this bill that he does not now set the example of starting the plan of leaving out of the appropriation bills any necessary operation of the Government, solely to have it appear in another form on the balance-sheet when we come to count up the actual expenditures of the Government. I earnestly appeal, without the slightest regard to party feeling, that this proposition shall not prevail, but that the Committee on Appropriations will bring in a proper appropriation to meet this case, and not allow to be revived what I think is a very vicious and unwise method of legislation.

Mr. RANDALL. This matter of parting and refining bullion is a business with which the Government of the United States ought to have very little to do; certainly only enough to keep up a competition, as it were, to prevent extortion upon the bullion owners being practiced by private refiners. This provision was prepared after consultation with two of the members from California in this House. I think it was written by one of them, [Mr. PIPER,] and it meets the indorsement of the Director of the Mint The Committee of the Whole is entirely safe in sustaining the Committee on Appropriations in the adoption of this proposition. I hope, therefore, that it will not be struck out.

Mr. GARFIELD. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I renew it. Last year I had occasion to visit the mint in San Francisco, and I made pretty thorough inspection and inquiry in regard to the matter. This examination was suggested to me by General La Grange, the superintendent of the mint in that city, who, I take pleasure in saying, is one of the best and most accurate business men that ever had charge of that mint.

The proposition now under consideration is in the interest of miners, and in the interest of business men. If this clause be struck out, then the private assay offices will control the assaying, refining, and separating of the ores, and we must pay whatever charges they may see fit to fix. It is in the interest of the business men of our country that we should maintain this assay office. I find, by examining the reports, that these offices practically sustain themselves. I find that last year the San Francisco mint earned about $160,000; the Philadelphia Mint nearly $380,000. The latter establishment came within $7,000 of paying all the expenses of assaying, refining, and dividing the bullion. I find that for the last four months the earnings of the assay office in San Francisco have amounted to $57,823.16, an average of $14,000 per month. I can see no good reason why these superintendents should not retain the money that may be earned at the Mint or assay office and use it for carrying on the establishment and defraying expenses as provided in the bill now under consideration.

On the earnest suggestion, as I have said, of General La Grange, I agreed to come here and recommend this proposition. In the early part of this session I made the recommendation to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and was seconded by my colleague [Mr. PIPER] from San Francisco. We have examined this matter. The Director of the Mint favors the proposition, and I can see no objection to retaining the provision as recommended by the Committee on Appropriations. I hope that it will be sustained.

When one gentleman here says that this is a loose way of doing business, he has certainly very little faith in the sound business men of our country; for I assure him he can find an account, item for item, to the value of a cent, of all the earnings, appropriations, and expenditures connected with the mint at San Francisco. I do not know how it may be with other mints, because I have not had occasion to examine them; but I do know that in San Francisco, where we probably assay and coin more bullion than in any other part of the country, the superintendent of the mint is one of the strictest and most accurate business men we have ever had; and I have no fear that every dollar earned will be properly and faithfully expended by this honest and upright official. I hope this provision of the bill may prevail.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to correct the gentleman from California [Mr. LUTTRELL] on a single point. He said, as I understood him, that this clause in the bill is approved by the Director of the Mint.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I so understand from gentlemen here.

Mr. WOODBURN. I refer gentlemen to the report of this committee, in which they will find a letter signed by Dr. Linderman, in which he favors a direct appropriation by the Government for this purpose.

Mr. FOSTER. The Director of the Mint favors this if he cannot get anything else.

Mr. WOODBURN. He says that he is satisfied with this provision of the bill, provided the committee is not willing to make an appropriation.

Several MEMBERS. Let the letter be read.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I have now heard the statements of gentlemen, and I wish to say——

Mr. WOODBURN. Will the gentleman permit me to read extracts from the letter of Dr. Linderman?

Mr. LUTTRELL. I understand what the purport of that letter is: that he recommends an appropriation. But since this matter was suggested by the superintendent of the mint at San Francisco, by my colleague [Mr. PIPER] and myself, expressing on this subject the wishes of General La Grange—since that time, as I understand, the Director of the Mint approves this proposition.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us have no misunderstanding about this matter. I understood from the gentleman from California [Mr. PIPER] that this amendment had been submitted to the Director of the Mint and was satisfactory to him. The gentleman from California [Mr. PIPER] appeared before the committee, and the result of the conference was the preparation of this amendment over night, after consultation with the Director of the Mint.

Mr. WOODBURN. With the permission of the gentleman from California [Mr. LUTTRELL] and the chairman of the committee, [Mr. RANDALL,] I desire to read an extract from a letter from Dr. Linderman.

Mr. PIPER. The facts are these: I desired to have a direct appropriation for this purpose of refining and parting bullion. I supposed that the committee was going to provide for appropriating the amount asked for by the Director of the Mint. I had no other alternative but to accept that or nothing. They did kindly say to me that I might introduce the proposition as an amendment when the bill came before the House, but I preferred to take something from them for fear I should get nothing here.

And I say now, Mr. Chairman, that I am willing to accept this; that I will stand by the arrangement; but I think the other was the proper business way: the appropriation directly out of the Treasury and to allow the moneys received for this purpose at the mints to go directly into the Treasury.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. PAGE. I renew the amendment. Now the statement made by my colleague who has just taken his seat——

Mr. RANDALL. Did not the gentleman write that amendment himself?

Mr. PIPER. I wrote it under coercion. The committee gave me till eleven o'clock the next day to do it. I did write the amendment as the committee told me that was all I could get. I say that I accept it and am willing to vote for it under the circumstances. I want, however, to tell the truth about the matter.

Mr. RANDALL. All I wish to say is that you wrote it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] has the floor and will proceed.

Mr. PAGE. The understanding of my colleague who has just taken his seat is precisely my understanding of the matter when it was in the Committee on Appropriations. When it was being discussed before that committee it was understood they did not intend to make any direct appropriation out of the Treasury for parting this bullion. I spoke to the chairman of the committee myself, and said that General La Grange was in the city and had stated to me if the committee did not make any direct appropriation out of the Treasury for the parting of this bullion, they would get along the best way they could if the committee would allow them to use the money collected for parting and refining this bullion. I did state that fact to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. In justice to the Committee on Appropriations, I admit I said that General La Grange did say to me if the committee did not choose to make an appropriation directly from the Treasury—and of course both he and Dr. Linderman preferred a direct appropriation, as it had been done for years past—but if the committee failed to do that, they were willing to accept the proposition to allow them to use the moneys received for parting and refining.

Now, as much has been said about Dr. Linderman, I wish to read an extract from his letter:

I am unofficially informed that the private refining works in San Francisco will not be enlarged. Refining to a large extent will consequently be necessary at the mint refinery. The depositor pays the expense of refining. If the committee is not willing to advance the funds for the purpose, let it insert a clause in the legislative bill authorizing the application or use of the funds derived from the refining charge to the full payment of the expenses of the operation. I prefer a direct appropriation, and turning the amount derived from the charges into the Treasury of the United States, but will be content either way.

Respectfully,

H. R. L.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hold in my hand the report of the superintendent of the Mint for, I believe, the last fiscal year. It seems to be the fiscal year preceding the free coinage of gold. I find the charges for parting and other charges, which embrace refining I presume at Philadelphia, were $4,562.94; at San Francisco, $51,035.34; and at Carson, $50,067.41. The appropriation asked for this year, as I have already mentioned, is $645,000. Looking over these returns, it seems the mints are run at considerable expense over the receipts. For instance, the earnings at the Philadelphia Mint were $379,672.62, while the expenditures were $389,593.94; being an excess of expenditures over receipts of $9,921.32. At San Francisco the earnings were $159,319.87, and the expenditures $387,249.69; being an excess of expenses over receipts of $227,929.82. At Carson, the earnings were $106,004.03, and the expenditures $232,016.29, or an excess of expenditures over earnings of $126,012.26.

Now I submit, Mr. Chairman, the tendency of this evidence, as far as it goes, is to indicate the propriety of throwing this business as far as practicable into the hands of private parties with the exception simply of coinage; that is, assaying as well as refining. Of course, as to the coinage, that must be done by the Government; but these other enterprises, purely private in their character, should be left as far as possible to private parties. And such is the purpose and spirit of this provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on Mr. GARFIELD'S amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will modify my amendment by striking out and inserting an appropriation of $250,000 for parting and refining.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 64, noes 104.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mint at Philadelphia:

For salaries of the superintendent, $4,000; for the assayer, melter and refiner, coiner and engraver, four in all, at $2,700 each; the assistant assayer, assistant coiner, and assistant melter and refiner, at $1,900 each; cashier and chief clerk, $2,250; book-keeper, deposit clerk, and weigh clerk, at $1,800 each; and two clerks at $1,600 each; in all, $31,350.

Mr. RANDALL. I am directed by the committee to move to strike out the word "and" in line 876, and in line 877 after the word "dollars" to insert the word "each," and to make the total $33,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For incidental and contingent expenses, $25,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I am directed by the committee, on page 37, line 844, to strike out "20" and insert "30;" so it will read: "For incidental and contingent expenses, $35,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. I desire to propose an amendment to the preceding paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to going back?

Mr. RANDALL. I cannot agree to go back.

Mr. FOSTER. It is to increase the pay of laborers in the Philadelphia Mint. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. We cannot go back. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL. I wish you could employ more of them.

Mr. FOSTER. I ask to make my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to going back?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOSTER. I move in line 882 to increase the appropriation $50,000; so it will read "for wages of workmen and adjusters, $250,000." I find the amount appropriated for this purpose and expended last year was $250,000. The effect of this amendment is simply to reduce the pay of the laborers employed at the Mint. The policy of the committee has been not to reduce the pay of laborers; and wherever the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] could find a laborer with a specific salary attached in an appropriation he has in no case reduced it; but wherever he could catch a lot of laborers that were appropriated for in bulk he has been willing in all cases to reduce their pay. That is simply the case here. It amounts in effect to a reduction in the pay of the laborers in Philadelphia at this Mint.

Mr. RANDALL. It is not so at all. [Laughter.] I would not like to be rude——

Mr. FOSTER. I knew you were good-natured there.

Mr. RANDALL. I would not like to be rude, but the gentleman really knows it is not so. The reduction there is produced by a reduction in the number of the laborers and the increase which we deemed to be right of the hours of labor, and in addition the reduction is further warranted by the fact that they will receive the benefit of the plan of refining that was adopted a few moments ago. So that the Mint at Philadelphia has not been struck severely at all, neither was it my wish that it should be. I wanted to do exactly with the Philadelphia Mint as was done with all other mints, for I must be just, even though my own people suffer.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mint at San Francisco, California:

For salaries of superintendent, $4,000; assayer, melter and refiner, and coiner, at $2,700 each; chief clerk and cashier, $2,500; three clerks, at $1,600 each; in all, $19,400.

Mr. PAGE. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I have an amendment to offer to this paragraph from the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from California after the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has offered his amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I offer the following amendment:

In line 891, after the word "dollars," insert the word "each;" so that it will read: "Chief clerk and cashier, $2,500 each;" and make the total $21,900.

Mr. PAGE. That is the amendment I desired to offer.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For wages of workmen and adjusters, $225,000; and hereafter no laborer or subordinate workman, or employé of any grade below the first assistant to the chief, (which first assistant shall in no case receive exceeding $7 per diem,) of any of the operative departments of this mint, who now receives a per diem compensation of more than $6, shall be paid exceeding the sum of $6 for each working-day; and no operative, fireman or helper, laborer or watchman, who now receives a per diem compensation of more than $3 and less than $5, shall be paid exceeding $3 per day, and only for actual service.

Mr. PIPER. I offer the following amendment:

In line 894, strike out "$225,000" and insert "$275,000;" so that it will read: "for wages of workmen and adjusters, $275,000."

The question being taken on the amendment, it was not agreed to.

Mr. PAGE. I wanted to say a few words on that amendment before the question was taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can offer a formal amendment.

Mr. PAGE. Then I move pro forma to insert "$227,500."

I hold in my hand a letter from the superintendent of the mint at San Francisco, in which he states emphatically that he cannot run the mint on the amount proposed by the committee. The committee appropriated last year $275,000 for the wages of workmen and adjusters. The mint at San Francisco coined last year $31,000,000. The amount provided for the pay of the officers in San Francisco is something over $19,000, while at Philadelphia it is over $31,000, and the Mint at Philadelphia coined only about $9,000,000 last year.

Mr. Chairman, it is reported by the superintendent of the Mint and it is believed by the Director of the Mint, Dr. Linderman, and has been so stated in his report, that the mint at San Francisco this year will increase its working capacity nearly one-third more than the year previous. I ask this committee if they propose to strike out $50,000 from the appropriations made last year; and I believe there was a deficiency of some $19,000 or $20,000 appropriated for the previous year at the short session of Congress.

I desire to call the attention of the committee to this part of the letter of the superintendent of the Mint:

I have to ask, therefore, that the sum of $94,000 be appropriated for the coinage of gold and trade dollars, and that the sum of $120,000 be appropriated to defray the actual cost of manufacturing subsidiary silver coins, of which last-named sum $50,000 should be added to the appropriation for wages of workmen, and $70,000 to the appropriation for contingent expenses, making the total appropriation for wages of workmen $275,000, and for contingent expenses $164,000.

In the expenditure of the moneys allowed for contingent expenses the greatest economy and care will be observed in the purchase of supplies; not a dollar will be wasted, and should any surplus remain at the close of the fiscal year, it will be covered into the Treasury.

I hope the amendment offered by my colleague will be carried. I should like to have a vote taken again on it. I therefore withdraw the formal amendment, and renew the amendment of my colleague making the amount $275,000 instead of $225,000.

Mr. RANDALL. The same reasons which prompted the committee in reducing the Philadelphia appropriation applied in this case. The disparity which the gentleman speaks of as between Philadelphia and San Francisco arises from the minting of minor coins, nickels, at Philadelphia; while at San Francisco I think there is no coinage of a smaller denomination than ten cents.

Mr. PAGE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania why it should cost more to run a mint where only $9,000,000 are coined than a mint where $31,000,000 are coined?

Mr. RANDALL. The reason of the difference is to be found in the enormous work on the minor coins, five-cent and three-cent pieces.

Mr. PAGE. The mint at San Francisco coined $230,000 of these minor coins.

Mr. RANDALL. That is a very small sum.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will allow me a moment, I will say that in appropriating for the mints it is a thing we really should be glad of when there is a good reason for an increase. I always regard it as a sign of returning prosperity in the country when our mints are doing a good business.

Mr. RANDALL. And so I should if we were circulating the coin.

Mr. GARFIELD. I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania has helped to get a part of it into circulation by his late silver bill, and I hope we shall be doing all we can in the way of coining gold as well as silver. I think it is an exceedingly unwise thing for us to cripple in any way the appropriations for carrying on this business. It is a good sign if we have to make a considerable appropriation for the mints, and I think any reasonable request from the Department for a larger appropriation—and I believe they are reasonable in their requests—should be agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] will bear in mind the fact that the parting and refining of bullion is a very important industry connected with the mints, especially at San Francisco as well as at Carson City, and that the ground on which it is placed by this bill, which is as near an approach as may be to doing the work by private industry, greatly reduces the necessity for this appropriation. The gentleman will see that all the large sums hereafter appropriated to meet the demands of this labor will be to a very considerable extent met—I mean the labor in connection with the parting and refining—by the simple process of making that branch of industry sustain itself.

Mr. PAGE. This is a separate and distinct question, and has no connection whatever with melting and refining at all, or with the parting of bullion.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why, certainly it has.

Mr. PAGE. Not at all.

Mr. PIPER. I am very much surprised indeed that the Committee on Appropriations took this economical view of this subject.

Now, sir, there is no man in this House who is more economical than I am. I am so economical that I walk up, more than a mile from my residence, to this Capitol to save the five-cent car ticket. [Laughter.] It seems to me that the committee certainly do not understand this matter. It seems to me, sir, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] has said, that the coining of money, real money, should be fostered and ample appropriations made for it, as we are now taking the first steps toward specie payment. I assert here that the appropriation of $275,000 asked for is only sufficient to carry on the work at the mint at San Francisco, and I think myself that it is hardly sufficient. I think that the appropriation should be at least $300,000. Stop the mint at San Francisco and where are we to get our circulating medium to move the vast crops now growing in the valleys and on the plains of California? I hope that the gentlemen of this House will understand this subject, and do us justice and give us this appropriation. It is recommended by Dr. Linderman and by the superintendent of the mint at San Francisco, and I have here a letter from Dr. Linderman stating that $275,000 is the very least amount that will suffice to carry on this department of the mint. Gentlemen, I plead with you to vote us this amount of money.

Mr. FOSTER. I move to strike out the last word. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the figures of the cost of running this mint have not been given to the House. The expenditures last year amounted to $277,000. The Director of the Mint recommends an appropriation of $313,000, and all there is in this matter is one of two things: we must either interfere with the business interests of the people of California and the Pacific slope or reduce the wages of the laboring-men employed in this work of coinage. The idea suggested by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] of an indefinite appropriation has nothing whatever to do with this question.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why, certainly it has.

Mr. FOSTER. Not in the least.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman is certainly mistaken.

Mr. FOSTER. This is for coinage; the other applies to the assay office and this to coinage.

Mr. HOLMAN. This is for the general purposes of labor in connection with the mint, and the gentleman knows that this mint is connected directly with the assay office and the refining establishment, and the appropriation is made in gross.

Mr. PIPER. The gentleman must know that the refining and parting of bullion has nothing whatever to do with the coining of money.

Mr. GARFIELD. Coinage is free.

Mr. FOSTER. That is another subject.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does not the gentleman see that this is an appropriation for the wages of workmen and adjusters at the mint at San Francisco?

Mr. GARFIELD. The adjusters are the men who see that the coin is of the right weight.

Mr. HOLMAN. But this provides for workmen.

Mr. GARFIELD. The workmen who run the machinery.

Mr. LUTTRELL. Will the gentleman tell me how much was appropriated for this purpose last year?

Mr. HOLMAN. Three hundred and eighty-six thousand seven hundred dollars was appropriated last year and that embraced all the work, just as this provision does.

Mr. PAGE. I hope the committee will now permit a vote to be taken on the amendment to insert $275,000.

The question was taken on the amendment; and on a division there were—ayes 89, noes 78.

Mr. HOLMAN called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. PIPER were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 77, noes 77.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair votes in the negative.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. PIPER. I move to strike out "$225,000" and insert "$280,000."

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 67, noes 90.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. PIPER. I now move to strike out "$225,000" and insert "$270,000."

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 85, noes 87.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. PIPER called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. PIPER and Mr. RANDALL were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 68, noes 77.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I move to amend by striking out "$225,000" and inserting "$250,000." I ask only a minute or two to speak to my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is entitled to five minutes under the rule.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I believe it will be but justice to the mint at San Francisco to increase this appropriation to $250,000. I hope the House will give us that much, for I assure gentlemen that not one dollar of it will be expended except for the benefit of the whole people. We will this year coin in the San Francisco mint more than $50,000,000 if we are given the proper facilities for so doing. Unless we coin our bullion there we must ship it to Europe to be coined. The question with you, gentlemen of the House, is whether you will allow our American workmen to coin our own bullion, or compel us to ship it to Europe and have it coined in foreign countries.

I appeal to you to-night. I have examined this question carefully; I have spent days and days in the mint at San Francisco, and know how operations are conducted there. I would like have $300,000 appropriated for this purpose; but I believe we may get along with $250,000, and I hope you will give us that sum.

Mr. HOLMAN. I simply wish to call the attention of the Committee of the Whole to a single fact. The estimates for this branch of our public service for the next fiscal year are simply enormous. The amount appropriated last year was $386,700. The estimates for the coming fiscal year are $670,900; being an increase over the appropriations last year of $284,000 for this mint at San Francisco.

Now compare the operations of the mint at San Francisco with the amount appropriated for and the work done at Philadelphia. The amount appropriated for this purpose for the Philadelphia Mint is $259,000; and the number of pieces coined there——

Mr. PAGE. State the amount coined.

Mr. HOLMAN. The amount is not the important item, but the number of pieces coined. The number of pieces coined at Philadelphia was 26,394,958; at San Francisco the number of pieces coined was only 9,604,000. There were nearly three times as many pieces coined at Philadelphia as at San Francisco; while, as gentlemen know, the expense of coinage bears no relation to the amount in value of the coins, but to the number of pieces coined. Yet by this bill we are appropriating only $259,000 for the Mint at Philadelphia, while we appropriate $325,000 for the mint at San Francisco, while the mint at San Francisco coins only about one-third of the number of pieces that are coined at Philadelphia. There is no use in talking about there being any economy in the mint at San Francisco with these figures. It is well known to the country that the expense of living in San Francisco at this time——

Mr. PAGE. Will the gentleman state what is the difference in the actual cost of coining a piece of money in San Francisco and in Philadelphia?

Mr. PIPER. A twenty-dollar piece, for instance.

Mr. PAGE. The difference in cost of coining a piece of money in each place, no matter what its value may be.

Mr. HOLMAN. I cannot state the difference.

Mr. PAGE. I can state the difference: it costs less at San Francisco than it does at Philadelphia.

Mr. HOLMAN. The cost of living in San Francisco is not materially greater than it is in Philadelphia; yet by this bill we are virtually giving more than twice as much to San Francisco as we are giving to Philadelphia for coining an equal number of pieces.

Mr. PIPER. An equal number of pieces? That is a most remarkable statement. A nickel is a piece, is it not?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, it is.

Mr. PIPER. Does it cost as much to refine the bullion for a nickel piece as it does for a twenty-dollar gold piece?

Mr. HOLMAN. Ah, refining! My friend said that refining was not to be taken into the account.

Mr. PIPER. Refining bullion at Philadelphia is taken into the account.

Mr. HOLMAN. The fact is that, in addition to paying out the money received at the San Francisco mint, it is proposed to appropriate this large additional sum, making a much larger appropriation for this year than that made even last year, and vastly larger, as gentlemen will see at once, than has been made for similar work at Philadelphia.

Mr. LANE. Does it cost as much to coin and adjust a nickel as it does a twenty-dollar gold piece?

Mr. HOLMAN. I suppose not.

Mr. RANDALL. It costs nearly as much to coin a half dollar as to coin a twenty-dollar gold piece.

Mr. LUTTRELL. We are perfectly willing to give them all they want at Philadelphia.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on this amendment.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. LUTTRELL, it was not agreed to, there being—ayes 68, noes 95.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. RANDALL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. COX reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BANNING. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at ten o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned till Saturday next.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr BANNING: The petition of P. E. Holcomb, retired, that he receive the pay of a retired major United States Army, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BRADLEY: The petition of 9 citizens of Saginaw, Michigan, against the Post-Office Department distributing envelopes, newspaper-wrappers, and postal cards throughout the country at a price less than cost, to the detriment of the dealers in such articles, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. DURHAM: The petition of the officers and members of Mount Zion church, Madison County, Kentucky, for compensation for damage done to said church during the late war, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. EDEN: The petition of Cephas Haney and 96 other citizens of Moultrie County, Illinois, for the repeal of the resumption act and the retirement of national-bank notes and the substitution of legal-tender notes interconvertible with a bond bearing a low rate of interest, to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. FOSTER: The petition of William McWhood, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KASSON: The petition of E. N. Curl, Tac Hussey, J. S. Carter, and others, against the Government printing stationery for sale, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. LAPHAM: The petition of citizens of Geneva, New York, for such legislation as will relieve them from injurious competition by the Government in the manufacture, transportation, and sale of stamped envelopes, newspaper-wrappers, and printed-request envelopes, to the same committee.

By Mr. MAGOON: The petition of P. B. Barlow and 38 citizens of La Fayette County, Wisconsin, that the present duty on flaxseed and linseed-oil be maintained, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. McMAHON: The petition of S. S. Collins, B. F. Adams, and other citizens of Darke County, Ohio, for the repeal of the resumption law, against a tax on tea and coffee, against national banks, and in favor of legal-tender money, to the same committee.

By Mr. OLIVER: The petition of 400 citizens of Northwestern Iowa, that the law be so amended as to permit the McGregor and Missouri River Railroad to form a junction with the Sioux City and Saint Paul Railroad on or near the forty-fifth parallel of latitude, to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

By Mr. PAYNE: The petition of J. H. Merrill, for relief from a special tax in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

By Mr. PLATT: The petition of citizens of Owego, New York, that Congress convey to the city of Brooklyn the strip of land and water between Washington avenue and the navy-yard, Brooklyn, New York, for the purpose of establishing a public market, to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. RICE: The petition of William Silver, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TEESE: The petition of manufacturers and dealers in distilled spirits in Newark, New Jersey, for the definition of the powers and duties of officers of the internal revenue and to further provide for the collection of the tax on distilled spirits, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. THOMAS: The petition of 35 business men and firms of Baltimore, Maryland, against any change in the tariff at this time, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. WALSH: Memorial of soldiers of the late war residing in Frostburgh, Maryland, and vicinity, in favor of the equalization of bounties, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi: The petition of Michael McGuire, for a rehearing of his case in the matter of his claim rejected by the southern claims commission, to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, the petition of Thomas L. Garrett, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of Joseph A. Weatherly, of similar import, to the same committee.

By Mr. WILLIAMS, of Alabama: A paper relating to the establishment of a post-route from Rutledge, Crenshaw County, to Troy, Pike County, Alabama, by way of New Providence and Goshen Hill, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. WOODWORTH: The petition of James Cartwright and 115 other citizens of Youngstown, Ohio, that existing tariff laws may not be disturbed, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, April 15, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of Thursday last was read and approved.

JOURNAL CLERK OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. WHITE. I rise to a question of privilege in regard to the character of an officer of this House, and submit the preamble and resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the following has appeared in the public press:

"WASHINGTON, D. C., March 15, 1876.

"SIR: A bill is now pending before Congress which proposes to pay every non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, wagoner, private soldier, sailor, and marine (except substitutes) who faithfully served as such in the military service of the United States, and was honorably discharged from such service, the sum of eight and one-third dollars a month for all the time actually so served between April 12, 1861 and May 9, 1865. In case of death of the person before described, the bounty is to be paid to the widow, if alive and not remarried, but, if there is no widow or she has remarried, then to the children. In computing the bounty due any person there shall be deducted the amount of bounty heretofore received by said person from the United States. The bill declares that no agent or attorney shall receive a sum greater than $10 for the prosecution of any claim under the provisions of this act and that no soldier shall sell or transfer his claim.

"As the records under your control readily give you the names of soldiers in your town or ward, I invite you to accept the provisions of the inclosed agreement. Please sign both the inclosed blanks and return one to me, at the address in the agreement.

"If you do not wish to undertake this yourself, please pass the agreements and circular to some active man who will give the subject his earliest attention, and write me an answer.

"You will see the importance of attending to this matter the present week, for if the bill passes hundreds of agents will send circulars to parties granting the percentage which you may now obtain for yourself.

"CHARLES H. SMITH.

"Know all men by these presents, that we ——, of ——, in the county of —— and State of ——, of the first part, and Charles H. Smith, of Washington, in the District of Columbia, of the second part, agree as follows:

"Said party of the first part agrees to collect the discharges of all persons (except substitutes and commissioned officers) in the town or ward in which he resides, who served in the United States Army for any time during the war of the rebellion, to forward said discharges to said party of the second part, at the Imperial Hotel, Washington, District of Columbia, and to do all other acts within said town or ward, which may be made necessary by an act now pending before Congress for the equalization of bounties.

"Said party of the second part agrees that said party of the first part shall receive upon every successful application for bounty, furnished as aforesaid, 25 per cent.

"Witness our hands this ——day of ——, 1876.

"CHARLES H. SMITH."

Therefore, resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be, and are hereby, directed to inquire and report to this House whether any of its officers or clerks are acting as claim agents or are interested in procuring legislation, and if there is any further legislation needed to protect the House from having its officers or clerks acting as claim agents and becoming interested in legislation involving appropriations from the public Treasury.

Mr. WHITE. I move that this subject be referred to the committee indicated for investigation. The charge, if true, is a very serious one.

The SPEAKER. It is the duty of the Chair, in justice to Mr. Smith, to say that before the assembling of the House this day there was handed to the Speaker a communication from him on this subject, which he now directs the Clerk to read, omitting the circular embodied in the letter, which has already been read as part of the resolution of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. WHITE.]

The Clerk read as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., April 4, 1876.

Hon. M. C. KERR,
Speaker of the House of Representatives:

My attention having been called to criticisms upon certain circulars issued by my direction, I deem it my duty to submit to you the following statement of facts, and to request you to lay the same before the honorable House of Representatives for such action as that body may deem proper:

On the 10th of March last I left Washington for my home in New Hampshire for the purpose of voting at the then approaching election, and while there I learned for the first time, from a Boston paper, that a bill entitled "A bill to equalize the bounties of soldiers who served in the late war for the Union" had been reported on the 11th of March, and would probably be passed by Congress.

I then determined that in the event of the passage of said bill I would resign my position as journal clerk of the House, and enter upon the practice of my profession as an attorney in the city of Washington; and, with this intention, before returning to this city, I caused to be printed and put in circulation the following circulars, directed to the clerks of towns and wards, namely.

[Here follows the circular already read as a part of Mr. WHITE's resolution.]

At that time I had full knowledge of section 5498 of the Revised Statutes prohibiting an employé of the House from acting as an agent or attorney for prosecuting any claim against the United States, but I could not then see nor do I now understand how the above circulars made me an agent or attorney for the collection of these claims until after the passage and approval of the bill, without which there would be no such claims to collect and after which I should cease to act as an employé of the House.

I have not undertaken, nor do I propose to undertake, the collection of any claim against the Government of the United States while acting as one of its employés; but I simply sought in the circular to place myself in condition to become an agent for that purpose at such time as I might see fit to tender my resignation as journal clerk of the House, not supposing that there was the slightest impropriety in my taking steps in this direction so long as I did not use my official position to promote my private interests. I have never obtained any information concerning the situation of said bill in the committee or in the House by means of my position as employé. I have never, directly or indirectly, held any communication with any member of Congress or officer thereof in relation to the subject embraced in said bill.

I have never, directly or indirectly, heard or sought to obtain the opinion of any member of Congress or officer thereof as to the probable fate of said bill, nor have I attempted in any manner to influence legislation on this or any other subject

While I never consulted any person concerning the propriety of my course, the circulars were issued without any attempt at concealment.

Upon every statement contained in this communication and upon every fact bearing upon this subject I court the closest scrutiny and investigation.

Very respectfully,

CHAS. H. SMITH,
Journal Clerk.

Mr. BANNING. I move to strike out "Military Affairs" and insert "on the Judiciary," as this seems to be a matter which should go to the latter rather than to the former committee.

Mr. WHITE. I accept the amendment.

Mr. McCRARY. Is the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio pending?

The SPEAKER. It has been accepted.

Mr. McCRARY. I hope it will not be adopted. I ask for the reading of the resolution and the amendment.

The SPEAKER. It is now a part of the resolution.

The resolution, as modified, was read.

Mr. McCRARY. I move to substitute the Committee on Military Affairs for the Committee on the Judiciary. The resolution is evidently based on the communication just received from one of the officers of the House, and investigation would relate, of course, exclusively to that particular officer and to his action in the premises. That relates to the subject of military bounties and is a matter peculiarly within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs. I think that would be the more appropriate reference.

Furthermore, I wish to say the Committee on the Judiciary is already so burdened with work of this character that it seems to me—I do not know what other gentlemen on the committee may think—it is utterly out of the question for that committee to undertake another investigation. I think there are three or four already progressing, and four or five members of the committee are kept out of their seats half the time by work of this kind. I do not think the Military Committee is so burdened, and I hope it will be so referred.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. I think the resolution should be referred to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to call the attention of the mover of the resolution that limits the inquiry, as to whether any other legislation is necessary. It seems inquiry should be as to what other steps should be taken. There may be action not legislative which may be proper. Inquiry should be as to whether any legislation or other action shall be taken.

Mr. MORRISON. With the permission of the gentleman from Kentucky I will offer a substitute. There is no objection to the inquiry; I think it highly proper that it should be made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest that after the word "legislation" the mere addition of the words "or other action" would meet the case.

Mr. WHITE. I accept that modification.

Mr. MORRISON. I offer the following substitute, to obviate the objection which has been stated.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the communication of Charles H. Smith be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs with instructions to ascertain whether said Charles H. Smith in relation to the subject-matter of said communication has violated any law or done any act inconsistent with his position as an employé of this House, and that they report by resolution or otherwise.

Mr. WHITE. I do not think it is necessary. I think the other resolution covers the ground. If it does not, I am also willing to accept the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MORRISON. I do not insist if the gentleman objects.

Mr. WHITE. I do not think it is necessary. I now ask that section 5498 of the Revised Statutes be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5498. Every officer of the United States, or person holding any place of trust or profit, or discharging any official function under, or in connection with, any Executive Department of the Government of the United States, or under the Senate or House of Representatives of the United States, who acts as an agent or attorney for prosecuting any claim against the United States, or in any manner, or by any means, otherwise than in discharge of his proper official duties, aids or assists in the prosecution or support of any such claim, or receives any gratuity, or any share of or interest in any claim from any claimant against the United States, with intent to aid or assist, or in consideration of having aided or assisted, in the prosecution of such claim, shall pay a fine of not more than $5,000, or suffer imprisonment not more than one year, or both.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. I suggest to the gentleman that the proper committee to which this investigation should be referred is the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

The SPEAKER. In the judgment of the Chair that amendment is not in order.

Mr. HOAR. I desire in a word or two to call the attention of the House to the question of the appropriate committee which should take charge of this matter. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that this question has very little to do with the law that has been read and very little to do with the particular form of claim referred to in the circular. The charge against an officer of the House is this: That while a bill is pending or is proposed before this House he seeks to acquire a personal interest in it by getting a percentage on the claims which that bill will render valid against the Government. If a dozen soldiers or a hundred had sent him their claims in accordance with that circular, he would then be interested to the amount of 10 per cent. of those claims in the passage of that bill. Then the question whether that bill passed, and the question of the form in which it passed, the question of what the House did with it, would be determined, conclusively determined by evidence depending upon the integrity of that officer as journal clerk. In other words, when he journalized and recorded the action of this House, he would have, if the charge is true, a personal interest in the form and shape of the record which he made up, acquired by him at his solicitation, while the bill is pending. Now, that has nothing to do with that law. It has nothing to do with the particular jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs. It is a question of the privileges and prerogatives of this House and of the method which it shall take to secure the honesty and integrity of its Journal; on which honesty and integrity all the rights of the American people, so far as they depend on legislation by Congress, are dependent.

Now, that ought to go either to the Judiciary Committee or to the Committee on Rules; the latter committee being a committee of the most distinguished members of this House, and being charged with all the subjects which relate to the regulation of its proceedings and the general directions which it shall give either to its members or officers in their official conduct. I respectfully request my friend from Iowa [Mr. McCRARY] to permit the Committee on Rules to be substituted for the Committee on Military Affairs. I do not in making this statement of the question mean in the least to prejudge it. I will only state what I understand the charge to be without any knowledge whether it shall turn out to be well founded.

Mr. BANNING. It was on my motion that the Committee on the Judiciary was substituted for the Committee on Military Affairs in the resolution of the gentleman from Kentucky. I accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts that the Committee on Rules be substituted.

The SPEAKER. The pending question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. McCRARY] to substitute the Committee on Military Affairs for the Committee on the Judiciary. Does the gentleman from Iowa accept the suggestion that the Committee on Rules be substituted?

Mr. McCRARY. I do.

The question being taken on the motion to insert the Committee on Rules in the original resolution, it was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The next question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. MORRISON.]

Mr. MORRISON. With the permission of the House, I will amend my substitute, to make it conform to the amendment just adopted, by substituting the Committee on Rules for the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WHITE. I ask that the original resolution, as amended, and the substitute be read.

The original resolution, as amended, was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules be, and they are hereby, directed to inquire and report to this House whether any of its officers or clerks are acting as claim agents or are interested in pecuniary legislation, and if there is any further legislation or other action needed to protect the House from having its officers or clerks acting as claim agents and becoming interested in legislation involving appropriations from the public Treasury.

Mr. MORRISON's proposed substitute, as modified, was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the communication of Charles H. Smith be referred to the Committee on Rules, with instructions to ascertain whether said Smith in relation to the subject-matter of said communication has violated any law or done any act inconsistent with his position as an employé of this House, and that they report by resolution or otherwise.

The question being taken on the substitute, it was adopted; and the resolution, as amended by the adoption of the substitute, was agreed to.

Mr. HURLBUT. I call for the regular order.

FREEDMAN'S SAVINGS AND TRUST COMPANY.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I rise to submit a privileged report. I am instructed by the majority of the Select Committee on the Freedman's Bank to report back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 2828) to amend the act entitled "An act amending the charter of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1874, and to ask that it be made the special order for Saturday, April 22, and from day to day thereafter until disposed of. I make that motion in order to enable one of the members of the committee by agreement to mature and submit an amendment to the bill; and by that time also it is probable that the committee may be prepared to lay before the House a portion at least of the evidence which has been taken in the progress of the investigation.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Virginia of course will except reports from the Committee on Appropriations. If this is not done, I shall have to object to the continuance of this order from day to day.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I will have no objection, if the Committee on Appropriations be prepared to proceed with the consideration of any of their bills, to postpone each day the consideration of this bill, provided it does not thereby lose its position.

The SPEAKER. Are there objections to the order being made as requested by the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. KASSON. Reserving the right to object, I would like to know the character of this bill, whether it is likely to take up much time or not. Perhaps the gentleman from Virginia will state whether it opens up any extended line of debate, and whether it involves any appropriation of money.

Mr. DOUGLAS. No, sir; it involves no appropriation of money, and I presume the only debate, so far as I am apprised, likely to spring up will be on a legal question involved in an amendment proposed by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. BRADFORD,] a member of the committee.

Mr. KASSON. With the tariff bill and appropriation bills, and the Indian bill, and other special orders, we are having the business of the House so entangled that we shall have a contest every day over the priority of business.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I hope the gentleman from Iowa will not object to this bill in favor of the Indians. I consider the freedmen quite as important as the Indians, and that their interests should be taken care of.

Mr. KASSON. If the gentleman thinks that this bill can be disposed of in a day I will not object, but I cannot consent that it shall run from day to day.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I cannot state how many days its consideration will take, because I have already agreed that it shall not interfere with the appropriation bills; but I wish that it shall retain its position as a special order so long as there are no bills having preference over it pending. The amendment of my colleague on the committee from Alabama may be offered on the first day, and we may possibly dispose of the bill on that day.

Mr. KASSON. Very well; I will make no objection if the majority think it consistent with the transaction of their business.

Mr. THORNBURGH. I desire to say to the gentleman from Virginia that unless he makes the order so as not to interfere with the consideration of the bounty bill I shall have to object.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Has that been made a special order?

Mr. THORNBURGH. It has.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Then my bill is subordinate to any bill which has been made a special order previously; all such bills will take precedence over this bill.

The question was taken on Mr. DOUGLAS's motion, and it was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HURD rose.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I now ask unanimous consent to introduce a resolution for the consideration of the House at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is it a matter of privilege?

Mr. DOUGLAS. No, sir.

Mr. HURLBUT. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HURD] to offer a privileged resolution.

Mr. HURD. I yield for a moment to the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, [Mr. KNOTT.]

ADMINISTRATION OF OATHS IN THE SENATE.

Mr. KNOTT. I have been requested by the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate to ask the House to pass at the earliest possible moment a bill (S. No. 701) further to provide for the administration of oaths in the Senate, inasmuch as it is absolutely necessary in view of the impending impeachment trial before that body. I therefore, by the direction of the Committee on the Judiciary of this House, ask unanimous consent that that bill may be taken up and passed at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would inquire if this bill has been considered by the Committee on the Judiciary of the House?

Mr. KNOTT. It has, and they reported it back by a unanimous order.

The bill was read. It provides that the presiding officer for the time being of the Senate of the United States shall have power to administer all oaths and affirmations that are or may be required by the Constitution or by law to be taken by any Senator, officer of the Senate, witness, or other person, in respect to any matter within the jurisdiction of the Senate.

The second section provides that the Secretary of the Senate and the Chief Clerk of the Senate shall, respectively, have power to administer any oath or affirmation required by law or any rule or order of the Senate to be taken by any officer of the Senate and to any witness produced before it.

No objection being made, the bill was reported from the committee, ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KNOTT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HURD resumed the floor.

Mr. SINGLETON. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment that I may make a report from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HURD. I will do so.

Mr. SINGLETON. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back the bill (H. R. No. 1594) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, with the amendments of the Senate thereto, with a recommendation that the amendments of the Senate be non-concurred in.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to suggest to the Committee on Appropriations that at this stage of the session we are not under such pressure but that we ought to hear the amendments read and act upon them. It occurs to me that the course which the gentleman proposes is only allowable in the last days of a session when business is pressing. I trust the Committee on Appropriations will allow these amendments to be read and acted on in the House one by one. Of course we have a right to demand it, but I suggest to the gentleman that he allow the bill and amendments to be printed so that members may see what the amendments are. I hope the gentleman will make that motion.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Mississippi accept that suggestion?

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to say, by permission of the gentleman from Mississippi, that perhaps the last suggestion by the gentleman from Ohio would be proper enough, that the amendments should be printed, for they are very numerous.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is all the more reason why they should be printed.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Committee on Appropriations have directed the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON] to report as he has done.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If the House shall now non-concur in all these amendments of the Senate in a lump, does it not follow, unless the Senate shall recede from all of them, that they will all go together to a committee of conference and be reported upon together by that committee, and acted upon in the lump—yes or no—by the House, without any one being voted upon separately?

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. That is not a proper question for the Chair to undertake to decide in advance.

Mr. HOAR. The Chair would have to decide it by and by.

Mr. HOLMAN. It might be taken for granted that they had been acted upon one by one before they went to the committee of conference.

Mr. SINGLETON. The only reason why I thought the House would non-concur in these amendments is that all of them were offered in the House and elaborately discussed.

Mr. GARFIELD. That does not appear now.

Mr. SINGLETON. As the gentleman desires it, I will move that the bill, with the amendments of the Senate, be printed and recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

HABEAS CORPUS—HALLET KILBOURN.

Mr. HURD. By direction of the Committee on the Judiciary, I report to the House and recommend for adoption at this time the preamble and resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas one Hallet Kilbourn was subpœnaed to testify in a certain investigation ordered by this House before a committee duly authorized to send for persons and papers; and whereas during his examination as a witness the said Hallet Kilbourn refused to answer certain questions propounded to him as such witness by said committee, and to produce certain books and papers which he was ordered by said committee to produce; and whereas for such refusal the House of Representatives has adjudged the said Hallet Kilbourn to be in contempt of its authority and has ordered him into custody until he shall purge himself of said contempt and answer the questions as propounded and produce the papers and books ordered to be produced; and whereas said committee is still engaged in the investigation which it was ordered to make by the House, and is unable to complete the same because of the contumacy of the witness; and whereas the said Hallet Kilbourn is now in execution by the legal process of this House as aforesaid; and whereas the chief justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia has issued a writ of habeas corpus to the Sergeant-at-Arms of this House to produce before the said judge the body of the said Kilbourn: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to make a careful return of said writ, setting out the causes of the detention of said Kilbourn, and to retain the custody of his body, and not to produce it before the said judge or court without further order of this House.

The question was upon adopting the preamble and resolution.

Mr. HURD. Few questions of graver moment or of greater importance will be presented to this House for determination than those which are involved in the present discussion. They relate to the liberty of the citizen, the efficiency of the great writ of habeas corpus, and the power of this body to vindicate its authority and to preserve itself from insult and contempt. The House should be cautious in the action it may take upon this subject neither to impair the efficiency of the writ of habeas corpus nor interfere with the liberty of the private citizen, nor diminish its own right to preserve by proper measures its own just powers. We should be careful to follow no precedent which violates personal liberty, and we should be careful to make no precedent which shall justify a surrender of the chiefest authority of this House.

In the discussion of these important questions I desire to call the attention of the House first to the proposition as one of law, that it possesses undisputed authority to authorize the examination of witnesses, and to punish them if they refuse to answer questions lawfully propounded, or are otherwise guilty of contumacy of the authority of the House. This power has been said to exist, independently of statutory provisions and independently of constitutional provisions, inherently in every legislative body by virtue of its very organization. From the very earliest days of English history until the time of the formation of the Constitution of the United States both of the houses of Parliament were in the habit of making examinations of witnesses and of punishing them for contempt of authority when they refused to answer the questions propounded. And although in the Constitution of the United States there is no provision authorizing punishment for contempt except as it may be committed by a member of the House, yet the Supreme Court of the United States at a very early day decided that the House had power to subpœna witnesses and examine them, and to punish them for refusing to answer the questions propounded to them by order of the House.

In the case of Anderson vs. Dunn, 6 Wheaton, that point was expressly determined. The court say in the progress of their opinion:

But what is the alternative?

That is, the alternative of the proposition that the House has no power to examine witnesses and punish for contempt.

But what is the alternative? The argument obviously leads to the total annihilation of the power of the House of Representatives to guard itself from contempts, and leaves it exposed to every indignity and interruption that rudeness, caprice, or even conspiracy may meditate against it. This result is fraught with too much absurdity not to bring into doubt the soundness of any argument from which it is derived. That a deliberative assembly, clothed with the majesty of the people and charged with the care of all that is dear to them, composed of the most distinguished citizens, selected and drawn together from every quarter of a great nation, whose deliberations are required by public opinion to be conducted under the eye of the public, and whose decisions must be clothed with all the sanctity which unlimited confidence in their wisdom and purity can inspire—that such an assembly should not possess the power to suppress rudeness or repel insult is a supposition too wild to be suggested.

And, following that line of argument, the court decided that the power to put the interrogatories was vested in the House, and also the power to punish the witness for refusal to answer.

From that day this power has been exercised by this House. At nearly every session of Congress it has been necessary that witnesses should be examined as to some question or other; and in very many sessions questions that have been propounded have been refused to be answered. So that the authority to punish has been frequently exercised, and under the authority of the Supreme Court of the United States has become so perfectly a part of the parliamentary law of these bodies that I do not think anybody will dispute it.

But it has been suggested in the petition which has been filed in this case, and in the arguments that have been made before the Judiciary Committee, that although this is a power which the House may possess, this particular case is not one in which that power may be exercised. Upon that point I desire to suggest to the House that there are many views of the case in which the inquiries that were propounded to Mr. Kilbourn were pertinent. They were pertinent in the view, as it has been alleged, that it was sought to procure information as to whether members of Congress had been engaged in real-estate speculations in this city by which their actions in legislation might be improperly and corruptly influenced.

It has been suggested that there were persons connected with various branches of the Government who had likewise been interested in the same real-estate speculation, and as to their conduct as a basis for possible impeachment it was proper and pertinent to inquire as to all the transactions relating to what was known as the "real-estate pool." In addition to that, as has been suggested in the argument before the committee, the question as to the right of Congress to appropriate money and as to the amount of money that may be required to be appropriated is one of the most important for this House to decide; and therefore information upon that point might be desired by the committee in this particular connection; for if it were true that there was $25,000 in the real-estate pool which belonged to the United States, and if we could procure it, there would be $25,000 more of money in the Treasury to be applied to the payment of the public debt, and $25,000 less to be levied in the form of taxation upon the people of the United States.

In all these views these interrogatories were pertinent. But whether that be so or not, the fact is that this House has solemnly adjuged that the witness is in contempt of the authority of the House, and when in the exercise of its undoubted jurisdiction it has so declared, there is no power in the land which has the right to review its decision.

As a second proposition, and closely connected with the one I have just stated, I maintain this as a doctrine of the law: that when any court has determined as to the extent of its power and jurisdiction, unless it be an inferior and subordinate one, its decision is absolutely final and conclusive, and no other authority, no other court, has the power, either directly or by indirection, to interfere. I do not know any propositionof law upon this general subject which is better settled than this.

I refer to Hurd on Habeas Corpus pages 385, 412. On page 38 it is said in the text, and the proposition is sustained fully by authority:

It is a rule essential to the efficient administration of justice that where a court is vested with jurisdiction over the subject-matter upon which it assumes to act, and regularly obtains jurisdiction of the person, it becomes its right and duty to determine every question which may arise in the cause without interference from any tribunal.

Then, upon the question of commitment for contempt, it is said:

The right of punishment for contempts by summary conviction is inherent in all courts of justice and essential to their protection and existence. A commitment under such conviction is a commitment in execution, and the judgment of conviction is not subject to review in any other court, unless specially authorized by statute. It cannot be attacked under the writ of habeas corpus except for such defects as render the proceedings void.

In 7 Wheaton, Kearney's Case, page 44, this exact question was presented to the Supreme Court of the United States. A writ of habeas corpus was applied for to that, the highest tribunal in the country, to relieve from imprisonment for contempt a person who had been ordered into custody by the circuit court of the District of Columbia. After a full discussion of the authorities the Supreme Court of the United States held that it had no authority to issue the writ; that if it did issue the writ the party would be remanded into the custody of the marshal; and that under the circumstances the motion for a writ should be denied. In the course of the opinion of the court, the views of Mr. Justice Blackstone are quoted, which I will read:

All courts, by which I mean to include the two Houses of Parliament and the courts of Westminster Hall, can have no control in matters of contempt. The sole adjudication of contempt and the punishment thereof, belong exclusively and without interfering to each respective court. Infinite confusion and disorder would follow if courts could, by writs of habeas corpus, examine and determine the contempt of others.

The Supreme Court then says:

So that it is most manifest from the whole reasoning of the court in this case that a writ of habeas corpus was not deemed a proper remedy where a party was committed for a contempt by a court of competent jurisdiction, and that if granted the court could not inquire into the sufficiency of the cause of commitment. If, therefore, we were to grant the writ in this case, it would be applying it in a manner not justified by principle or usage; and we should be bound to remand the party unless we were prepared to abandon the whole doctrine, so reasonable, just, and convenient, which has hitherto regulated this important subject. We are entirely satisfied to administer the law as we find it, and are all of opinion that upon the facts of this case the motion ought to be denied.

One of the strongest authorities in support of the proposition which I have attempted to maintain may be found in 26 Pennsylvania State Reports, in Passmore Williamson's case, in which the opinion was delivered by Mr. Justice Black, who is one of the attorneys for Mr. Hallet Kilbourn in the present proceeding. I quote from the language of Judge Black upon this subject:

It is most especially necessary that convictions for contempt in one court shall be final, conclusive, and free from examination by other courts on habeas corpus. If the law was not so our judicial system would break to pieces in a month. Courts totally unconnected with each other would be coming in constant collision. The inferior courts would revise all the decisions of the judges placed over and above them. A party unwilling to be tried in this court need only defy our authority, and, if we commit him, to take out his habeas corpus before an inferior judge of his own choosing, and if that judge is of opinion that we ought not to try him, there is an end of the case.

This doctrine is so plainly against the reason of the thing that it would be wonderful indeed if any authority for it could be found in the books. There is none, except the overruled decision of Mr. Justice Spencer, of New York, already referred to, and some efforts of the same kind to control the other court made by Sir Edward Coke in the King's Bench, which are now universally admitted to have been illegal as well as rude and intemperate.

On the other hand we have all the English judges and all our own declaring their want of power to interfere with or control one another in this way. I content myself by simply referring to some of the books in which it is established that the conviction of contempt is a separate proceeding, and is conclusive of every fact which might have been urged on the trial for contempt, and among others want of jurisdiction to try the cause in which the contempt was committed.

If, Mr. Speaker, by the authorities upon this subject, any proposition relating to it can be considered as established, this one is: that in proceedings for contempt no court can be interfered with by any other court, excepting in the instance where that other court possesses appellate and revisory jurisdiction. In such cases, by virtue of its power to issue a writ of certiorari, the facts may all be brought from the inferior court to the superior and judgment upon the facts of the case may be rendered. But in a case like this it is impossible this should be so; for how can the circuit court of the District of Columbia issue a writ of certiorari to this body? By what right and authority will this body be bound to respect a writ so addressed to us? There is no rule for it in parliamentary law, and no good sound reason for it upon any principle.

The third proposition which I submit to the consideration of the House is that where a court, without authority, in violation of the provisions of the statutes and in violation of the principles of the adjudications, issues a writ of habeas corpus to inquire into the cause of a commitment for contempt, it is sufficient for the authority to which the writ is addressed to return the facts disclosing all of the circumstances relating to the legality of the detention, and it is not necessary the body of the person detained should be produced.

As preliminary to that proposition, I suggest that when the writ has been issued by the court respect must be paid to it by the individual or authority to which it is addressed. That respect is paid to it and the individual is not liable to the charge of contempt where the return is made setting out all the facts if the facts when set out show it to be a case in which the judge had no right to issue the writ or in which, if he did issue the writ, he is bound to remand the prisoner and has no power to admit him to bail or discharge him. We are purged of any contempt of judicial authority by making the return, provided the return shows the fact as I have indicated.

And why, Mr. Speaker, produce the body? What object can be accomplished by it so far as the jurisdiction of this court is concerned? If this court is bound by the precedents which have been established by the Supreme Court of the United States, then the very moment the prisoner is brought into its presence it is bound to remand him to the custody of our officer.

Under circumstances precisely similar, the Supreme Court of the United States decided that the writ should not issue, because if it were issued it would be useless, as the court could do nothing more than remand the prisoner to the custody of the marshal.

But what may be of no value to the court, what is not necessary to enable it to exercise its jurisdiction, the production of the body, may be of serious injury and detriment to this House. Consider what the consequence will be the very moment this witness is taken by the Sergeant-at-Arms before this court. That moment the jurisdiction and authority of this House are at an end. He is held before that court, when taken there, not under the order made in this body hitherto, but is held under the authority of the writ of habeas corpus. The case may be adjourned from day to day as the judge pleases. The party may be let out on bail, or may be discharged, and the jurisdiction which has attached in reference to him by which we have been attempting to investigate frauds is entirely lost. It may be that it was an investigation which was the foundation and basis of a proceeding of impeachment, and by the witness being discharged we would become unable to procure his testimony, and thus by the surrender for one hour of time of this prisoner we would be deprived of our constitutional privilege of impeaching officers for high crimes and misdemeanors.

That is a doctrine, Mr. Speaker, which I desire to establish by calling attention to a recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, Barth vs. Clise, 12 Wallace, 402:

> By the common law, upon the return of a writ of habeas corpus and the production of the body of the party suing it out, the authority under which the original commitment took place is superseded. After that time and until the case is finally disposed of, the safe keeping of the prisoner is entirely under the control and direction of the court to which the return is made. The prisoner is detained, not under the original commitment, but under the authority of the writ of habeas corpus. Pending the hearing he may be bailed de die in diem, or be remanded to the jail whence he came, or be committed to any other suitable place of confinement under the control of the court. He may be brought before the court from time to time by its order, until it is determined whether he shall be discharged or absolutely remanded.

Consider, Mr. Speaker, the consequences in view of an investigation where a witness is before this House, under the authority of the House, to whom questions have been propounded and from whom answers are demanded, that he may be willing to answer the questions to-day but some parties who may be interested in his testimony to-night may arrange with the court that a writ of habeas corpus shall be served and custody and power taken from the House and the witness taken in the morning and discharged. I believe there is a precedent quite recent in date of this sort, where a witness under similar circumstances was taken out of the custody of the House and the House was never able to reach him. Here is a person within our jurisdiction, under the custody of our authority, with whom we are proposing to deal, to whom we have the right to propound inquiries, and from whom we have the right to demand information. Before our investigation is finished he is taken out of our hands by the court, a creature of our own authority, and all our efforts in the direction of investigation are thwarted. It has been decided in Ex parte H. H. Robinson (Hurd on Habeas Corpus, page 347,) that a court had no right to issue a writ of habeas corpus under such circumstances. That was a case where a person was taken from a United States marshal under the fugitive-slave law in Ohio; and in that case Judge McLean held there was no authority to issue the writ, because the court which had acquired the jurisdiction was not through with the body.

I read:

> That the commissioner had jurisdiction in the case is clear. While duly engaged in the investigation of the matter, the honorable judge of the common pleas, whose motives I by no means question, by a habeas corpus took from the custody of the marshal the body of the fugitive, which left the commissioner without a case. It wrested from him without any authority of law the subject of his jurisdiction. This, so far as I know, is without precedent.

And the court held that the common pleas judge of the State of Ohio had no authority to issue the writ. The writ was a void writ. And that case is this case. They take from us this witness, Mr. Kilbourn. They wrest from us a person over whom we have jurisdiction in a case which belongs to this tribunal to decide.

The same principle was applied by the circuit court of the United States of New York, where its own process was set aside because it conflicted with the jurisdiction of a State officer which had previously attached. The judge remarked:

> The recorder, therefore, had jurisdiction of the case, and authority to proceed in the inquiry whether the person so seized and brought before him doth, under the laws of the State from which he fled, owe service or labor to the person claiming him.
> This inquiry may take up some time and require some delay for the purpose of procuring testimony; and while such examination is pending the party must be deemed in the custody of the law, and the magistrate must necessarily have authority to imprison him for safe-keeping.

The views, Mr. Speaker, which are so well recommended by reason and by the principles applicable to this case are equally well sustained by the authorities. The exact question in this connection is whether upon the service of a writ of habeas corpus on the person detaining the prisoner the body of the person detained is bound to be produced before the court. Now, Mr. Speaker, so far as the cases in Parliament are concerned, in some the custody of the prisoner was surrendered to the court, and in others the custody was retained by the House of Commons. But in all cases the House of Commons proceeded on the theory that it was in its discretion to decide whether the custody should be surrendered or not. For prior to the delivery by the sergeant-at-arms in any instance to the court of the prisoner in custody the direction of the house was asked for and given. In some cases they refused to regard the writ at all; in other cases they allowed the return to the writ to be made; in other cases they directed that the body should be returned with the writ.

But there are many other cases, Mr. Speaker, in which it is not necessary that the body of the prisoner should be produced. In the case of Ableman against Booth, 21 Howard, it was expressly decided that when a writ had been served by a State court upon an officer of the Federal court, holding a prisoner in custody under color of authority of the United States, that officer was bound to treat the State court with respect, to the extent of making a return to the writ, but was bound under no circumstances to surrender the body of the prisoner, or permit it to be surrendered to the court. And this doctrine, decided prior to the war in reference to fugitive-slave cases by the Supreme Court of the United States, was re-asserted since the war and during the war in cases where enlistments had been made into the Army of persons who claimed to be minors. It was so re-asserted in the Tarble case. So that the doctrine is well established that where a writ has been issued by State authority to a Federal officer the Federal officer must return to the writ the circumstances of the detention, but not produce the body. Upon that point I desire to read what the Chief Justice of the United States in the Ableman case said:

> We do not question the authority of State court or judge who is authorized by the laws of the State to issue the writ of habeas corpus, to issue it in any case where the party is imprisoned within its territorial limits, provided it does not appear, when the application is made, that the person imprisoned is in custody under the authority of the United States. The court or judge has a right to inquire, in this mode of proceeding, for what cause and by what authority the prisoner is confined within the territorial limits of the State sovereignty. And it is the duty of the marshal, or other person having the custody of the prisoner, to make known to the judge or court, by a proper return, the authority by which he holds him in custody. This right to inquire by process of habeas corpus, and the duty of the officer to make a return, grows necessarily out of the complex character of our Government and the existence of two distinct and separate sovereignties within the same territorial space, each of them restricted in its powers and each within its sphere of action, prescribed by the Constitution of the United States, independent of the other. But, after the return is made and the State judge or court judicially apprised that the party is in custody under the authority of the United States, they can proceed no further. They then know that the prisoner is within the dominion and jurisdiction of another government, and that neither the writ of habeas corpus nor any other process issued under State authority can pass over the line of division between the two sovereignties. He is then within the dominion and exclusive jurisdiction of the United States. If he has committed an offense against their laws, their tribunals alone can punish him. If he is wrongfully imprisoned, their judicial tribunals can release him and afford him redress. And although, as we have said, it is the duty of the marshal, or other person holding him, to make known by a proper return the authority under which he detains him, it is at the same time imperatively his duty to obey the process of the United States, to hold the prisoner in custody under it, and to refuse obedience to the mandate or process of any other government. And consequently it is his duty not to take the prisoner, nor suffer him to be taken, before State judge or court upon a habeas corpus issued under State authority.

As I have already remarked, that doctrine was fully approved in the Tarble case, decided since the war. The force of this decision is sought to be broken by saying that it relates to a case where there were courts of different jurisdiction. The point on which I cite the case is this, that it is not necessary in all cases to produce the body where a writ of habeas corpus is served; that the rule is not universal; that it is subject to exceptions. From these cases I derive the principle which not only includes this case but others, that when upon a return of a writ of habeas corpus all the facts are disclosed so that it may be brought to the knowledge of the court that it had no authority to issue the writ in the first instance, or to discharge the prisoner, or to bail him, a return setting forth these facts is sufficient without the production of the body.

Hurd on Habeas Corpus, page 154, says:

It has been observed that on the application it was made the duty of the court or judge to examine the commitment, where a copy was produced, to see whether it was "for treason or felony, plainly and especially expressed," or whether the prisoner was "convict or in execution by legal process." Yet if the writ be issued, this question may be again presented for more complete consideration and determination; and this appears to have been allowed without the production of the body under the implication arising under a clause in the first section of the act 31 Charles II.

In a case cited in 10 Peters's C. L., 199, note, it is said that "although the body of the prisoner is usually returned with the writ, the reasons of the prisoner's detention are, however, sometimes returned without actually bringing up the applicant; as where he is charged with treason or felony clearly expressed in the warrant of commitment, or imprisoned for any civil cause or action or in execution; and in either case the return must distinctly show by whom and for what cause the prisoner was committed."

Mr. KASSON. Will the gentleman from Ohio, as I can hardly hear him distinctly, tell me if I understand him rightly that it is not necessary in the return to a writ of habeas corpus to produce the body?

Mr. HURD. Yes; not in all cases.

Mr. KASSON. Then I beg his attention to section 758 of the Revised Statutes, which says "that the person making the return shall bring with him the body."

Mr. HURD. I am coming to that point directly. If I have made myself understood on this proposition, it follows, then, that the writ of habeas corpus need not be attended in all cases by the production of the body. It has been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, and the authorities are uniform in holding where a party is in confinement in the execution of a sentence or in confinement under a warrant plainly charging treason or felony, that the person to whom the writ is addressed is not bound to produce the body.

Mr. KASSON. Were not those decisions prior to 1837?

Mr. HURD. They were, but not prior to the act of Charles II, which contained the same provision which is found in the Revised Statutes, and to that point I shall soon direct the attention of the gentleman.

It is objected to this provision of the law and to this principle which I have urged, first, that by the passage of an act in the last Congress making a contempt of the authority of the House an indictable offense the jurisdiction of the House has been superseded, and that the House can proceed no further until the matter has been determined before the circuit court of the District of Columbia; and that seems to be one of the points principally pressed in the petition filed in this case. In answer to that suggestion I desire to say that it is a principle of construction well settled that where a power in reference to a criminal prosecution is conferred by the common law that power remains unchanged where another law upon the same subject is enacted making the act the subject of the prosecution an offense, unless there are express negative words taking away the jurisdiction given by the common law; in other words the statutory remedy is held to be cumulative of the remedy given by the common law, and it is at the option of the party who desires to engage in the prosecution to pursue either the one remedy or the other, or both.

In Sedgwick on Statutory and Constitutional Law, on page 93, it is said:

Questions often arise as to the election of remedies for the violation of statutes. Where a right originally exists at common law and a statute is passed giving a new remedy without any negative, express or implied, upon the old common law, the party has his election either to sue at common law or to proceed upon the statute. The statutory remedy is merely cumulative.

But it has been suggested by the gentleman from Iowa that in the Revised Statutes there is a provision declaring that when a return is made to a writ of habeas corpus the body of the person detained shall be surrendered. The language of the Revised Statutes is this:

The person making the return shall at the same time bring the body of the party before the judge who granted the writ.

Now, in the first place, Mr. Speaker, the writ of habeas corpus as a writ for the vindication of the liberties of an American citizen, does not as a matter of right or as a matter of principle issue from a court of the United States. The only provision in the Constitution of the United States on the subject is that the privileges of the writ shall not be suspended except in the case of invasion or rebellion, and the Supreme Court at a very early day determined that unless Congress legislated on the subject the writ was without effect, and that no citizen of the United States was entitled to the writ or could enjoy its privilege. The consequence was that in the first judiciary act passed by Congress the law upon that subject was enacted providing that where a person was imprisoned by virtue of or under color of the authority of the United States, he should be released from such imprisonment under writ of habeas corpus. Afterward, in 1867, a law was passed similar in many respects to the statute as it now stands, in which it was made obligatory upon the officer to return the body when he made the written return indorsed upon the writ.

Now, it should be borne in mind that there was no definition of the writ of habeas corpus in the Constitution of the United States; there was no definition of the writ in the laws of the United States. Reference was made simply to "the writ of habeas corpus," a writ which had been regulated by the provisions of the statute of Charles II. There was no other writ known to the American law, none known to the settlers of this country, none known to the world, other than this English habeas corpus writ, with all its penalties, all its privileges, all its powers, and all its methods of practice. That writ was especially regulated by the statute of Charles II, in which it was provided—

That the person shall make return to the writ and bring or cause to be brought the body of the party so committed or restrained into or before the lord chancellor or the lord keeper of the great seal of England.

The language of the statute of Charles II was as strong as the language of your statute; the duty of bringing the body was as strongly imposed in that statute as in our statute, and yet, as I have already shown, when the writ was so issued under the statute of Charles II. the body of the prisoner has been repeatedly retained, and not delivered up to the authority issuing the writ. It has been refused over and over again by the houses of Parliament; it has been refused over and over again in cases where parties were in commitment for felony or treason clearly shown in the warrant; it has been refused over and over again, as the authorities I have read show, where the parties were in sentence upon execution.

Now, how will gentlemen say that this provision of our statute is mandatory and obligatory upon this House? When you take the statutes upon the same subject-matter you find that the provisions of the statute of Charles II were not mandatory either upon the houses of Parliament or upon other authorities or individuals to whom the writ of habeas corpus might be addressed. I submit that the construction that has been given to this language for the last three hundred years ought to be decisive as to the construction to be given to the language of our statute and as to the writ of habeas corpus of which our Constitution speaks and of which our statute speaks. According to that construction, the general rule is that the body shall be given up; but in certain excepted cases it may be given up or not, as the facts upon the return will show to the court whether it had the jurisdiction to issue the writ or to discharge the prisoner when brought before it.

In the next place, in reference to this question, I say that, if the construction is to be given to the statute that is claimed by gentlemen, this House is bound to surrender the body in all instances; then it will interrupt the investigations of this House, take possession of the witnesses and individuals of whom we have acquired jurisdiction, destroy the authority of the House to punish for contempt and to vindicate its just powers, and will therefore operate as an act of one Congress to take from this House the powers that it possesses independently of the action of Congress and even of the Constitution of the United States, after the organization of the House has once been perfected.

I deny the right of the Forty-second or of the Forty-third Congress to pass a law which will take from this House the power to punish for contempt. I deny the right of this Congress to pass laws and enact measures of legislation which shall cripple the powers, bind the arms, and paralyze the hands of Houses of Congress to come after. There are provisions belonging to our parliamentary law, there are principles relating to our jurisdiction as one of the co-ordinate departments of this Government that cannot be affected or taken away by legislation. And if the construction that gentlemen give to this law is to be maintained as the true construction, then I contend that it is a law which the Congress of the United States had no power to enact and a law which this House of the Forty-fourth Congress is under no obligation to regard.

The language of the statute, in section 753 of the Revised Statutes, upon the subject of the writ of habeas corpus is worthy of some consideration in this connection. From the language of the arguments of gentlemen who maintain that in all cases the body should be brought in with the return of the writ, I would have been led to suppose that the writ of habeas corpus was a writ which should issue as a matter of course under all circumstances and at all times; that the party who was imprisoned had the right at all times to insist that the custody of his body should be delivered up to the authority that issued the writ. But the language of the statute is: "The writ of habeas corpus shall in no case extend to a prisoner in jail, unless where he is in custody," &c. The language is not that "the writ of habeas corpus shall extend to all persons in jail, except," &c. The section is:

The writ of habeas corpus shall in no case extend to a prisoner in jail, unless where he is in custody under or by color of the authority of the United States, or is committed for trial before some court thereof; or is in custody for an act done or omitted in pursuance of a law of the United States, or of an order, process, or decree of a court or judge thereof; or is in custody in violation of the Constitution or of a law or treaty of the United States; or, being a subject or citizen of a foreign state, and domiciled therein, is in custody for an act done or omitted under any alleged right, title, authority, privilege, protection, or exemption claimed under the commission, or order, or sanction of any foreign state, or under color thereof, the validity and effect whereof depend upon the law of nations; or unless it is necessary to bring the prisoner into court to testify.

It has been very ingeniously argued, and it may be maintained with considerable plausibility, that this provision of the writ was not intended to apply to those cases where persons were in custody under an order of the House of Representatives. I wish the House to bear in mind that the writ of habeas corpus is not a writ of right or as of course but it is a writ, the advantages and benefits of which are conferred by the statute; and it is perfectly competent for the Congress of the United States to decide in its legislation that no writ shall issue where persons are held in custody under its authority, as it is in its power to decide, by passing no law, that no writ of habeas corpus at all shall issue from any of the courts of the United States.

The question is whether, in these exceptions to the rule that the writ of habeas corpus shall not issue to prisoners in jail, they have included the House of Representatives. This is simply a question of construction; and I suggest to the consideration of the House a proposition or two upon this subject. First, that a person held in custody under the order of this House is not held in custody under the authority of the United States. The authority of the United States is expressed by that complete Government created by the Constitution, embracing the Congress of the United States, the judiciary of the United States, and the Executive of the United States. Where, under authority properly exercised, under process issuing from the court, or under process which the Executive may have authority to issue, the prisoner is in confinement, then the courts have jurisdiction to issue the writ. But I suggest whether an order from this House is the authority of the United States contemplated. If it be, then it ought to include an order issued by a judge. If an order is made by a judge punishing a man for contempt, it ought to be included just as much in that provision as an order made by this House punishing a man for contempt. But within two lines after that it is expressly provided that where a court makes the order then the writ may issue. If it were necessary to make this express provision for a case where an order of a court had been made to authorize the issuing of a writ, why is it not necessary in cases where the order for imprisonment or confinement is made by the House of Representatives itself?

Again, it may be suggested that whenever a general rule is adopted relative to matters of legislation, the Government of the United States and the Houses of Congress have been held by the courts not to be bound unless they are expressly included; and, while I do not assert this proposition, I suggest to gentlemen as worthy of consideration that, if it be the object of this House to authorize the writ of habeas corpus to issue for persons under punishment by the House for contempt, further legislation on this subject is necessary.

No one appreciates more than myself or shares more fully in the devotion that the people of the United States feel for the great writ of habeas corpus. With all the studies and investigations that I have given to this subject, I have been led more and more to admire our Anglo-Saxon ancestors, who, never losing sight of the great importance of the writ, insisted upon its preservation everywhere that the jurisdiction of the British judiciary could extend. From that day when the great writ was extorted from King John at Runnymede to the present hour the English people have resisted every infraction of this great writ as understood and administered among them, whether the infraction was proposed by the judiciary, by the Parliament, or by the king. They have maintained it as the key-stone of their liberties; they have prized it as the token and symbol of their freedom; and no greater barrier was ever presented to the abuses of administration than this power of the writ of habeas corpus. But although it was designed for the purpose of relieving from illegal imprisonment; although, as has been said, it has required the secrets of every prison to be disclosed and the cause of detention of every individual to be declared, and the body of the prisoner to be produced, yet from the very beginning there has been a class of cases where the writ might issue where the body was not required to be produced and where the prisoner was not entitled to be discharged; and that class of cases, as I have attempted to show this morning, is based upon the principle that one jurisdiction has no authority to interfere with or control another jurisdiction.

If when one jurisdiction has once attached one court may issue the writ to take out of the custody of another a person who is there awaiting the further order of that court; if one court may release from imprisonment in sentence any person who has been confined by judgment of another court, then it follows that you introduce into the administration of justice confusion which will ever confuse, and that you have made each court of the country, whether inferior or subordinate or not, a revisory and appellate court over every other. You have enabled a police justice, created by the authority of this Congress, to review the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. You have authorized such officer to interfere with this court, this House of Representatives, in the determination of the limits of its own jurisdiction and in the punishment of those individuals who have defied its authority and treated it with contempt.

I say that no conclusion can be tolerated which will lead to such consequences. Let a court of appellate and revisory jurisdiction correct the errors of subordinate courts; that has always been done; but let no subordinate court interfere with our jurisdiction or with the jurisdiction of courts that are superior to it. It has not been done in the ages; it ought not to be done now; if done, it is done in spite of the authority of English courts, in spite of the authority of cases in our own country; and I will not say with the purpose, but with the certain result of destroying one of the most valuable powers that this House possesses.

I say in conclusion that I think this resolution should be adopted, as it treats the court with respect; for it proposes to make a return of the causes of detention, which will show that it had no jurisdiction to issue the writ; that it can neither discharge the prisoner nor admit him to bail. And while doing that, it preserves the dignity of this House, and enables us to maintain unimpaired the powers which are necessary for the administration of the duties which the people have devolved upon us.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to ask my colleague a question in the line of his argument. I understand him to hold that we ought not to allow our Sergeant-at-Arms to surrender the body of the witness to the court for a hearing. Suppose he makes that return to the court, refusing on our authority, and suppose that court punishes him for contempt of its authority in not obeying its order to produce the body and imprisons him according to its discretion, what relief has he, and what relief can we give him on the doctrine my colleague now puts forth? Cannot that court in succession imprison for contempt every Sergeant-at-Arms and every deputy sergeant-at-arms and every officer who may be required to answer? For my colleague says we must make an answer to the return one way or the other. And cannot we thus go on, they locking up our officers and we holding the witness, and can my colleague say from his doctrine how that result would follow and how we could get out of such involvement?

Mr. HURD. I see very easily how it does not follow. The advice I would give the Sergeant-at-Arms in such a state of facts, if they were to arise, would be to observe all the provisions of the law which have always prevailed relative to the writ of habeas corpus. I should not advise him to do what has been done by Kilbourn, go to another circuit judge of this District and get a writ of habeas corpus to have an inquiry made as to the cause of detention, but I would advise him to seek a writ from the Supreme Court of the United States, which has appellate and revisory jurisdiction; which writ the court of this District is bound to respect, and then, if that should be the result, we would have this vexed question settled in as peaceful and quiet a way as possible. In that view a writ of habeas corpus properly issued by the Supreme Court of the United States, the person who holds him, Thompson, in custody is bound to return him to the Supreme Court, and it can remit him to bail or remand him from day to day as it pleases.

Mr. GARFIELD. Does my colleague say the Supreme Court can revise a matter of contempt from the court below?

Mr. HURD. I do, and it is the proposition I have been arguing.

Mr. GARFIELD. For contempt of its own authority?

Mr. HURD. It has been the proposition I have been maintaining that if, on the particular subject, the court possesses appellate and revisory jurisdiction and can bring the facts before it in the court below by writ of certiorari, in that case it can judge of the contempt as the court did in which the decree of punishment was first entered.

Mr. FRYE. I wish to ask the gentleman a question, so that the full importance of the proposition maintained by the majority may be completely understood. Do I understand the majority or the gentleman to maintain that the House has power to punish for contempt, regardless of the fact whether the question asked was lawful or unlawful?

Mr. HURD. I say upon that point the subject-matter is entirely within the discretion of the House, and that its adjudication is final and conclusive over every other authority, and must remain the adjudication of this House until its action has been reconsidered.

Mr. FRYE. So the committee does assert the House may punish for contempt and may disregard entirely the legality or illegality of the question asked. Now, further, is there any limit as to the time of punishment except as to the life of the House?

Mr. HURD. That is a matter in dispute, sir; it is not settled.

Mr. FRYE. In your opinion, is there any limit to the time of punishment except the life of the House?

Mr. HURD. Although it may not be pertinent to the present inquiry, I am prepared to say, in my judgment, the power to punish, under the suggestion in the case of Anderson vs. Dunn, expires with the House.

Mr. FRYE. With the House?

Mr. HURD. Yes, sir.

Mr. FRYE. Allow me to go one step further. If that power inheres in the House of Representatives, does it not also inhere in the Senate of the United States.

Mr. GARFIELD. Which never dies?

Mr. HURD. Unquestionably it does.

Mr. FRYE. Then this result would follow, from the proposition the gentleman is maintaining, that the Senate of the United States may punish a recusant witness for contempt, regardless entirely of the question whether or not the question put to that witness was lawful or unlawful, and may hold that citizen in contempt and in jail during his life.

Mr. HAMILTON, of New Jersey. Cannot any court do the same?

Mr. FRYE. I do not believe any court in Christendom can do it, or any other power.

Mr. HURD. I desire to say in response to the gentleman from Maine——

Mr. GARFIELD. In order to make this clear I have sent to the Clerk's desk to get the resolution now pending, and I wish to ask my colleague a question. I observe in reading the resolution that the word "lawful" seems to be stricken out. I read the first two or three lines in order to point to my colleague the question I desire to ask him. The preamble reads:

> Whereas one Hallet Kilbourn was subpœnaed to testify in a certain investigation ordered by this House before a committee duly authorized to send for persons and papers; and whereas during his examination as a witness the said Hallet Kilbourn refused to answer certain questions lawfully propounded to him.

I see the word "lawfully" is marked across. I desire to know from my colleague whether it is intended that the word "lawfully" shall be stricken out of the resolution?

Mr. HURD. It is not in the resolution.

Mr. GARFIELD. Then it is marked out on purpose. Then we are to say that without regard to the lawfulness of the question, leaving that out of the case, assuming even that the question may be unlawful and unconstitutional, we are to proceed with this per fas aut nefas. If that is the meaning, if the word "lawful" is stricken out on purpose, it seems to me the House ought to know it.

Mr. HURD. The word "lawful" was stricken out because it was entirely unnecessary and because the gentlemen from Maine, [Mr. FRYE,] if I may be allowed—I will not say what I was going to say. The word "lawful" was stricken out because it was wholly unnecessary, and the whole power and authority of the House in reference to this matter is based on the adjudication of the House, and not on anything preceding the adjudication.

Mr. FRYE. It was stricken out, was it not, on the distinct proposition that it made no difference whether the question was lawful or not?

Mr. HURD. Precisely so.

Mr. FRYE. That is it.

Mr. HURD. And I insist on that proposition, and I say that any gentleman who doubts it is unfamiliar with the authorities; for I know of no case of contempt in which this exact question in some form or other has not been presented. And when the case has been brought into the court which has issued the writ of habeas corpus, it has been held that the only question the court can inquire into is the extent and validity and legality of the process. They cannot go behind that to inquire whether the questions were lawful or not.

On this point I will read a passage from Hurd on Habeas Corpus:

> Where the return shows a detainer under legal process, the only proper points for examination are the existence, validity, and present legal force of the process; except where, in commitments for criminal or supposed criminal matters, the court or officer hearing the habeas corpus is invested with a revisory or corrective jurisdiction over the court or officer commanding the imprisonment, and with jurisdiction also over the offense or subject-matter of the commitment, in which case the facts constituting the grounds of the commitment may be reviewed.

And I desire to make this further suggestion, which was called to my attention just now by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR,] that if the questions which were propounded to this witness, Mr. Kilbourn, are unlawful, the illegality should be determined by the House by a reconsideration of its own action. It is not a question to be left to the courts for determination.

Mr. KELLEY. I desire to ask the gentleman before he resumes his seat a single question as to a matter of fact. He referred to a case in which a witness had been taken from the jurisdiction of the House. What was that case?

Mr. HURD. It is a case to which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] referred in some remarks made on the Irwin case at the last session. In looking over his remarks I saw that he said a witness had been already taken from the custody of the House and had not been heard from again. I repeated it on the basis of that gentleman's authority as I found it in that argument.

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman from Ohio is right in saying that I referred to such a case. But it was not the case of a witness taken from the custody of the House. It was a proceeding with which neither branch of Congress had anything to do. It was a case where a prisoner was produced in court and there was no order to retain him in custody pending the inquiry. The court failed to appoint an officer to have the custody of him and he escaped.

Mr. KELLEY. There was a casual escape?

Mr. KASSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. LYNDE. I wish to present a substitute for the resolution and preamble presented by the majority of the committee, and send it to the desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be, and he is hereby, directed to make careful return to the writ of habeas corpus in the case of Hallet Kilbourn that the prisoner is duly held by authority of the House of Representatives to answer in proceedings against him for contempt, and that the Sergeant-at-Arms take with him the body of said Kilbourn before said court when making such return as required by law.

Mr. LYNDE. Mr. Speaker, the question presented to the House by the resolution reported by the majority of the committee is whether this House will deny to a citizen of the United States, imprisoned by its order, the right to a hearing before the courts on a writ of habeas corpus. If we are to establish this precedent it is of importance that the American people and the American courts should all understand it. There is no precedent of the kind. For more than one hundred and fifty years in England, where the party has been under arrest under the order of the House of Commons or the House of Lords for contempt, writs have frequently issued from the courts and the prisoners have been brought before the courts on those writs, and in not a single instance within the last one hundred and fifty years has Parliament refused to allow the body to be brought before the courts on the writ of habeas corpus.

The gentleman who has just taken his seat speaks of authorities in the English Parliament and the precedents in that Parliament where the House of Commons had refused to bring the body into court. The last precedent of that kind was in 1704. Does the gentleman wish to go back more than one hundred and fifty years to establish precedents for this House to follow in guarding the liberties of the citizen? There has been no instance in this country, where a party has been arrested by order of any legislative body and the writ of habeas corpus has issued, where the legislature has refused to present the body in court.

Here we stand, then, without a single precedent for the last one hundred and fifty years of any legislative body to sustain the position that is taken by this committee before the House.

Mr. Speaker, we have heard a great deal about the privileges of this House. Ah! we have privileges, but there are privileges far higher and far greater than the privileges of this House. There are privileges which when you strike them down you strike at the very liberties of every citizen in the land; and if we, in the exercise of our privileges, encroach upon the liberties of the people, these privileges will be reviewed and re-adjusted by the return to this House of members who respect the constitutional rights and who will maintain the liberties of the people.

Now, why is it that gentlemen are afraid that the privileges of this House will not be respected by the courts? The point made by the resolution which I have presented as a substitute for the resolution of the committee is that the House shall instruct its Sergeant-at-Arms to make return to the writ of habeas corpus that Mr. Kilbourn is held under a judgment of this House for contempt, and present the body in court. That the gentleman from Ohio who has just taken his seat admits to be the usual and proper mode of making return to a writ of habeas corpus. Then, when the party is presented to the court, the court will look at the return, and will examine as to whether the party is in custody legally, constitutionally, and properly, under the authority of this House constitutionally exercised. The very moment it decides and determines that this House had jurisdiction over the subject-matter—not the question only but the subject-matter—and that the witness has refused to answer a question put to him in the investigation of that subject-matter, that very moment the court is bound to remit the prisoner again into the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms and he is returned to his custody.

Now, there is no conflict in the decisions on this question. I will not call the attention of the House to the authorities which the gentleman has cited, but all of the decisions in England and America where they have decided that the very moment that it appears to the court that the legislature had jurisdiction and authority to commit for contempt they would remit the party again to the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms were all made and sustained after the prisoner was brought into court and within the jurisdiction of the court, and the jurisdiction of the court was obtained through the writ of habeas corpus.

Now, what is the object of the habeas corpus? It is that the party shall be brought into court and that the person who holds him in custody shall show to the court by what authority he is held.

Now, what court is the proper tribunal to pass upon that question? This House is hardly a model body to pass upon the rights of personal liberty. We do not deliberate upon questions of legal right with that coolness, with that sense of responsibility, with that learning and investigation that the courts possess upon these questions. We have established courts for the very purpose of passing upon the rights of property and the rights of person, and the Constitution has established a judicial department of the Government and vested in it the power to pass upon such questions.

Now gentlemen who take the view represented by the report of the committee seem to be afraid that the courts of the country are going to trench upon the privileges of the House. What right have they to suppose that? We trust these courts with everything; we trust them with the right of property and of life; we authorize them to pass upon the constitutionality of every law which passes Congress and is signed by the President. They pass upon all these questions, and gentlemen do not anticipate that they are going to violate the Constitution, that they are going to prostrate the rights of property; but here in this case because an officer of the House is summoned before one of the same courts and required to show by what authority he holds Mr. Kilbourn in custody, they fear—what? Why are they so sensitive? Does the gentleman from Ohio think that we have no right to hold Mr. Kilbourn? Is he afraid that the jurisdiction of this House over the subject-matter cannot be sustained? He has no reason to do that. To do so is lowering the courts and lowering this House. We have decided that we have authority, that we have jurisdiction over the subject-matter; we have ordered this man to be imprisoned for violation of the authority and privileges of this House, and the gentleman has no right to suppose that the courts of the country will decide differently.

The gentleman who last addressed the House spoke of the difficulties and obstacles thrown in the way of any investigation arising in this House. Mr. Speaker, these difficulties have existed in the past, and the body of the party held in custody has been presented before the courts both in England and in this country; and what difficulty of this kind has been realized? What obstacle has it thrown in the way of legislation? What great purpose has been frustrated by the law as it has been understood and administered by parliaments and by courts? No, Mr. Speaker; I thought when the gentleman said that the construction that has been put upon this law for the last three hundred years should be the construction to govern us that he had laid down a rule of law that would defeat the adoption of the resolution which he had introduced himself.

I have not time, and this House would not tolerate it, to review all the authorities and all of the cases that have arisen of this kind even during the last fifty years, but I challenge the gentleman, or any other member of this House who shall follow him, to cite a single case within the last one hundred years where a party was under arrest by the order of any legislative body and a court issued a writ of habeas corpus to bring that party into court where the legislative body has insisted and stood out and refused to bring him into court.

I recollect that during the last session of Congress, I think it was, a writ of habeas corpus was issued by Judge Mac Arthur of this District to bring before the court the body of Mr. Irwin, then in custody for a contempt of this House. This House then thought, as they seem to think now, that in order to preserve the dignity of the House it must do some disloyal act. They passed a resolution in the first place instructing their Sergeant-at-Arms not to produce the body in court. They passed two resolutions before they allowed the body of the prisoner to be taken into court. The court refused to entertain any plea or any return to its writ until the body of the prisoner was brought into court, holding that if an officer could disobey that order of the court, the writ of habeas corpus, there was no certainty that any other order made by the court would be regarded; holding further that it was of the very essence of the writ of habeas corpus that the body of the prisoner should be presented at the hearing. Maintaining that position, this House, after asserting its dignity by resolutions, came down and authorized the Sergeant-at-Arms to produce the body of Mr. Irwin in court, and then the decision of the court was had. That decision was undoubtedly right, in accordance with the law. It was by one of the judges of the same court as the judge who now has issued this writ. I have no doubt that the decision of this judge will be in accordance with the law. I have not the least particle of doubt that this House will finally obey the writ of habeas corpus; that it will go before the court with the body of the prisoner, and that the court will then pass upon this question.

We have had difficulties enough in regard to this denial of the writ of habeas corpus. The American people believe that it is a writ too valuable to be trifled with. And I believe that if an amendment was proposed to-day to the Constitution of the United States, confining the power of issuing the writ of habeas corpus, as to any persons held in custody under the order of this House, to the Supreme Court of the United States, not one-third of the States of this Union would vote in favor of that amendment. They respect us to some degree; we ought to respect ourselves. We must obey the laws, and the law upon our statute-book upon this subject is perfectly plain. It commands that we shall bring the body into court with the return to the writ.

The gentleman who last spoke says that there have been cases, many cases, where the body has not been required to be produced with the return to the writ. There have been two cases in England where the Parliament refused to pay any attention whatever to the writ. The one was in 1645, the other was in 1704. But from 1704 down to this day there has been no such instance; the body has always been produced with the return to the writ. I therefore do not understand what the gentleman means, excepting those cases where the statute itself expressly provides that it must be shown to the court on the petition that the party is not held in custody by virtue of a judgment for crime, or where the prisoner is too sick to be produced in court, or some other legal impossibility to his being produced with the return to the writ.

We have been referred to the decision of the Supreme Court, delivered by Chief Justice Taney in the case of Ableman vs. Booth. We all of us—I believe I may say all of us—have the highest respect and almost reverence for the opinion of that able jurist; but the case then before the Supreme Court of the United States had no similarity to the question before us. This case arises under the laws of the United States, both tribunals in this case being tribunals of the United States Government. That case arose between the courts of the State, who were controlled and guided entirely by State laws, and the courts of the United States, who were bound to be controlled and guided solely by the laws of the United States. As Chief Justice Taney said, it was as if it was a case of a foreign government; it took the whole subject-matter of the case out of the jurisdiction and control in any way of the State courts. Therefore, when that fact came to the knowledge of the court, he held that it was not necessary that the body should be produced. And why? Because it was only by virtue of State laws that the State court was acting when they ordered the body to be brought before it. The writ was issued to an officer of the United States court, to whom the laws of the United States were supreme authority, and which laws he was bound and sworn to obey. He therefore could not surrender the body into the hands of an officer of another government and another jurisdiction entirely. I therefore say that the decision in the case of Ableman vs. Booth is no authority whatever here.

If gentlemen will present us with authorities or precedents where any Parliament within the last one hundred and fifty years has refused to bring in the body with the return to the writ, then I will acknowledge the authority as far as it goes. If they should find one, it will be one in a hundred; for all of them, so far as I can find, although they opposed in every instance when the writ of habeas corpus was issued to take out of their custody any person arrested by either house of Parliament, or either house of a legislative body, they always opposed and complained, yet they always yielded to the supreme authority of the law.

Now, there is no doubt that the court in this case will claim the right to have this prisoner brought before it with the return of the writ. That will be insisted upon, I have no doubt, as it was last year. If it is so insisted upon, are gentlemen who now advocate the adoption of the resolution reported from the majority of the Committee on the Judiciary prepared to stand by their resolution? Are they prepared to enter into a conflict with the courts of this country, with all the precedents against them, with all the sympathies of the American people against them? No, I do not believe that the members of this House are disposed to establish such a precedent as this; what I believe would be an encroachment upon the constitutional rights of a citizen.

It has been said that this House is alone the judge of its privileges. I presume, if that is good law, that the court in this case will so rule. I presume that when the prisoner is returned to the court and it is shown that the jurisdiction of this House has attached to the subject-matter, the court will say that the House is its own judge of its own privileges, and therefore will return the prisoner.

But on that question as to whether this House is the sole judge of its own privileges; whether this House can arbitrarily investigate, examine witnesses, commit for contempt, or imprison for any violation of the orders of the House; whether we can do that without a possibility of the authority of this House being examined into by a court, is a question upon which I was about to say there was some conflict of opinion. I beg pardon, Mr. Speaker; I think there is no conflict of decision; I think the authorities are all one way of late years. I admit that in the conflict between the House of Commons and the House of Lords, in which the House of Commons refused to deliver up the bodies of five persons who were then under arrest by it, the House of Commons did claim in that controversy with the House of Lords that it was the sole judge of the privileges of the house.

Chief Justice Denman, in 9 Adolphus and Ellis, in the case of Stockdale vs. Hansard, in 1839, said:

> The next defense involved in this plea is that the defendant committed the grievance by order of the House of Commons in a case of privilege, and that each house of Parliament is the sole judge of its privilege. This last proposition requires to be first considered, for if the attorney-general was right in contending, as he did more than once in express terms, that the House of Commons by claiming anything as its privilege thereby makes it a matter of privilege, and also that its own decision upon its own claim is binding and conclusive, then plainly this court cannot proceed in any inquiry into the matter and has nothing else to do but declare the claim well founded, because it has been made. This is the form in which I understand a committee of the late House of Commons have asserted the privileges of both houses of Parliament; and we are informed that a large majority of that house adopted the assertion. It is not without the utmost respect and deference that I proceed to examine what has been promulgated by such high authority. Most willingly would I decline to enter upon an inquiry which may lead to my differing from that great and powerful assembly; but, when one of my fellow-subjects presents himself before me in this court demanding justice for an injury, it is not at my option to grant or withhold redress. I am bound to afford it if the law declares him entitled to it. I must, then, ascertain how the law stands. Whatever defense may be made by the wrong-doer, I must examine its validity. The learned counsel for the defendant contends for his legal right to be protected against all consequences acting under an order issued by the House of Commons in conformity with what that house asserts to be its privilege. Can I avoid, then, the question whether the defendant possesses that legal right or not?
> Parliament is said to be supreme. I must fully acknowledge its supremacy. It follows, then, as before observed, that neither branch of it is supreme when acting by itself. It is also said that the privilege of each house is the privilege of the whole Parliament. In one sense I agree to this, because whatever embodies the proper action of either embodies those functions which are necessary for the performance of their joint duties. All the essential parts of the machine must be in order before it can work at all. But it by no means follows that the opinion that either House may entertain of the extent of its own privileges is correct or its declaration of them binding. In the course of the argument the privilege of the Commons is said to belong to them for their protection against encroachment by the Lords. The fact of an attempt at encroachment may then be imagined, and we must also suppose that the Commons would resist it. In such a case, the claims set up by the two houses being inconsistent, both cannot be well founded; and an instance would occur of adverse opinions and declarations, while the real privilege, whenever it is asserted, would certainly be the inherent right of Parliament itself.

I will not read further from this decision. In it Lord Denman claims—and he maintains the same view in a subsequent opinion in another case, which will be found in 11 Adolphus and Ellis—that the court even has a right to inquire into the privileges of the house of Parliament. If by that is meant that the court has a right to determine whether the Parliament had jurisdiction over the subject-matter, it is sustained by numerous authorities in this country as well as in England. I think there is one case in the State of Wisconsin——

Mr. HILL. I would like to ask the gentleman whether the case to which he has referred was one arising on habeas corpus?

Mr. LYNDE. I think that was not on habeas corpus. I will ask indulgence while I refer to a case in 7 Wisconsin Reports, page 528. This was a case of habeas corpus, where the party was arrested for refusing to answer questions or refusing to appear, one or both; and the court in deciding it said:

> The counsel who opened the argument for petitioner seemed to anticipate that some question might be made as to the right and power of this court to inquire into the authority of the body instituting the proceedings in the progress of which the commitment was made, and determine whether that body had or had not exceeded its jurisdiction in the premises; but I did not understand that this power of the court was seriously questioned by the counsel for the respondent. At all events I do not think that the contrary doctrine could be successfully maintained. Upon principle it would seem clear that when this court issued the writ of habeas corpus to inquire into the cause of the imprisonment of a citizen of a State, it must from necessity have the right further to inquire into the matter and determine whether the committing body, the magistrate, had jurisdiction or not. Otherwise the issuing of the writ would be an idle ceremony and really to no purpose. But this question has been settled, as well by the authorities as by the express provisions of the statute.

Assuming then without further argument the proposition that this court has the power to inquire into the authority of the Legislature to enter upon the investigation of the matters named in the joint resolution we are next to determine whether the subject-matter of this resolution was a proper subject for the investigation of the Legislature, and, if so, whether the investigation could be made in the manner contemplated by the resolution; for it would seem to follow as a necessary consequence that, if the Legislature could enter upon the investigation at all in the matter proposed, in order to make such investigation effectual there must be some way of compelling the attendance of witnesses before the committee and to give evidence.

In that case, after investigating the question and deciding that the Legislature had authority and had jurisdiction over the subject-matter, the court passed upon the case and delivered the prisoner back to the custody of the sergeant-at-arms, he having violated the privileges of the House by refusing to answer the questions.

I would also, without reading it to the House, refer to the case of Burnham vs. Morrissey, in 14 Gray, page 240, where the court held it had power to inquire into the lawfulness of imprisonment by order of the house of representatives of Massachusetts. The opinion was delivered by Judge Hoar, and I am very sorry that my colleague on the committee [Mr. HOAR] is not of the same opinion as the judge.

Mr. HOAR. The gentleman, in making this personal allusion, should say that the author of that opinion expressed on the floor of this House at its last session precisely the views which I now maintain.

Mr. LYNDE. The views expressed by the judge on this floor I am not familiar with. I leave that to be discussed by those who heard him. It shows how a judge upon the bench will decide a case, and then, when he comes to be a politician on the floor of this House, may decide the same case in another way. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOAR. Possibly it shows that there is no conflict between that opinion (which the gentleman says he will not read) and the present resolution.

Mr. LYNDE. If I have any time left, I yield it to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has twenty minutes remaining.

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Speaker, I hope in the short time remaining I shall be able to state the issues to the House as I understand them.

Sir, I hope the time will be long delayed when an American citizen whose property or whose liberty is involved finds his final court of jurisdiction in the American House of Representatives. The proposition made here by the majority of the committee is that, in a given case, one of our citizens shall have no review by a court of this country, no appeal to any other jurisdiction, no possible reconsideration of the judgment of the House of Representatives. Is that within the meaning of the American Constitution when it declares the writ of habeas corpus shall never be suspended except in time of rebellion or invasion? Is this a body so composed as to determine upon rights of personal liberty in an individual case or upon rights of personal property in an individual case? Can this House determine whether there is due from Jay Cooke & Co. to the United States the sum of $10,000 or $100,000 and, if they have all the testimony in the world upon it, to give a judgment and make execution of it? Can this House award judgment for one dollar of money when it involves the rights of a citizen? Yet it is contended here it shall make, beyond all appeal, beyond all reconsideration, decision of a citizen's right to his liberty.

I deny the existence of the right in the House of Representatives to take any citizen under any circumstances in the broad domain of the United States and say to him, first, "We deprive you of your liberty," and, secondly, in addition to that, "You shall not have the decision of any court of the country as to whether you are entitled to liberty or are bound to slavery."

Point me to an instance in the record of this country where this House hitherto, or the Senate, its co-ordinate branch, has denied the review of the courts—not the review, but the decision of the courts—upon a question of personal liberty or personal right.

I affirm that you are now proposing to do it distinctly and pointedly, and you will have to do it by the yeas and nays. You must now decide whether you will establish this precedent for the first time; whether a citizen, whom you choose to summon as a witness to appear under your unquestioned power to take testimony, shall be denied the great writ to obtain which nations have fought, and any number of lives have been lost, to give it security among the institutions of the race to which we belong. It is incorporated even in the imperfect constitutional rights of Great Britain, in the Magna Charta, and no tribunal, I venture to say, within one hundred years has ever dared to deny the right of an English or American citizen to the privileges of that writ in time of tranquillity.

Gentlemen said the other day that in the last Congress I among others had proposed to deny it. It is not correct. In the case most elaborately argued and considered of any perhaps ever before this House of Representatives—I refer to the case of Irwin—there, in the first day's discussion, you will see in the debate in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD my argument asserting the duty of this House to authorize its Sergeant-at-Arms to produce to the court the body of the witness when he made his return. I beg, as it states the position of my argument here, to ask that the following extract which I have marked may be read by the Clerk in the hearing of the House. There I state distinctly that under this statute we cannot avoid the production of the body of the prisoner when the return is made by our officer, and I gave the reasons succinctly for that position.

The Clerk read as follows:

The statute regulates proceedings of habeas corpus without eliminating from its provisions either House of Congress. The writ may issue, it is provided in section 733 of the Revised Statutes, where the prisoner is in jail—

"Where he is in custody under or by color of the authority of the United States."

We assume that this witness is in custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms "under or by color of the authority of the United States." If that be admitted, then we ascertain what the next step is under the statute. Section 755 reads:

"The court or justice or judge to whom such application is made shall forthwith award a writ of habeas corpus, unless it appears from the petition itself that the party is not entitled thereto."

Who is to judge whether under that application the writ should be awarded? It seems to me that the court must judge whether the application is sufficient for awarding the writ. And if that be also conceded, then the judge may issue the writ when the witness is in custody under authority or by color of the authority of the United States. And if it be further conceded that the order of the House of Representatives is of that color and the writ issues, then what is to be done? The next section provides that—

"The person to whom the writ is directed shall certify to the court or justice or judge before whom it is returnable the true cause of the detention of such party."

There, then, is a duty prescribed to the Sergeant-at-Arms when the writ shall have been issued in accordance with the preceding section. Now, what is the next step? Section 758 says:

"The person making the return shall at the same time bring the body of the party before the judge who granted the writ."

There you will observe that the statute of the United States says that if the return is made it shall be accompanied at the same time by the body of the witness. Now, if the judge is satisfied upon the facts that he ought to issue the writ, we cannot, I submit, make an issue with the judge except upon the ground that the judge has not the case properly before him. If these assumptions are correct, then in point of fact the return in this case was made to the court sworn to by the Sergeant-at-Arms, but the court declined to receive it because the body of the witness did not accompany the return. In that situation gentlemen will not fail to observe that the right of this body to punish for contempt is not involved. We are not advised that anybody disputes it or disputes the right of the House to hold this witness in custody. I submit that the only question before the House is, Have we the right under the provision of the Revised Statutes of the United States which I have read to prevent our Sergeant-at-Arms, by our order, from obeying the order of the court under the writ which the judge has issued?

Mr. G. F. HOAR. Has the gentleman considered the question whether any statute can control the power of the House in this matter?

Mr. KASSON. I have considered that question, and I apprehend that the mode in which the power of this House may be exercised is subject to regulation by statute under the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. KASSON. Certainly.

Mr. ELDREDGE. The question I desire to ask is by way of suggestion. I understood the gentleman to have put a question to the House as to whether the power of this House can or ought to be resisted by the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. KASSON. No; whether the power of the court ought to be resisted.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Does not the question go to this extent: whether one House of Congress can set itself up and is in fact above the law and above the action of the whole Congress and the Executive of this Government? Is it not a question, in fact, whether the House can resist the law of the land?

Mr. KASSON. I have only stated the question as simply as possible, because I regard it as one arising directly under this statute which has been quoted; and, so far as my own opinion is worth anything, I cannot but think that the statute intends in all cases arising upon arrests made under authority of the United States, or under color of the authority of the United States, to submit the question in the first instance to the judge whether the writ should issue; then, the writ having issued, the statute is specific that the body must accompany the return; and there is the point we are now discussing.

Mr. KASSON. On the next day, in continuance of the debate, I ask the Clerk to read what then occurred.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Speaker, before sending up the resolution or it is read, in order it may be more readily understood, I wish to say that owing to the language of the statute, which seems imperative, in the opinion of the judge, that at the time of making the return the body should be produced, it has been thought expedient we should provide for the facts upon our record to be presented respectfully to the judge in person, under the advice of his counsel, when it is believed by the counsel and by the members of the committee who have considered the subject, the judge will then have before him the record of this tribunal, which meets any question of doubt which may arise on the allegations of the petition, while at the same time, not being a formal technical return, it does not raise the question of the production of the body. The object of these orders, therefore, is twofold: first, to make the duty of the Sergeant-at-Arms specific; and, secondly, to treat with all proper respect the judge who has the question before him by having these facts presented to him. I wish to answer it upon careful consideration, and with the approval of his counsel, who I believe are well known to the members of this House as competent to give a sound opinion.

Mr. DAWES. Now let the resolution be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

"In the matter of the proceedings against the Sergeant-at-Arms of this House for the production of the body of Richard B. Irwin, held in his custody for contempt of the House of Representatives.

"Ordered, That the Sergeant-at-Arms, with the aid of counsel, make known to the judge issuing the writ of habeas corpus requiring the body of Richard B. Irwin to be brought before the said judge, that he, the said Sergeant-at-Arms, has said Irwin in his custody pursuant to an order of this House upon its judgment that the said Irwin was in contempt of the House of Representatives, and for no other reason. That the House of Representatives requires of him to retain the body of said Irwin in his custody until the said Irwin shall offer to purge himself of said contempt, as provided by the order of this House, and that he respectfully inform the judge that, as an officer of this House, he cannot disobey the orders thereof in this respect by releasing in any way or transferring said Irwin from his custody; and further "Ordered, That he exhibit to the said judge a copy of the order of this House, duly certified by the clerk, adjudging the said Irwin in contempt, and the warrant of the Speaker in execution thereof, together with a copy of this order."

Mr. KASSON. It is proper I should add that there is a clause in the petition falsely asserting the witness is held to await further proceedings under the statute of 1867, which requires the intervention of a court and grand jury. We understand the point which is made upon the mind of the judge. Hence the language here which we think both the Sergeant-at-Arms and the judge are entitled to have in due form that it was for contempt, and for no other reason. I believe that is all I have to say.

Mr. KASSON. Then we have a proceeding regulated by statute, and as that debate will show, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] in front of me asked if I had considered a certain question as to the power of a statute to control the rights of this House in respect to a recusant witness. I answered that I had, and that in my judgment the American Congress, of which this House is a part, had a right to regulate the mode in which the writ of habeas corpus should be executed in respect to a person under the jurisdiction of this House. I maintain that right to-day, and affirm that Congress, including the House and all the legislative elements of the Government, has passed a statute stating what should be done in the case of a writ of habeas corpus, covering even their own witnesses, namely, not that we should have no right over the witness, but that we shall direct our Sergeant-at-Arms to take with him the witness before the court, and tell the court in the presence of the witness that he is held, and in what way he is held, by the House of Representatives. And then the court, finding that fact, that he is lawfully held by this House, will remand him to the custody of our officer.

The debate which has run upon this subject has gone outside of the question at issue. I say now, as I said the other day, there is no question made by us as to our right to hold a witness over whom we have jurisdiction, and who is in contempt. The question is, have we a right in the face of a statute of the United States to say that such a witness shall not be produced in accordance with the statute, and be presented face to face before the court, brought by our officer under this writ to the judge, that the judge may take cognizance of the fact that we do hold him because he is in contempt of this House?

That is the whole question. It is claimed by the majority of the committee that we shall not allow our officer to take this witness before a high court of justice to tell the court, with the body of the witness there produced, how and why we hold him. And, sir, this very court, the supreme court of this District, than which there is no higher tribunal except the Supreme Court of the United States—gentlemen talk about "police courts;" it is the highest tribunal save one—this court says it cannot decide anything without the production of the body of the witness. He may need to traverse the return itself. And in the last Congress, as soon as under our order the witness was produced, the court found he was held by the House of Representatives lawfully, and must be remanded or the writ dismissed. Let your witness to-day go before this same court, and let it appear that he is lawfully held by the House of Representatives, and the judge tells your Sergeant-at-Arms: "We cannot interfere with this witness; take him back."

Are you going to stand quibbling upon a point like this in the face of your own precedent in the last Congress, established by a vote of 107 against 64, when nearly every voting democrat in the House voted in favor of Mr. Beck's resolution? That resolution is, with the name changed, verbatim that offered now by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LYNDE] as a substitute. The chairman of the Real-Estate Pool Committee, the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. GLOVER,] if I read the record right, voted for it. The majority of the Missouri delegation which voted, if I read the record right, voted for it. The majority of the Ohio delegation voting, if I read the record right, voted for it. And nearly every man who voted against it was I believe on this side of the House and voted against it owing to the fact that it went so far as to make no provision as to the custody of the prisoner pending the proceedings in the court. The yeas on that vote were as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Averill, Banning, Barrere, Beck, Bell, Berry, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Brown, Buckner, Burchard, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. Butler, Cain, Caldwell, Cason, Cessna, John B. Clark, jr., Clements, Stephen A. Cobb, Cook, Corwin, Crittenden, Crossland, Crounse, Davis, Dunnell, Durham, Eames, Eldredge, Field, Giddings, Glover, Gooch, Gunter, Hagans, Hancock, Benjamin W. Harris, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hatcher, Joseph R. Hawley, Hereford, Houghton, Hubbell, Hunton, Kasson, Kellogg, Knapp, Lamar, Lamison, Leach, Lofland, Lowe, Luttrell, Magee, Alexander S. McDill, McKee, McNulta, Milliken, Mills, Myers, Neal, Negley, Niblack, Orth, Hosea W. Parker, Isaac C. Parker, Parsons, Pelham, Pendleton, Rainey, Ransier, Ray, Robbins, Rusk, Sawyer, Henry B. Sayler, Schell, Shanks, Sheats, H. Boardman Smith, Snyder, Southard, Standiford, Stone, Strait, Sypher, Charles R. Thomas, Christopher Y. Thomas, Thornburgh, Todd, Vance, Waddell, Jasper D. Ward, Whitehead, Whitthorne, George Willard, William Williams, William B. Williams, and Willie—107.

Sir, the question is too important for us to pass in haste, as we have done heretofore. As I have said before, this body, as we all know, is not so deliberative and so judicial that on a question of personal rights of a citizen we should deny the privilege of the courts of our country to anybody whose liberty we have under our restraint. Under our constitutional system the citizen looks to the courts for his liberty. Is there an unconstitutional law passed affecting the citizens of the South or the North, is it to this House that you have looked to nullify it? Look at the records of your Supreme Court declaring even our laws unconstitutional and void, and having the right to do it, in the protection of personal rights as well as State rights. It is to the courts we have all appealed as a last resort.

Sir, in England, where they have no written constitution and Parliament is supreme, the courts can declare no law void. And now, with such powers as our courts exercise here, with such powers as they have for protecting the rights of the citizen, designated as they are the constitutional organs for taking care of the rights of the citizen, we, the Representatives of the people, are called upon here to deny that this citizen now in our hands shall have the right to be brought by our officer into the presence of the judge, that the judge may find the one fact that he is held by the House of Representatives pursuant to a lawful proceeding (if it be such) for a contempt of this body.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. KASSON. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Suppose the minority resolution is adopted and the Sergeant-at-Arms takes the body of the prisoner in court and makes known the cause of his detention and the authority by which he is detained, and suppose the court decides to discharge the prisoner, what then under the resolution would be the duty of the Sergeant-at-Arms?

Mr. KASSON. The precedent established in the case of the House by this identical supreme court of the District of Columbia shows that as soon as that court finds upon the return of the writ accompanied by the body, without which he cannot examine the return, that the witness is held by lawful authority of the House, the proceedings are at once dismissed. We had in the last session some of the ablest counsel perhaps to be found in the District—Mr. Shellabarger, of Ohio, and Mr. Fisher—and what they claimed was that the proceedings on the production of the body should be dismissed; that is in their final argument. We did entertain the doubt whether we ought not to say that pending the proceedings the witness ought to be held in the custody of our officer.

But it was urged, I think by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] and some others, that it was disrespectful to the court, because when the witness came before the court, his body being produced, we could not deny to the court the practical jurisdiction over the body; and it was for that reason that the House adopted, by an immense majority, Mr. Beck's resolution which simply directed the Sergeant-at-Arms to take the body with him in answering the writ and said nothing about the custody. In point of fact, the custody never was taken from the Sergeant-at-Arms; and, upon the return to the writ being made to the court by the Sergeant-at-Arms with the body of the witness, the court determined that the proceeding under the writ must be dismissed. That is all that is contended for now, that the Sergeant-at-Arms when he makes his return shall take with him the body of the witness, because the statute says that must be done in every case, and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LYNDE] has shown you that even in England for the last one hundred and fifty years, under the thirty-second of the statutes of Charles II, there has never been a case in which the party has not been produced with return to the writ, so that he may say to the court what he has to say touching the truth of the return. That is the whole principle involved—the right of the citizen to be confronted with the court and with his jailer, to correct errors if any there be where his personal liberty is involved; and until a return is made with the body of the witness accompanying it there is no complete issue upon which the court will act, when the great writ of habeas corpus is in force.

I submit, sir, that there is no justification for us if we deny the right of the court to pass upon the question involved in this case in the presence of the prisoner. It would be in the face of the action which has been previously taken in similar cases under identically the same circumstances and a violation of the statute, and without justification in view of the fact of the result of that action in the case of Irwin. In referring to the record in that case I find that the yeas and nays were not called upon the first resolution of the House; and, as I have already stated, in a House then largely republican—indeed nearly two-thirds so—the yeas in favor of Mr. Beck's resolution were 107 to 64 nays; and that resolution was exactly that which we are called to vote upon now as the substitute offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. LYNDE,] who is a member of the Committee on the Judiciary.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, I have now stated the case as I look at it and as I have always looked at it. I believe that it is the duty of an officer of this House, as it is the duty of any citizen of the country, to comply with the statute in relation to this proceeding of habeas corpus by the production of the body of this witness before the court in connection with his return to the writ; and then, if the return is true, affirming our lawful custody, the judge has nothing to do but that which was done in former cases: remand the witness to the custody of our officer to await the further order of the House.

Mr. JENKS. I desire to offer the following amendment to the resolution reported by the majority of the Committee on the Judiciary:

After the word "Kilbourn," where it last occurs in the resolution, insert the following words:

And the irregularity of issuing the writ without a previous order nisi, or rule to show cause.

Mr. LAWRENCE. If the House were now called upon for the first time to decide whether Hallet Kilbourn is guilty of refusing to answer a proper question or of refusing to produce books which the House has a right to demand, I might hesitate as to the decision the House should make. If the question before us were now whether this House should, by its own act, reverse the order of imprisonment already made, I would deliberate long and gravely before I would decide that it should not be done.

But these are not now the questions before us. The question now to be decided is whether the sentence pronounced and the decision already made by the House can be re-examined and annulled by the judge of a civil court. If this be so, it must be confessed that every investigation ordered by the House is at the mercy of a single judge who may be wise or otherwise, who may be learned or unlearned, and who as well as the House may err in the judgment he shall render.

In this particular case I know the learning, the undoubted ability and integrity of the distinguished judge who issued the writ for Kilbourn. I do not doubt but he will decide correctly as to the custody of the witness. But this is not the question now we are to decide. If the House now shall surrender to an alien jurisdiction, organized for other purposes, its power to investigate and expose and legislate against corruption and fraud, and thus imperil every interest of the people, they may well start the inquiry whether we have not grievously erred to their prejudice.

In support of the resolution reported by the committee, I will endeavor to demonstrate the four following propositions:

I. The House has power to institute investigations by committees and to summon and examine witnesses.

II. As an incident of this power, the House has authority to judge of contempts on the part of witnesses in refusing to testify, and to punish the same by imprisonment.

III. The judgment of the House is final and conclusive—

1. As to its jurisdiction; and

2. As to the right mode and expediency of exercising it by sentence of imprisonment.

It follows from and as a consequence of this that no judicial court can inquire upon habeas corpus into the jurisdiction of the House to imprison during the existence of the Congress.

It is a sufficient answer to a writ of habeas corpus that the prisoner is held by the Sergeant-at-Arms, and he is not required to produce the body.

IV. This rule has not been changed by any statute.

1. The House has power to institute investigations by committees and to summon and examine witnesses on oath.

That this power exists will scarcely be denied.

It has always been exercised by each house of Parliament in Great Britain by virtue of the lex parliamentaria.

Two eminent authorities refer the power to this source in these words:

As every court of justice hath laws and customs for its direction, some the civil and canon, some the common law, others their own peculiar laws and customs, so the high court of Parliament hath also its own peculiar law, called the lex et consuetudo parliamenti. (4 Institutes, 15; 1 Blackstone's Commentaries, page 163.)

How is this law proved?

Blackstone says:

The only method of proving that this or that maxim is a rule of the common law is by showing that it hath always been the custom to observe it; and it is laid down as a general rule that the decisions of courts of justice are the evidence of what is common law.

May, in his Parliamentary Practice, says:

The same rule is strictly applicable to matters of privilege, and to the expounding of the unwritten law of Parliament.

Taking, then, the practice of each house of Parliament as evidence of what its powers are under this law, there can be no doubt of the power to summon and examine witnesses; for, in the language of Blackstone, "it hath always been the custom."

What is the character of this power? It is not judicial; for the Commons alone cannot exercise any judicial power. Parliament may, in which it differs from Congress; and the House of Lords may as an appellate court, but the Commons cannot; and in this respect this House is like the Commons.

What, then, is the source of the power? It is an incident of the legislative authority of the Commons. It grows out of the rule alike of the common and parliamentary law, that where a power is given, this ex necessitate carries with it all the other incidental powers "necessary and proper" to make it effectual.

How far does the power extend?

2. It extends so far as to punish by censure or commitment witnesses who refuse to testify or to produce papers under their control. The evidence that this power exists as a part of the lex parliamentari is the fact that it has always been exercised. "The right to commit for contempt," says May, is "universally acknowledged to belong to both houses." (Parliamentary Practice, page 63.)

These two powers of examining witnesses and of punishing for contempt belong to this House as fully as to the Commons of England. Since these are not judicial powers, they are open to no objection on that ground. There is, indeed, no specific declaration by enumeration in the Constitution that this House may exercise any such power, but it is nevertheless conferred by the Constitution.

It declares that—

All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

And again:

The Congress shall have power—
To exercise exclusive legislation, in all cases whatsoever, over the District of Columbia.

Now, although the British constitution is not written in the same sense as ours, and in full, yet the power of Parliament is derivative, and it is conferred by unwritten law, if not in the same terms, yet the same in effect as those which confer exclusive legislative power on Congress over the District of Columbia.

The legislative power then given to Parliament by words like those of our Constitution is in England construed to cover the two powers I have mentioned—to examine witnesses and to imprison for refusal to testify.

When the same power was given in practically the same words in our Constitution, they must be construed here as they were in England when our Constitution was adopted.

It is a rule in construing constitutions and statutes that where words are copied from a prior constitution or statute they carry with them the same construction given to the original. (Sedgwick on Statutes, &c.)

But this is not all. It is well settled that we imported from England not only the municipal common law, but the lex et consuetudo parliamenti also.

May, in his work on Parliamentary Practice, page 67, says:

So essential to the functions of a legislature is the right to judge of contempts of its authority, and to punish them, that in the United States, where the Constitution is silent upon this subject, it has been repeatedly exercised not only by the House of Representatives but also by local Legislatures, and has been upheld by the Supreme Court on the ground of inherent right and necessity. (1 Story on Constitution, § 846; Cooley on Constitutional Limitations, page 134; McCrary's American Law of Elections, § 524; Anderson vs. Dunn, 6 Wheaton, page 204; Jefferson's Manual, § 3; 5 Dow; Parliamentary Reports, page 165; Burdett vs. Abbott, 14 East, page 1; Burdett vs. Coleman, 14 East, page 163; 4 Blackstone's Commentaries, page 283; Comyn's Digest, Title Parliament, G.)

The existence of this right is proved by its continuous exercise since the foundation of the Government.

3. A judicial court has no power on habeas corpus to revise sentence of commitment made by the House either for want of jurisdiction or an erroneous exercise of authority.

This must be so—

1. On reasons of public policy;

2. From the nature and structure of our Government; and

3. It is so on authority.

And, first, as to the law founded on reasons of public policy. All law is, or is intended to be, based on reason. Rules of law are established because the public good requires them.

Cushing in his Law and Practice of Legislative Assemblies, page 369, says:

One of the modes by which a legislative assembly obtains a knowledge of facts, upon which its orders, resolutions, or acts are founded, is by examination of witnesses.

Now let us see the importance of giving the House the means of obtaining information and the danger of permitting it be interfered with. Congress legislates for forty millions of people. It decides on war and peace. Its legislation affects life, liberty, property, sometimes it may the peace of the world. Let it be supposed the emissaries of a foreign government are among us conspiring to precipitate us into a war with a foreign power. Let us suppose our own citizens are entering into the conspiracy. It is important for the House to know if this is the fact, that it may make laws which the President can execute to protect our Government, our homes, the lives and property of our citizens. Immediate information and action are necessary. A witness is summoned before a committee and while giving his testimony he applies for a habeas corpus. Can a court inquire whether the subject of his testimony is one as to which the House has a right to inquire?

Can legislation be arrested to await the pleasure of some judge in deciding on a habeas corpus? If it can in an unimportant case it may in one involving the highest interests. The danger of permitting any such inquiry is manifest and so great that its perils cannot be doubted.

The power to examine witnesses before committees is so transcendently important that it goes far beyond the power of the courts. In the courts a witness cannot be compelled to give evidence that may criminate himself, and he is made the judge to decide if it will. But before a committee of Congress he has no such exemption.

Cushing says:

A witness cannot excuse himself from answering on the ground that he may thereby subject himself to a civil action or expose himself to a criminal prosecution. (Cushing, page 369, § 983.)

This is the rule of parliamentary law. The act of Congress of January 24, 1862, as carried into the Revised Statutes, section 103, affirms this doctrine by saying no witness shall be excused from testifying—

Upon the ground that his testimony or his production of such paper may tend to disgrace him or otherwise render him infamous.

Because of this the practice of Parliament is to pass acts "to indemnify witnesses from all the penal consequences of their testimony." (May, page 389; Election Compromises, 1842, act 5 and 6 Victoria, chapter 31; Sudbury Disfranchisement, 1843, 6 and 7 Victoria, chapter 11; Gaming Transactions, 1844, 7 and 8 Victoria, chapter 7.) And Congress has protected witnesses by a general law. (Revised Statutes, § 859; act January 24, 1862, 12 Statutes, page 333; act January 24, 1857, 11 Statutes, page 156.)

Before a committee of Congress even counsel can be compelled to disclose confidential communications of clients.

Here the maxim applies: Salus populi suprema lex.

But it may be said this power of the House is liable to abuse, and there should be some protection for the rights of a citizen. The power is liable to abuse. So is all power. If the courts were all infallible, and if Congress could afford the delay of appealing to them, the objection would have great weight. But if such a power existed in the courts, it would also be liable to abuse. The courts could then abuse their powers to the great detriment of the public interests. In time of war and other great emergencies and in the closing hours of a Congress such a power in the courts will be liable to great danger of abuse. It is much more likely that injury would result to all the people from tolerating judicial supervision over the exercise of legislative powers than that individuals would suffer from any wrong imprisonment by the House. No great hardship can result, because the witness will always have it in his power to relieve himself by testifying. And this can rarely ever result in any great evil, while really great evils may result if a judicial court could put an end to investigations by the House.

"Investigating committees" are among the approved and useful agencies for exposing frauds, for providing the means of legislating against them, and for ascertaining what officers deserve impeachment. If we shall now say that all these useful agencies may be arrested by a single judge we must assume that he combines in himself a wisdom that cannot err, a purity that cannot be bribed or corrupted, while a majority of two hundred and ninety-two members of this House is a less safe repository of human rights and public interests than one single judge. If that be so it is high time the House was disbanded and abolished. This danger of the abuse of power by the House was adverted to in Kearney's case, 7 Wheaton, 41.

In reply to it Judge Story said:

The argument of inconvenience has been pressed upon us with great earnestness. But where the law is clear this argument can be of no avail; and it will probably be found that there are also serious inconveniences on the other side. Wherever power is lodged it may be abused. But this forms no valid objection against its exercise. Confidence must be reposed somewhere.

Then, again, from the very nature and structure of our Government the judicial courts cannot interfere. The first difficulty the courts encounter is that they are not organized to administer parliamentary law. The courts are clothed with power to administer the common law, the equity law, the statute law, but not the lex et consuetudo parliamentari. They cannot administer the unwritten law, which is administered by Congress. The judicial power is one thing, legislative power is another. Judicial law is one kind of law, but parliamentary law is a different law. Courts administer one, but Congress alone can administer the other

The next difficulty which the courts encounter grows out of the necessity of preserving the independence and powers of co-ordinate branches of the Government. Neither House of Congress nor both combined can review or reverse the sentence or judgment of a court, however much it may err or abuse its powers. Its judgment is final and there is no relief. The reason is that the sentence is an exercise of judicial power and Congress cannot exercise judicial power.

But the sentence of this House is a legitimate exercise of its legislative power made by virtue of the unwritten law it administers.

The power that made it can unmake it; legislative power can unmake what legislative power has made. But a judicial court cannot review or reverse a legislative sentence, because a court cannot exercise legislative power. If the sentence cannot be reversed it is in force and binding, and a court cannot take the person who is sentenced out of the power of the sentence, for that would accomplish by indirection what could not be done directly.

The office of the writ of habeas corpus is not to review or reverse a sentence. It has been solemnly decided that it cannot be used to release from imprisonment under a sentence for a longer period than the law authorizes. (Shaw ex parte, 7 Ohio State, page 81; 6 Vermont, page 509; 1 Barber's Supreme Court, page 340; Ex parte Wagener, 1 Disney, Ohio, page 10.

This necessity of preserving intact the powers and independence of co-ordinate branches of our general system is well understood.

The Supreme Court has decided that a State cannot tax the agencies by which the National Government is carried on; for if so, these agencies might be impaired, if not destroyed. (McCulloch vs. Maryland; Bank of Commerce vs. New York, 2 Black, page 628; Bank-tax case, 2 Wallace, page 200; Bank vs. Mayor of New York, 7 Wallace, page 16; Bank vs. Supervisors, 7 Wallace, page 26; Bank of Louisville vs. Kentucky, 9 Wallace, page 353; Van Allen vs. Assessors.)

The Supreme Court has determined that Congress cannot tax the salary of a State officer or the process of its courts, because, if so, the agencies by which the State is carried on might be seriously impaired. These decisions do not arise upon any express provision of the Constitution, but they arise from the nature and structure of the Government and the necessity of preserving intact the powers of each as co-ordinate parts of the system.

This doctrine is carried so far that the Supreme Court has decided that if a marshal holds the custody of a citizen by process issuing under the national authority he is not bound to produce the body in answer to a writ of habeas corpus issued under the authority of a State, but it is a sufficient return to say he is held by virtue of process under the national authority. (Ableman vs. Booth, 21 Howard, 503; 9 Congressional Record, 725, January 25, 1875.)

This is an answer to all that may be said in favor of the proposition that the court cannot hear the application without the production of the body.

It is not necessary to produce the body to determine the question of jurisdiction to interfere with the authority of the House. All the books and cases say that if a person lawfully imprisoned on a sentence for crime shows this in his petition the court will refuse to issue the writ.

The same necessity exists for preserving intact the powers and independence of each House of Congress as against interference by the courts, as to preserve independence between the courts of the nation and a State.

This necessity has been admitted as between the courts themselves. Courts of co-ordinate powers cannot interfere with each other in dealing with the custody of persons.

It is only when one court has a revisory power over another that it can so interfere. (Ex parte Kearney, 7 Wheaton, 38; Hurd on Habeas Corpus, 254.)

The independence of the House is so perfect, its jurisdiction so far beyond the courts, that a judicial court cannot summon a member as a witness. He is privileged because his presence to vote is so important, his absence might be so ruinous to great public inetrests, that he cannot be called away for mere private interests. His absence might destroy a quorum; it might change the result on measures affecting war and peace. The privilege is not that of a member to waive, and his testimony in court can only be procured by leave of the House. (Cushing, § 598; 1 Hatsel, 112, 118, 171, 173; D'Ewes, 637; 1 Dwarris, 103, 105; Jefferson's Manual, § 3; Journal of House, Fourteenth Congress, first session, 605; Journal of Senate, Fourth Congress, 259, and other instances cited in Cushing, page 242, § 599, note.)

Jefferson, in his Manual, says the reason is that—

A member has superior duties to perform in another place.

It follows from all this and from the nature and structure of the National Government that a judicial court cannot revise or interfere with the execution of a sentence made in pursuance of parliamentary law.

And this is so on authority. The power of the House to imprison for contempt has been sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States. (McCrary's American Law of Elections, § 524; Anderson vs. Dunn, 6 Wheaton, page 204.)

May, in his Parliamentary Practice, says:

In 1675 the House of Commons directed the lieutenant of the Tower to make no returns to any writ of habeas corpus relating to persons imprisoned by its order; and in 1704 similar directions were given to the sergeant-at-arms.

He adds that "it has since been the invariable practice for the sergeant-at-arms and others, by order of the house, to make returns to writs of habeas corpus."

Mark the words "by order of the house." This implies that the house is under no legal obligation to submit its rights and privileges to the judgment of a court.

But even if the habeas corpus act of England extends to persons imprisoned by order of Parliament, it does not follow that our habeas corpus act does or can extend to such persons.

This question becomes very important in view of the fact that it has been decided that if the body is produced, "it is entirely under the control and direction of the court." (Barth vs. Close, 12 Wallace, page 400.)

In ex parte Kearney, 7 Wheaton, 44, Mr. Justice Story considered the question now made.

He adopted the words of Chief Justice De Grey, in 3 Wilson, 188.

When the House of Commons adjudged anything to be a contempt or a breach of privilege, their adjudication is a conviction, and their commitment in consequence is execution; and no court can discharge on bail a person that is in execution by the judgment of any other court. The House of Commons therefore having an authority to commit, and that commitment being an execution, what can this court do? It can do nothing, when a person is in execution by the judgment of a court having a competent jurisdiction.

Blackstone says:

Infinite confusion and disorder would follow if courts could by writs of habeas corpus examine and determine the contempts of others.

To the same effect is Williamson's case, 26 Pennsylvania State; Shaftesbury's case, 6 Howell's State Trials, 1296; and several cases cited by May, in his Parliamentary Practice, 77, 78. The case in 14 Gray, 226, was under a constitution which enumerated and limited the cases of imprisonment for contempt.

No question arises here as to the right of the House to compel the witness Kilbourn to testify on a subject of legislation which is excluded from or not given to Congress by the Constitution. He is a witness in relation to subject-matters pertaining to the District of Columbia, over which Congress has "exclusive" legislative power "in all cases whatsoever."

If this House were seeking confessedly to examine a witness on a question looking to legislation on a subject not confided to Congress by the Constitution, that would raise a different question. But even then a court could not inquire into the purpose of the House. A court could not know the purpose. The House itself could not know until investigation was had. To permit such an inquiry to be made by the courts is to arrest legislation in advance. The toleration of such a jurisdiction in the courts would be so dangerous, so liable to abuse, so destructive of the public welfare, that every consideration already presented applies to deny it.

The power of courts, even under our Constitution, to declare an act of Congress unconstitutional has been denied. (Speech of Hon. Charles D. Drake, in the Senate of the United States, December 13, 1869.) It must be admitted, however, that the power does exist. But the power of judicial inquiry cannot arise until an attempt is made to enforce an unconstitutional act.

To go beyond that and claim that the judicial power can reach back of legislation is far beyond any claim yet made, and is so dangerous it can never be tolerated.

The courts cannot intervene by injunction or otherwise to prevent the introduction of a bill or to prevent the discussion of it on the ground that it is unauthorized by the Constitution. Yet the courts might with as much propriety attempt to interfere in such case as in the case of the witness Kilbourn.

The witness Kilbourn is not protected from the duty to produce books and papers required of him by any provision of the amendments to the Constitution.

These declare that—

> The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated.
> No person * * * shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law.

When the question arises in court what is an "unreasonable search," the courts must decide it. When it arises as to a witness before this House or a committee, this House is the sole and exclusive judge whether the proposed search is reasonable or not. No law written or unwritten has given any court the power to reverse its decision, nor can this House or the whole Congress reverse a decision of a court on such question.

But the provisions relating to searches in the amendment of the Constitution have no reference to the production of books and papers by witnesses before Congress.

Neither of the provisions which I have cited have any reference to inquiries by a committee of Congress. (Regina vs. Patty, 2 Lord Raymond, page 1105; same case, Salkeld, page 503.) Story says of the provision "against unreasonable searches" that—

> Its introduction into the amendments was doubtless occasioned by the strong sensibility excited both in England and America upon the subject of general warrants almost upon the eve of the American Revolution. (2 Story on Constitution, § 1902.)

These general warrants were issued by the courts, and this provision is a restraint upon the power of the courts. It has no application to Congress in exercising the power to examine witnesses or to require the production of papers, though of course its spirit and purpose should generally be regarded as a rule of parliamentary law applicable to the House. But the law is to be administered by the House, and not under the direction or compulsion of the judicial courts. In time of war, or in time of peace when war or other great danger is imminent, it might become necessary for this House to require the production of private papers affecting the public welfare and the issues of peace and war.

I proceed to show:

4. That the statute does not require the production of the body by the Sergeant-at-Arms.

It seems to be supposed that the statute relating to habeas corpus has surrendered some privilege of the House and requires the Sergeant-at-Arms to produce the body of the witness. The provisions on this subject are found in the Revised Statutes, sections 751 to 766, both inclusive.

If it were at all material, it might well be urged that an act of Congress could not take from this House its right to punish for a contempt.

No such question could arise in England, because there an act of Parliament can alter the constitution itself. But here a provision of the Constitution cannot be changed by act of Congress. A power conferred by the Constitution on a court, or the President, or on either branch of Congress, cannot be taken away by an act of Congress. An incidental power given by the Constitution is just as fully given as any other. Now, the power to punish for contempt is one of the incidental powers of the House conferred upon it by the Constitution.

It is possible this unwritten law may be changed, or rather not exercised by the House itself for the time being; but the House during one Congress cannot control the House in a subsequent Congress as to its acknowledged privileges and powers. It can make no surrender to reach a future Congress. Those rules of the House which do not rest on the common unwritten parliamentary law are not in force beyond the Congress that adopts them.

The Constitution secures the right of trial by jury. The unwritten law, which defines what a jury is, says it means twelve men, whose verdict in a criminal case must be unanimous. It has been decided that a statute cannot change this unwritten law and dispense with the requisite number of jurors or authorize a majority to render a verdict. (Work vs. State, 2 Ohio State, page 296.)

Here a right is given by the unwritten constitutional law which defines what a jury is, and the courts say it is beyond legislative reach.

The Constitution vests certain original jurisdiction in the Supreme Court. It cannot be taken away by statute. The unwritten common law says a majority of the court is a quorum. It may well be doubted if Congress can require the concurrence of all the judges to pronounce a judgment in a court created by the Constitution and not merely by act of Congress.

Limitations may be imposed by statute on the power of courts to punish for contempts; it may be regulated, but not annihilated. An act of Congress cannot annihilate the power of the House to punish for contempt or transfer it to the courts. The Senate has no share in declaring the privileges of the House, either by statute or otherwise. These privileges exist by immemorial usage, as an inherent necessity, as an incident of other powers, and cannot be surrendered by statute so as to work their destruction. (Anderson vs. Dunn, 6 Wheaton; Kearney's case, 7 Wheaton, page 38; Irwin's case, Forty-third Congress, Congressional Record, volume 9, pages 181, 473, 512, 708.)

If in England the habeas corpus act has been so drawn as to extend to persons imprisoned by order of the Commons, it will not follow that our habeas corpus act does or can extend to persons so imprisoned.

The habeas corpus statute cannot affect this question of contempt for another reason: It does not in express terms apply to imprisonment by order of the House.

It is a well-known rule of construction that a statute which denies or limits a right, though in terms general and broad enough to include the Government, yet does not include it. The Government is never included unless expressly named. (Sedgwick on the Construction of Statutes, page 106.)

The reason of the rule applies here, and this House is not included as within the remedial provisions of the habeas corpus act, because it is not specifically named.

I know that statutes in favor of human liberty are to be liberally construed, but so far as they derogate from the privileges of the House this rule cannot apply. Here the rule of strict construction must apply. Human liberty rests on these privileges, and the necessity of preserving them is so great that they cannot be taken away by construction. If Congress had intended the statute to extend to imprisonment by authority of either House, the statute would have been made to speak in unequivocal terms. But the statute itself shows it was not designed to extend to such case as this. I will read a portion of it:

> SEC. 752. The several justices and judges of said courts * * * shall have power to grant writs of habeas corpus.
> SEC. 753. The writ of habeas corpus shall in no case extend to a prisoner in jail, unless where he is in custody under or by color of the authority of the United States.

It then proceeds to enumerate cases, none of which apply to either House of Congress. The rule "noscitur a sociis" limits the habeas corpus so that it cannot reach a sentence by virtue of parliamentary law. It deals exclusively with restraints on liberty and rights to release as affected by common or statutory law. It does not refer to restraints imposed by parliamentary law.

It may be said that Kilbourn is a "prisoner in jail" and that he "is in custody under or by color of the authority of the United States." But for all purposes of the statute neither of these propositions can be affirmed of Kilbourn. If this statute was intended to give the writ of habeas corpus to every prisoner in jail, it cannot extend to Kilbourn. No law or rule requires that the jail shall be the place of imprisonment. The House could order his imprisonment to be, as the practice frequently has been, in a room in the Capitol. He is, in legal contemplation and in fact, in the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms. He is not necessarily or by any law of Congress in jail.

It cannot in any legal sense be said that he is in custody "by color of the authority of the United States."

This House has the power to imprison for contempt, but it is not "the United States." In imposing the imprisonment it does not act in the name of the United States. It exercises a special power peculiar to itself.

The courts and their officers, the President and all officers under him, exercise power or act "by color of the authority of the United States." But here the House is acting in its own name, by its own authority, for its own protection, or rather, I should say, for the benefit and protection of the public. The power exercised is not that conferred by a general statute but a special, inherent authority of the House.

Another provision of the statute shows it was not designed to reach cases like this of Kilbourn. Section 754 requires the petitioner for the writ to state "the claim or authority, if known," by which he is held. Then section 754 declares that the judge shall issue the writ, "unless it appears from the petition itself that the party is not entitled thereto."

The effect is that in a case like this, where the petition shows that Kilbourn is lawfully detained, the petition should not issue. It is expressly prohibited.

It may be urged that the act of Congress of January 24, 1857, as carried into section 104 of the Revised Statutes, relieves the witness Kilbourn from imprisonment, or that now having been indicted the court is entitled to his custody for trial, or he is entitled to be liberated to demand a trial.

This section provides that—

> Whenever a witness * * * fails to testify * * * the Speaker of the House shall certify the fact to the District attorney, * * * whose duty it shall be to bring the matter before the grand jury for their action.

For this crime section 102 provides that on indictment and conviction the guilty party—

> Shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor punishable by a fine * * * and imprisonment.

The original act from which the revised statue is condensed declared that a witness so guilty—

> Shall, in addition to the pains and penalties now existing, be liable to indictment * * * in any court. (11 Statutes, page 155.)

The revised statute drops out the words "in addition to the pains and penalties now existing."

But it is well known that the Revised Statutes were intended to embody exactly the existing law as it stood in the original acts.

The words omitted, therefore, were so omitted because deemed unnecessary, and not to effect a change of the law, and may now be considered to see what the law was and yet is. They were incorporated in the act of 1857 to make it clear that the penalty imposed by indictment was for the crime against the public, and was "in addition to the pains and penalties" then and yet existing under parliamentary law by imprisonment for contempt. Even without these omitted words, on common-law principles the punishment by indictment must be deemed as cumulative and in addition to the existing punishment for contempt.

The law which confers the power to imprison for contempt can only be abrogated by a statute containing negative or repealing words. This is the doctrine of all the books on construction.

The court having criminal jurisdiction cannot require the body of Kilbourn for trial. The court has made no such demand. If it did it is well settled that where there are co-equal and co-ordinate powers, each having a right to the custody of a person or to jurisdiction over a given subject-matter, the tribunal which first obtains jurisdiction by process will hold it until its purposes are accomplished. The party so held cannot change the law on this subject by a simple demand for that purpose.

For these and other reasons I might adduce, I believe the resolution of the committee should be adopted.

The public interests, the discovery of truth, wise legislation, humanity, and human rights all demand it.

I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY.]

Mr. KELLEY. I prefer to speak in my own time, and I believe I am entitled to recognition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.) The gentleman has twenty minutes of the time of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LAWRENCE.]

Mr. KELLEY. I prefer to speak in my own time, and I believed I was entitled to recognition at the close of the gentleman's speech. I did not come into the House to-day expecting to speak upon this subject.

Mr. HOAR. Is the gentleman speaking in his own time or in that of the gentleman from Ohio?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR.] a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, was entitled to the floor at the close of the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LAWRENCE.]

Mr. HOAR. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania desires to go on, I have certainly no wish to interrupt him.

Mr. KELLEY. I have a few short notes, but I do not know whether I can get through with the few points I want to make in twenty minutes or not. I am ready either to speak or to sit down. I am willing to yield to the gentleman of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. HOAR. I beg the House to be assured that I shall not set up any privilege against the wish of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY.] I hope he will do precisely what he prefers. If he prefers to take up the remainder of the time of the gentleman from Ohio, I will speak afterward. If he prefers to take his own time, he can have the balance of the time of the gentleman from Ohio and I will yield him a portion of my time.

Mr. KELLEY. My name is on the list to speak, and I have been informed that my place was after that of the gentleman from Ohio. I understood that it was the desire of the gentlemen conducting this debate that the speeches should alternate, and for that reason I would prefer to go on; but, if I am to go on under the restriction of a limitation of twenty minutes, I am not willing to go on, because I may want more time.

Mr. HOAR. I am willing that the gentleman shall proceed.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, had the suggestions which have passed through my mind been made by any of the gentlemen who have spoken, or had I found any indication in the current of the debate that they would probably be made, I would not have raised my voice on this subject. Gentlemen will, I think, agree with me in regarding the questions involved as important, when they remember that until 1858 Congress, although always asserting its right to deal with a recusant witness, had never imprisoned one, and that the highest punishment it had then inflicted was a reprimand; and when they further remember how frequent commitments have become, it will probably occur to them, as it has to me, that we should pause, and, if possible, fix a limit to our arbitrary power, or provide rules under which it shall be exercised with judicial deliberation, and that to bring ourselves in conflict with the judiciary in connection with this case would be a blunder that might be characterized as worse than a crime.

To gentlemen on the other side of the House I submit in support of my appeal the recent memories of their party. Through the earlier years of my congressional life I heard Crittenden, Wickliffe, Vallandigham, Pendleton, Voorhees, and scores of other democrats whose names do not at this moment occur to me, declare that the maintenance of the judicial safeguards of the rights of the citizen against the encroaching power of Congress and the Government was a democratic tradition that could not be abandoned without danger to our liberties. Long after midnight had passed have I heard these walls ring with the eloquent demands of such democrats that even in time of war these safeguards should be not only respected, but maintained and guarded. When this very Capitol and the unity of our country were threatened, it was the stock in trade of the democratic party that under all circumstances it stood by the constitutional guarantees of the rights of the citizen. Gentlemen will, I hope, believe me when I assure them I make these suggestions not for the purpose of drawing party lines on this question or of reviving past issues, but that I do it in the hope of kindling anew patriotic and conservative sentiments that seem to slumber.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the commitment of Hallet Kilbourn by order of the House was a grave mistake; a mistake that no court would have made; a mistake that this House would not have made had it judicially heard Mr. Kilbourn through counsel, or given to members generally an opportunity to study the record as presented by the committee, and then opened the question to discussion for a few hours. Experience justifies this conclusion, and teaches that no witness should be committed under the gag of the previous question.

During the last Congress the House committed Richard B. Irwin for contempt in refusing to answer interrogatories propounded by one of its committees. At first it resolved that the high writ of habeas corpus should not take his body into court. But that House had the courage, the discretion, the sense of duty that constrained it, after a season of reflection, to send the body into court with its answer to the writ. It did not hesitate to reverse its own action. It found it unbecoming to stand in an attitude that condemned one of the courts of the country as either ignorant or corrupt. The body of law brought to the notice of this House by the two learned gentlemen from Ohio [Mr. HURD and Mr. LAWRENCE] had been brought to the attention of that House, and believing that the law was known to and would control the court, which was constituted of men of learning and integrity, it sent the witness with the return to the writ, and the court vindicated the confidence reposed in its learning and integrity by remanding the prisoner to the custody of the House.

But, Mr. Speaker, there was a distinction between that case and this which I desire to mark. Irwin had admitted and it had been been proven aliunde that he had brought $750,000 to the doors of this Hall and had expended it in influencing the legislative action of the House. It was believed that he had corrupted some of the minor officers of the House. It was believed that sums amounting to more than $100,000 had gone into the hands of one of the officers of the House, and that one sum of more than $300,000 had gone into the pocket of a member of the House.

That case, you will perceive, touched the honor of the House. It was important for every innocent man that the country should know who had received these sums of money. It was important for the purity of legislation then pending before the House that all the facts should be ascertained. Nothing could bring a case more clearly within the jurisdiction of the House. The testimony of the witness related so nearly to no other subject as to the honor and the duty of the members of this House. And yet, in that case, in view of all the law which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] has quoted with so much elaboration, and of all that his colleague [Mr. HURD] has presented to us to-day with so much clearness and adroitness, making point after point and sustaining them by authorities, going back no less than one hundred and sixty years for the most recent precedent that supports one of his well-made points, the House, after reflection, reversed its own action, and said in effect that it would not assail the law of habeas corpus, as we and the preceding generations of our countrymen from the foundation of our Government had understood it.

Now let us compare this case with that one which came so near to the honor and the duty of Congress. What is this case? It would be scouted out of any court of chancery in England or the United States on the ground that it was a mere fishing bill; that it contained no averments or allegations on which to found equity proceedings or sustain a decree; that it was an attempt falsely, fraudulently, and by trick to discover whether evidence could not be found that would furnish legal or equitable cause of action against the witness or some other person.

Gentlemen may ask me why I did not make these objections at the time the order of the House was made in this case. I will not remind them that the order passed under the previous question, but say that it was because I was not familiar with the facts of the case as I am now; and more, that I acquiesced without question, because I had come to this Congress determined to raise my voice against no investigation of the alleged frauds of the present or past Administration that might be suggested. But it is never too late to do right, and the drift of my argument will be that, having made a grave mistake, Congress should acknowledge the fact, and either send the imprisoned witness before the judge, and when he shall be remanded to us, as I doubt not he would be, discharge him, or, without sending him before the court, should frankly avow that it had in a season of unusual excitement invaded the rights of a citizen and discharge him.

I became specially familiar during the years of war to which I have referred with some provisions of the Constitution; and I wish to repeat to gentlemen some of those provisions that were so frequently rung in my ears. Their frequent repetition made a grave impression on me. I saw each day abundant illustrations of the horrors of war; I saw the death and the maiming that it caused; I saw the increasing widowhood and orphanage that spread over the country. Yet I felt that these were not the gravest results it was inflicting upon us; for I also saw that the people under the exigencies of war were becoming familiar with infractions of the rights of individuals without due judicial proceedings; and I feared that while the widows and orphans and maimed men would pass away the effect of these infringements upon personal rights might remain as usages. And in the action of our friends on the other side of the House in this case I find a verification of my worst apprehensions.

Sir, thousands of men then believed that when the war should be over they who then clamored so boisterously and persistently for the protection of these rights, even at the risk of the life of the nation, would vindicate them. From article 4 of the amendments of the Constitution I used to hear read:

> The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated; and no warrants shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched and the persons or things to be seized.

And again;

> Nor shall he be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law.

Do these constitutional provisions apply to this case? Let us see. What is the case? A citizen is imprisoned by order of Congress; his fare is restricted; he is deprived of all liberty. And why? Is it alleged that he is attempting to protect any great criminal? Has any member of this House or any citizen alleged that he has perpetrated any act that justified imprisonment under any known judicial procedure? Has any member of the committee on whose resolution he was committed stated to the prisoner or to the House or to his brethren of the committee any fact which justifies the House in believing that Hallet Kilbourn has in his possession any knowledge which, if given to the committee or the country, would lead to the trial or impeachment of any officer of our Government? No, sir. The resolution under which the committee was appointed instructs it to inquire into monetary transactions between Jay Cooke & Co., Hallet Kilbourn, and other private citizens, and on those subjects he has spoken with the most perfect freedom and fullness. He has told how much Jay Cooke & Co. put into the real-estate pool. He has told how their interests in it were settled by a court of law, the trustee of Jay Cooke & Co., Mr. Lewis, being the representative of Cooke's interest in the litigation. He has, through his counsel, Hon. Jeremiah S. Black, said to the committee:

> I now repeat his (Kilbourn's) entire willingness to answer any interrogatories that the committee may put to him concerning the nature and history of the real-estate pool, so-called, provided—> that any gentleman here or any member of the committee will express his conviction, grounded on any fact known to him, that there is any connection whatever with any public act that Congress has a right to investigate or to found any legislation upon.

Mark the provision—

The prisoner did not ask an oath. He did not ask that a responsible party should make himself responsible in damages for his incarceration. He said to that committee: "Gentlemen, one and all, name any fact in the possession of any one of you that gives rise to a well-grounded impression that I know a single fact that militates against a public officer, and you shall have free and full answer to all your questions."

But the committee were on a fishing excursion. They were like the Yankee who peeped through the key-hole of the room in which a lodge of Masons were organizing. He did not know what might be going on, but he "would like to see them Free Masons do it." No facts, no allegations, no responsible accuser; and yet the American Congress commits a citizen to jail, and proposes to hold him until he shall answer this inquisition and submit his books and papers, so that the committee may investigate the business affairs of every man and woman that has dealt with him or with his firm.

Let us look more closely at the case. Let us see what our subpœna duces tecum demands of a man who says, "Let but one of you allege that you have a fact in your possession which will furnish a well-grounded suspicion, and I will give you access to every source of information in my possession." What does it demand from him? Let me read its demand. It is:

> That you also diligently and carefully search for, examine and inquire after, and bring with you and produce, at the time and place aforesaid, the certain deeds and deeds of trust, declarations of trust, and printed papers referred to therein, relating to the following squares, parts of squares, lots and parcels of ground or real property, situate in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, to wit: All the property described in the paper writing hereto attached, marked exhibit A, and made a part of this subpœna; also, relating to any other property purchased or sold by you as trustee for either the real-estate pool, in which the firm of Jay Cooke & Co., or Messrs. Stewart, Hilyer & Sunderland, or either of them, had an interest, together with all copies, draughts, and vouchers relating to said documents, and all other documents, letters, and paper writings whatsoever, including bank-books, bills of exchange, bank-checks, stubs of checks, ledgers, blotters, day-books, and other books of accounts, maps, that can or may afford any information or evidence relating to the said matters to be inquired of by said committee belonging to you or subject to your control, either individually or as trustee, or as a member of the firm of Kilbourn & Latta.

Then we have as exhibit A this list, filling more than a column of the RECORD, in closely-printed lines of figures:

What answer did the prisoner make to all this? Let us read what he said:

Question. You are the same Hallet Kilbourn spoken of and who testified before a joint committee at the last session of Congress?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. State whether you have in your possession now and have brought to the committee-room the papers, documents, memoranda, &c., referred to in the subpœna duces tecum served upon you?

A. I have not.

Q. State whether you are prepared to produce them at this sitting of the committee?

A. I am not prepared to produce them to-day.

Q. State whether you are willing to produce them now or at any future sitting of this committee?

A. As at present advised, I am not prepared.

Q. You refuse to produce them before the committee in response to this subpœna?

A. Yes, sir. I would like to state the reasons therefor—my personal reasons. My partner and myself are in a private business. We have no connection with the Government of the United States and never have had. Are conscious of having violated no law; are not charged with any fraud. Our business that we do is done with private citizens throughout the country, and I stand upon the right which I think belongs to every private citizen not accused of violating any law, of being protected in his papers. Whatever the law decides, however, I am willing to abide by. I sustain but one relation to the Government, and that is to pay taxes and obey the law. That is the only transaction that I have with the Government at all.

When specially pressed as to the Jay Cooke matter, he said:

A. Yes, sir; I do not know that it was all expended during 1872, but I presume the arrangement was made, as I stated, to use the $25,000.

Q. Was there a fund raised by those who constituted the pool?

A. Certain parties put in a certain amount of money each.

By Mr. LEWIS:

Q. That constituted a general fund?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. NEW:

Q. Was the money put in your hands?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Thus constituting what is commonly called a real-estate pool?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How much was thus put into your hands or the firm of which you were a member?

A. Of course I have held the right to decline to answer that, but I will not now hesitate to do so; I will detail all the history of this pool to that extent. Five gentlemen each put in $5,000, and Jay Cooke & Co. put in $25,000. Now you have the whole extent of the pool.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. That was the entire sum at any time put in?

A. There was an assessment made after Jay Cooke & Co. failed of $2,000 each to meet payments; Jay Cooke & Co. did not pay this, and these other parties paid $2 000 apiece. I may say now that is the whole of it Out of this great, big, world-wide-noised-abroad pool, that is the whole sum of money that was ever put in it in the world.

By Mr. LEWIS:

Q. Was that assessment of $2,000 in addition to the $5,000?

A. Yes, sir. To meet payments, five gentlemen paid. Jay Cooke & Co. never paid that.

Again, when on this point, the chairman said to him:

We had supposed that there was not a gentleman in this city of any intelligence who could not see at a glance that the Government of the United States is interested in this particular property. Jay Cooke & Co. are indebted to Jay Cooke, McCulloch & Co. Jay Cooke, McCulloch & Co. are indebted to the United States in an amount exceeding $1,500,000, and by an assignment of their claim to the Secretary of the Navy the rights of Jay Cooke & Co. are subrogated to the Government. Now, this original investment of Jay Cooke & Co. of $25,000 and the subsequent profits inure to the Government. We could not suppose you would fail to see that at a glance.

WITNESS. I understand from the attorneys of Mr. Lewis that the Government is entirely secured for every dollar.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Lewis is not the party to determine that question Congress has appointed a committee to determine that question, and it seems to me that it is improper for you to resist this investigation as far as you have. It has cost the Government a vast deal of money.

WITNESS. I want you to understand that I do not resist it because I want to shield anything from the Government interests. I am only resisting it and protecting my own interests as a citizen who has but one relation to the Government, and that is to obey the law and pay taxes. The Government has no interest one way or the other in this matter. If it had, through Jay Cooke, or Lewis, trustee of Jay Cooke & Co., it was all settled. We have settled through the courts. If the settlement was not fair, the court is open for it, I understand. Instead of resisting anything that affects the Government, as I said, I would help to promote the Government's interests, if it can be shown wherein I can do it.

Mr. Speaker, I fail to find in the facts, when carefully and judicially examined, anything to justify my acquiescence in the incarceration of this man. Anxious as any man on this floor can be for the exposure of fraud or fraudulent practices by agents of the Government, I say that in this matter I have, as a member of this House, assented to an infringement of the rights of the people that may well make them dread the aggressive and irresponsible power of Congress.

Mr. Speaker, when I listened to the law, the indisputable law, as laid down by the gentleman from Ohio, that this House may in a season of excitement, when unbridled license riots with character as it never did before in this country; that in such a season it may in hot haste, without argument, without time for reflection, with partisan zeal on that side and partisan timidity on this—lest it shall be suspected that we are resisting investigations—that in this hot haste a citizen may be sent to a bastile, and be there detained until Congress expires; and that if the Senate, under like circumstances, should send a witness to prison, and he should see fit to vindicate his rights and the constitutional rights of his fellow-citizens, they may keep him there until death should bring him release, I concluded that the limitation of its power in this behalf was the imperative and immediate duty of Congress. If such be the law, and I freely admit that it is, let us make a rule that no vote shall be had upon the demand of any committee for the imprisonment of any witness until the record made by the committee shall have been before the House for a fortnight, or other designated period, and until at least two members on each side shall have been heard on the question by the House. Meanwhile let us do honor to ourselves; let us avoid a collision between the legislative and judicial branches of the Government; let us exhibit at once our magnanimity, our love of justice, and our devotion to the constitutional rights of the people by setting Hallet Kilbourn free absolutely, or, if need be, under bail that shall be adequate to secure his appearance if he shall be again needed.

At the suggestion of the gentleman at my side, I ask leave to avail myself of a moment to read what I have not read, but doubtless will be glad to embody in my remarks. The paper placed in my hands is as follows:

In the case of Wilkins vs. Leland (2 Peters, 657) Justice Story, delivering the opinion of the Supreme Court, said:

"That government can scarcely be deemed free where the rights of property are left solely dependent upon the will of a legislative body without any restraint. The fundamental maxims of a free government seem to require the rights of personal liberty and private property should be held sacred; at least no court of justice in this country would be warranted in assuming that the power to violate and disregard them—a power so repugnant to the common principles of justice and civil liberty—lurked under any general grant of legislative authority, or ought to be implied from any general expression of the will of the people."

Mr. Chancellor Kent, in his Commentaries, volume 1, 620, (ninth edition,) says:

"It may be received as a proposition universally understood and acknowledged throughout the country that no person can be taken or imprisoned, or disseized of his freehold or estate, or exiled or condemned, or deprived of life, liberty, or property, unless by the law of the land or the judgment of his peers. The words 'by the law of the land,' as used originally in Magna Charta in reference to this subject, are understood to mean due process of law; that is, by indictment or presentment of good and lawful men, and this, says Lord Coke, is the true sense and exposition of those words. The better and larger definition of due process of law is, that it means law in the regular course of administration through courts of justice."

In Dwarris on Statutes it is said:

"To give this clause of the Constitution any value it must be understood to mean that no person shall be deprived by any form of legislative or governmental action of either life, liberty, or property, except as a consequence of judicial proceeding, appropriately and legally conducted." (Totten Dwarris on Statutes and Constitutions, page 430.)

These paragraphs remind me of a point I was omitting. By a law passed by the last Congress, no witness can treat the House with contempt without subjecting himself to judicial punishment. To avoid the possibility of having to go to the extreme of action by the House of punishing a witness by imprisonment throughout the life of a Congress, we passed a law providing for the certification of the case of a recusant witness to the court that he might be indicted, tried, and, if found guilty, punished.

The case of Hallet Kilbourn has, I understand, been certified to the court, and an indictment has been found against him. When shall he be tried upon it? We have remitted him for punishment. When shall the trial be had to determine his guilt or innocence? Shall he have his constitutional right to appear at his trial and take part in selecting a jury, and hear, as the Constitution guarantees him the right to do, the witnesses brought to testify against him, and examine them in person or by counsel? Or shall he lie rotting in the congressional bastile until the statute of limitations shall have freed him from trial on the indictment? Shall he be punished by us until our hot temper and indignation are appeased, and then be handed over to the court for trial, conviction, and further punishment?

No, gentlemen; let us reflect on it—let us see to it. Yes, gentlemen of the democratic party, I pray you to see to it that they who have believed that when you came into power you would sacredly maintain all the guarantees of personal rights, shall not justly charge you with having followed and applied in a time of undisturbed peace, and when the civil courts are open, every evil precedent forced upon your political antagonists by the stern laws and terrible exigencies of war.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. Speaker, one simple sentence seems to me to answer conclusively all the declamatory argument of my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY.] Whenever a witness or any other person is attached for contempt of court, the tribunal, whether it be a justice of the peace, a county court, a police court, or the Senate of the United States sitting as a court of impeachment, is the final judge of that question, and all the consequences which the gentleman from Pennsylvania has held up in the face of this House follow. There is not a justice of the peace in this country who has not got the exact power which my friend from Pennsylvania denies to this House. Not one. And he underrates the intelligence of either party of this House and he underrates the intelligence of the American people when he deals with this simple and great question of legal principle which we have before us by talking about an American bastile.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask respectfully——

Mr. HOAR. I do not yield. I have made my comment, and I propose to let the comment go with the speech.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is the question before one of the branches of the national Legislature of 40,000,000 Americans. Is the extent of our right to inquire into facts, either as a grand inquest seeking to punish crimes or as a court of inquiry having the power to inquire into the conduct of public officers, or when we seek for facts to aid us in legislation—seeking to know what are the resources and the property of the American people—limited by the discretion and the judgment of a single judge of the supreme court of the District of Columbia? If that court has this right, when, having called a witness to our bar, he has refused to answer a question put to him by our authority, and that witness is remanded to the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms to await the further order of this House in substance, to await our direction for the future, to require that that witness be delivered into its custody to abide its revision of our judgment, then it has the same right to do the same thing next week to the Senate. If, when that august tribunal, than which there is no more august and no higher body in the sight of the Constitution, is organized to try the Secretary of War or the President of the United States, and Mr. Marsh or some other witness when a question is put to him says, "On the whole I do not think I will answer that question; you are inquiring into my private affairs;" and the Senate holds otherwise, and commits him to its Sergeant-at-Arms until he answers, Mr. Chief Justice Cartter has the right to say "Take that man out of the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms, bring him before me, and I will see what I think of that question myself." And if he chooses to order the discharge of the witness, revising the Senate's judgment as to the extent of its own authority, revising the correctness of the order of the Senate in enforcing that authority, it is a contempt of court for any man to retake that witness when thus discharged, and it is a contempt of court for the United States Senate to order his re-arrest.

The bringing the body of the witness into court—it is settled by a uniform current of decisions—is delivering him up for custody for the time being to the court. The judgment of the court, if it sustains the original commitment, is a judgment that the person in custody be remanded, and if it does not sustain the commitment the judgment is that he be set at liberty.

The House of Representatives have seen fit, whether rightfully or wisely I do not say, to institute an inquiry as to whether the United States is possessed of certain property legally or equitably. That is a necessary inquiry. If the United States has due to it the sum of $10,000 or of $10 anywhere in this country, which may reasonably be expected to be collected within the year by proper process, then the Committee of Ways and Means has to initiate in this House, where only it can be initiated, a tax bill imposing upon the American people a burden just so much less. The Committee on Appropriations has the right to appropriate for the necessities of the Government just so much the more, and an inquiry into that fact is therefore a legitimate legislative inquiry, and one which this House, and this House alone, under our Constitution, can properly institute. Now, this House has proceeded to institute such an inquiry. They would have done better to have made their original order of inquiry clearer. They would have done better to have limited and guarded more carefully, in my judgment, the questions which were put to the witness. But they have passed beyond that question. The witness refuses to answer. The House say to the Sergeant-at-Arms, "That man has been guilty of contempt; take him into your custody and detain him until he comes back and says he is willing to answer." Now, Mr. Speaker, the question of law before us is this: When a court sitting in another place demands for any purpose that a person under such circumstances shall be delivered up to them, is it a good answer to that court to say, "The House of Representatives of the United States is making a different use of that person at the present time, and we cannot at present give him up to you?" That is the proposition and that is the question. Now, I affirm, and I wish my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. LYNDE] were in the seat from which he spoke—I affirm that English precedents for the last two hundred years up to-day are uniform and concurrent upon that subject; and I challenge the gentleman's denial. The great habeas corpus act of Charles II, which English writers on constitutional law call the second magna charta, authorizes the judges of the King's Bench to issue the writ of habeas corpus except in certain cases, to wit, the case where the man is imprisoned by the authority of any other court on a capital charge or on a charge of felony either before or after conviction; and in that case the English practice is uniform that when a writ of habeas corpus is issued by the court the person to whom it is directed returns the writ making known the fact, but does not return the body.

Mr. GARFIELD. Will the gentleman allow me just there——

Mr. HOAR. When I get through. I will make this statement very short, if I am allowed to make it consecutive.

Now, that is one of a number of cases in which there is of necessity an exception to the obligation to return the body on a writ of habeas corpus. Why, suppose this case—which my near relative, whose decision in Massachusetts my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. LYNDE] quoted with respect put to the House last year—suppose you were holding a court and trying a man for murder and the jury are out and the prisoner is there in your custody and you receive notice of a writ of habeas corpus issued from another court. Would you send the man to that other court and let the jury separate and the proceedings go for naught or operate as an acquittal to the prisoner, or would you reply by a respectful message: "A court whose authority to take that man into its custody, is precisely equal to that of the court issuing the habeas corpus, has now possession of him and is using him for a different purpose?" Suppose that Mr. Kilbourn was sent into this court and the court was determining this very question of habeas corpus, and some other court should issue a habeas corpus ad testificandum or ad subjiciendum; suppose that to take place while a proceeding of that kind was going on, is it not a good answer for the court to say: "We are dealing with this person under the mandates of the law and we have not got through with him, and when we get through with him it will be time enough to talk about what disposition you will make of him?"

Now let me take another case. Nobody questions, unless it be my friend and neighbor from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] the authority of this House to commit a disobedient witness for contempt or to arrest him if he does not come here in obedience to our summons. Now suppose a witness is summoned to appear before this House and he does not come, and thereupon the Sergeant-at-Arms has a warrant from the Speaker to arrest him and he goes in search of the witness; there is no exception whatever; there is an absolute legal command to take that man into custody, and the Sergeant-at-Arms goes to execute that process and he finds Chief Justice Cartter of the supreme court of the District of Columbia trying that man for murder at the time; could he take the man by force? Why, no! he comes back and says to the House, "I found that another court having the same powers, no more and no less, to take possession of the body of that citizen for legal purposes had possession of the body of that citizen for legal purposes, and thereupon I could not execute your mandate and I return it with that excuse." That is the precise return which it is the duty of the person to whom this writ was issued to make to it.

Now, gentlemen say that the original commitment was wrong. My friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] has ably and eloquently urged that it was wrong. Then take the manly way consistent with the dignity of the House and rescind your original order.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is what we ought to do.

Mr. HOAR. Anybody who thinks that the original commitment was wrong should do that; but do not say that we have wrongfully committed an American citizen but we will not rescind our order, but leave it to the court to affirm or overrule our decision at its discretion.

A great deal of stress has been laid on the statute on this subject. Now, in the first place it has been already said, and I do not want to repeat it, that no statute can lay down or limit the constitutional authority of either branch of the American Congress. You may pass a hundred statutes setting forth that the Senate shall have no power to summon witnesses to try an impeachment. Do you suppose that any future Senate acting for that purpose would regard such a statute in the least? You may pass a hundred statutes saying that this House shall not in the future exercise the powers necessary and essential to the work of legislation, and no future House would be bound to regard them for a moment.

But it is historic that it was not the purpose of this statute to change the existing law in the least particular. These Revised Statutes passed the House by unanimous consent. I had the honor and the discomfort of sitting in that chair during the entire time when the Statutes at Large went through; every clause passed when no quorum of the House was present. The act passed the Senate without even being read except by its title. This volume which I hold in my hand passed the Senate in two minutes' time, on the assertion that it did not alter existing law in the least. Now the law of 1867 which preceded it declared in words what it was not deemed by the revisers necessary to say in words because the statute meant it without them, that it did not affect penalties for contempt of witnesses who refused to answer.

But let us go a little further, Mr. Speaker. Here is a writ of habeas corpus which the chief justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia was prohibited by this very statute from issuing. Here is the statute:

> The court or justice to whom such application is made shall forthwith award a writ of habeas corpus, unless it appears from the petition itself that the party is not entitled thereto.

That is section 755 of the Revised Statutes, and its provision is in this particular like that in the great act of habeas corpus of Charles II, that the judge shall not issue the writ if the party shall be in custody for certain legal purposes.

Now, in this case, therefore, the judge has issued a writ not within his power, not within his jurisdiction, a writ which he is prohibited by the statute itself from issuing, because all the proceedings of the House in this case, the refusal of the witness to answer the questions put to him, the adjudication of the House that he was in contempt, and the order committing him to the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms appeared on the face of the petition itself.

And the judge of this court has issued to our Sergeant-at-Arms a mandate which, by the statute under which he gets all his power, he is expressly prohibited from issuing. Now, shall we respond to a jurisdiction assumed in direct violation of the statute which is the law of the court by submitting the whole case, by surrendering up the body, or shall we direct our Sergeant-at-Arms to reply to the court: "This man is now in my custody, is now in the possession of an authority equal to yours, and that authority is still dealing with him and is not ready to give him up; and under these circumstances, the the petition of the prisoner himself showed that you had no right to issue the writ?"

The direction of the Supreme Court of the United States is absolute and clear in all such cases. It is true that the case of Ableman vs. Booth, referred to here, was a case where the mandate of a State authority, extending territorially over the region where the party was found, was issued to an officer of the United States. In other words, it was a case where one jurisdiction, having the right to take possession of a party, had obtained possession of him before the other jurisdiction applied for his possession by this writ. Now, according to the opinion of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, what is the proceeding to be had in that case? It is the same proceeding which is to be had under the English law, under the statute of Charles II. Chief Justice Taney says:

We do not question the authority of State courts, or judge who is authorized by the laws of the State to issue the writ of habeas corpus, to issue it in any case where the party is imprisoned within its territorial limits, provided it does not appear, when the application is made, that the person imprisoned is in custody under the authority of the United States.

Just as in this case, the judge has the right to issue the writ of habeas corpus, "provided it does not appear, when the application is made, that the person imprisoned is in custody under the authority of" this House, and that we are still dealing with the party. The Chief Justice goes on to say:

The court or judge has a right to inquire, in this mode of proceeding, for what cause and by what authority the prisoner is confined within the limits of the State sovereignty. And it is the duty of the marshal, or other person having custody of the prisoner, to make known to the judge or court, by a proper return, the authority by which he holds him in custody. * * * And although, as we have said, it is the duty of the marshal, or other person holding him, to make known, by a proper return, the authority under which he detains him, it is at the same time imperatively his duty to obey the process of the United States, to hold the prisoner in custody under it, and to refuse obedience to the process or mandate of any other government. Consequently it is his duty not to take the prisoner, nor suffer him to be taken, before the State judge or court upon a habeas corpus issued under State authority.

Now, the learned gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] dwelt upon the claim of the right upon the part of this House to put a prisoner in jail and keep him there until he rots. The limits of this jurisdiction are carefully prescribed. Chief Justice Marshall, of the Supreme Court of the United States, in 6 Wheaton, says that the right of the House of Representatives to commit a recusant witness for contempt is clear and is essential to legislation itself; but that, being an implied power, the least exercise of that power which is necessary to its accomplishment is all that will be implied. Therefore the House has no right to inflict any other punishment than imprisonment, and that imprisonment must cease at the expiration of the term of Congress or at a final adjournment of the session.

This outcry, as if we were trying to put ourselves against the personal liberty of the American citizen, seems to me to be perfectly preposterous. The question simply is this: What is the highest tribunal under the Constitution and the laws which has the right to judge this question? The answer is, the House of Representatives itself. When the House of Representatives is judging that question, is it bound to submit its judgment to review by any inferior tribunal whatever? The answer is, it is not. The power, when it is exercised, is a power which every justice of the peace in this country possesses and exercises in every case involving a question of the kind.

I now yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.]

Mr. GARFIELD. I would not detain the House at this late hour but for one or two points made by my friend from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR.] In the first place, the gentleman made the statement in the broadest terms that this right of a parliamentary body to control a question of contempt, without regard to the operation of the writ of habeas corpus, was admitted in England and ought to be conclusive here.

I had in my hand at that time May's Parliamentary Law of England, from which I desire to read a single paragraph in confirmation of what my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. LYNDE] has said generally, though I believe the quotation has not been made in this debate.

I read from page 75:

The habeas corpus act is binding upon all persons whatever who have prisoners in their custody; and it is therefore competent for the judges to have before them the prisoner committed by the Houses of Parliament for contempt.

Now, here is an authority acknowledged to be the first authority on that question. The right to the writ of habeas corpus is so broad as to include the two houses of Parliament, and whenever they commit any person for contempt the courts may bring the person thus committed to their bar and inquire into the ground of such imprisonment.

Now, I do not mean to say that this example is necessarily conclusive upon us, but as a matter of history and a part of the history of the country to which in large measure we are indebted for our institutions and laws, and it appears to me——

Mr. HOAR. Let me ask my friend a single question. Does he not see this difference: in England, where there is no written constitution, Parliament passed a habeas corpus act, and said that under that act prisoners should be brought into court except in certain excepted cases. Here, having a written constitution, and under it not being able to impair the rights of either branch of Congress, we have said that judges may issue writs of habeas corpus except in certain prohibited cases. Is not this therefore a question as to the construction of two statutes framed on a different principle?

Mr. HURLBUT. Who decides whether this is a prohibited case?

Mr. HOAR. The House decides it when it exercises its authority.

Mr. GARFIELD. Now my friend makes answer that the authority and practice I have cited grow out of the peculiarity of the British constitution, where the Parliament is supreme, and hence it will not do to exempt the Lords or Commons from the control of the courts; but in this country——

Mr. HOAR. I say that the English statute is to be construed in a certain way and the American statute is to be construed in a certain other way.

Mr. GARFIELD. Now, I want to say that in this country Congress and each House of it is far less omnipotent that the British Parliament. If there be any one doctrine in American politics that should be regarded as absolutely universal, "broad and general as the casing air," a doctrine covering every human being within our boundaries, it is that our Constitution allows neither citizen nor officer, civil or military, in its employ, neither court nor Congress, to escape from its all-embracing provisions. There is no function so elevated that it is not regulated by law. The reign of law is here supreme and universal. Now, we are confronted to-day by the doctrine, not that the Congress, but that one branch of it, is in a certain class of cases omnipotent; that this House may seize a citizen and imprison him, for a cause lawful or unlawful; and when it has decided, either in a freak of passion or after wise deliberation, as the case may be, to lock him up, that decision is final and irreversible—beyond the reach of our laws, our courts, and even the Constitution itself.

Let me invite the House to consider a fact which until recently I have not sufficiently reflected upon. The position of our bill of rights in the national Constitution is different in one marked respect from that of the bill of rights in any of the State constitutions. In nearly all of these the bill of rights is in the body of the instrument and is followed by other constitutional provisions. They are all, therefore, to be construed together. But in the Constitution of the United States we had first the grants of power and its distribution, and then a year or two afterward the bill of rights, embodied in the first ten articles adopted as amendments. As these amendatory articles were subsequent in the time of their adoption, they must be declared by all the canons of legal interpretation to repeal every clause in the body of the instrument inconsistent with them, on the principle that the later statute or enactment repeals every earlier provision preceding which is in conflict with it.

Now, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] says that the articles of amendment quoted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] are not applicable to the case before us. I answer that they are a part of the Bill of Rights, enacted subsequently to the body of the Constitution, and repeal every clause or provision of that instrument in conflict with them.

I hold in my hand volume 107 of the Massachusetts reports, containing the report of a case decided in 1871 known as Emery's case, found on page 172. Emery was called as a witness before an investigating committee of the Massachusetts senate, and was asked this question:

Have you ever paid any money to any State constable, or do you know of any corrupt practice or improper conduct of the State police? If so, state fully what sums and to whom you have thus paid money, and also what you know of such corrupt practices or improper conduct.

The witness answered:

Intending no disrespect to the honorable senate, I answer under advice of counsel, I answer, first, that the answer thereto will accuse me of an indictable offense; and, second, will furnish evidence against me by which I can be convicted of such an offense.

He refused to answer on the ground that it would criminate himself. The senate thereupon passed an order that—

Whereas the petitioner, in contempt of the authority of this senate, did give an unsatisfactory answer to the second question, * * * he be committed to the custody of the sergeant-at-arms, to be by him confined in the jail of the county of Suffolk for the space of twenty-five days or until the further order of the senate, unless he shall sooner signify his willingness to appear and purge himself of his contempt and testify before the joint special committee and this senate, and satisfactorily answer the questions propounded to him by the joint special committee and this senate; * * * [and] the president of the senate is hereby authorized to issue his warrant to commit said Henry Emery to the custody of the sergeant-at-arms, to be imprisoned in the common jail in the county of Suffolk.

This order was issued on the 3d of May, 1871. On the same day, on petition of Emery, the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts issued a writ of habeas corpus, and on the following day the sergeant-at-arms of the senate made return to the writ, bringing the body of the petitioner into court and annexing to his return a transcript of the records of the senate. After argument on both sides, the case was held under advisement and for conference until the 22d of May, 1871, when Mr. Justice Wells delivered the opinion of the court. I read a few paragraphs from the opinion:

The petitioner relies solely upon the privilege of exemption from answering the inquiry put to him, which he claims under the twelfth article of the declaration of rights of the inhabitants of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. If that is applicable to his case it is his shield, and he is entitled to be discharged; otherwise not.

The provision is this:

No subject shall be held to answer for any crimes or offense until the same is fully and plainly, substantially and formally, described to him; or be compelled to accuse or furnish evidence against himself.

After a further statement of the case, the court says:

The question then comes, Do these provisions apply to investigations before a legislative body?

No one will contend, of course, that the Legislature is not limited in its powers by the provisions of the constitution, equally with all other departments of the government and the whole body of the Commonwealth, whether undertaken to be exercised in the ordinary form of laws enacted or by those orders and requirements which are incidental to its functions and are adopted as means of their performance. There is nothing in the terms of the article in question to except legislative bodies from its operation. The nature and purpose of the provisions are equally applicable to investigations conducted by the Legislature itself, or by one of its branches, or by a committee of its own members, as when conducted before the courts or by commissioners or other tribunals established by law. Such tribunals can in no case disregard this rule of protection. The Legislature cannot, by the most formal and solemn enactments of law, authorize them to do it. If, then, the Legislature cannot, by the formal enactment of all its branches, subject a citizen to such a compulsory disclosure, it is difficult to see on what ground of argument or inference, from necessity, propriety, or the nature of constitutional republican government, an authority can be deduced for either branch of the Legislature to do so by its mere order.

* * * * * * *

It is because the constitution of Massachusetts is more potent and above, not only the common law but the Legislature also, controlling all tribunals and all departments of the government alike, as well as all inhabitants of the Commonwealth, that this safeguard of individual rights cannot be suspended or invaded either by general laws or the special order of the legislative body or of any of its branches.

It is to be observed that the provision relates to the privileges of the subject, and not to the authority of any tribunal or body before which inquisition may be made. It places a limit upon all inquiry to which he may be subjected, not by defining the extent of the authority by which it is made, but by surrounding him with a privilege of exemption, which cannot be set aside by any authority without his own consent. It excludes the Legislature as well as the courts. It follows also that in its exercise it is regulated by the same rules in legislative investigations as in judicial or other inquiries.

And, finally, the court concludes its opinion as follows:

The result is, that, in appealing to his privilege as an exemption from the obligation to answer the inquiries put to him, the petitioner was in the exercise of his constitutional right; and his refusal to answer upon that ground was not and could not be considered as disorderly conduct, or a contempt of the authority of the body before which he was called to answer. There being no legal ground to authorize the commitment upon which he is held, he must be discharged therefrom. He is discharged accordingly.

This important and instructive opinion shows that the State of Massachusetts, to which we have so long looked as a defender of liberty, and a teacher of sound learning and of constitutional law, holds its Legislature as well as its people under the dominion of its constitution as expounded by the courts. That State does not allow its senate or house to arrogate to itself supreme power over the citizen; but its courts hold the shield of the constitution over the humblest citizen when his rights are invaded by either or both branches of the Legislature.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Do you hold that section 103 of the Revised Statutes is unconstitutional; that the amendment which relates to witnesses not being bound to give testimony which criminates themselves applies to investigations before committees of Congress?

Mr. GARFIELD. That section is outside of this discussion. I am only saying that in the Massachusetts case it was considered the witness had the right under the constitution to be protected by the courts against the senate of his State when that body attempted to imprison him for refusing to answer a question which he had a right to refuse to answer. And the court did not permit the senate to be the final judge of Emery's rights.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Our bill of rights does not extend to Congress.

Mr. GARFIELD. Our bill of rights does not extend to Congress!

Mr. LAWRENCE. Not in that particular.

Mr. GARFIELD. Does my friend really mean to assert that our bill of rights does not extend to Congress?

Mr. LAWRENCE. No, sir; not in that particular.

Mr. GARFIELD. Read the sixth amendment to the Constitution, that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. Could language be more explicit or more comprehensive?

Mr. FRYE. That is what the majority of this committee insist, that the bill of rights does not extend to Congress.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I say in this particular.

Mr. GARFIELD. In this particular! Who ever before heard it said in an American Congress——

Mr. LAWRENCE. Everybody who has read Story.

Mr. GARFIELD. Who has ever before in the American Congress heard the Constitution so tortured as to read "no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property, except by due process of law, or by the will of the House of Representatives?" And who is the author of such a monstrous interpolation?

Mr. LAWRENCE. What is due process of law?

Mr. GARFIELD. Due process of law is the law administered by the courts. Go read Chancellor Kent, read the decision of Judge Story in the case quoted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] read any of the great writers on constitutional law, and they will tell you that "due process of law" does not mean the action of the House of Representatives, does not mean the Senate, much less a committee of either House. If gentlemen doubt the construction I give to the term "due process of law," I refer them to authorities which we are all bound to respect. In the case of Wilkins vs. Leland, 2 Peters, 657, Justice Story, delivering the opinion of the Supreme Court, said:

That government can scarcely be deemed free where the rights of property are left solely dependent upon the will of a legislative body without any restraint. The fundamental maxims of a free government seem to require the rights of personal liberty and private property should be held sacred; at least no court of justice in this country would be warranted in assuming that the power to violate and disregard them—a power so repugnant to the common principles of justice and civil liberty—lurked under any general grant of legislative authority, or ought to be implied from any general expression of the will of the people.

Mr. Chancellor Kent, in his Commentaries, volume 1, 620, (9th edition,) says:

It may be received as a proposition universally understood and acknowledged throughout the country that no person can be taken, or imprisoned, or disseized of his freehold or estate, or exiled, or condemned, or deprived of life, liberty, or property, unless by the law of the land or the judgment of his peers. The words "by the law of the land," as used originally in Magna Charta in reference to this subject, are understood to mean due process of law; that is, by indictment or presentment of good and lawful men; and this, says Lord Coke, is the true sense and exposition of those words. The better and larger definition of due process of law is that it means law in the regular course of administration through courts of justice.

In Dwarris on Statutes it is said:

To give this clause of the Constitution any value it must be understood to mean that no person shall be deprived by any form of legislative or governmental action of either life, liberty, or property, except as a consequence of judicial proceeding appropriately and legally conducted. (Totten Dwarris on Statutes and Constitutions, page 430.)

In the light of these authorities, I challenge gentlemen to find any warrant for our proceedings in this case. Such warrant cannot be found until you have argued out of the Constitution the words "due process of law."

Mr. HILL. Does the gentleman from Ohio mean to say an order of this House in a case like this is not due process of law?

Mr. GARFIELD. I do mean to say this is not due process of law. I mean to say our action in this case is wrong ab initio. You have propounded a question to this witness when the Constitution of this country protects him against your right to demand an answer. You did him wrong. You outraged your country's Constitution when you required him to answer, and every step in which you have involved yourselves has added to the first blunder.

Mr. LAWRENCE. A single question.

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. LAWRENCE. If, then, a person cannot be deprived of his liberty except by due process of law, then, if this is not due process of law, there is no power to imprison by this House.

Mr. GARFIELD. I say to my colleague that up to 1858, during three-quarters of a century of the history of Congress, there never occurred imprisonment of anybody by the House of Representatives. For three-quarters of a century our citizens were a great deal better than they are now or our fathers were a great deal more careful of the rights of citizens than we are. For three-quarters of a century the House did not imprison any man for contempt or other cause. This I am told by those who have made it a careful study.

But in 1867, in order to settle this great question, the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. Stephens,] now a member of this House, but not now in his seat, determined to crystallize into the solemn form of law the proceeding by which a court should determine the guilt and fix the punishment for a contempt of the House or the Senate. It is now proposed to break over all the barriers of that law. My colleague, [Mr. HURD,] who has charge of this subject, says that law is unconstitutional, and invades the rights of the House, and he proposes to disregard it.

Mr. HOAR. Let me ask the learned gentleman from Ohio, as I understand him, whether he means to say this House has power to commit for contempt or not? The question is not now whether it has ever been done or not, but whether this House has the power to commit for contempt or whether it has not?

Mr. GARFIELD. I understand we have now delegated that power. We have by law defined the mode and measure of punishment. What we might have done before that law passed is not under discussion.

Mr. HOAR. Have we in any case the power to commit for contempt?

Mr. GARFIELD. O, yes; in cases not provided by that law——

Mr. HOAR. This applies to a recusant witness if it applies at all. Then if we have power to commit for contempt in any case it is not a violation of the Constitution of the United States on the ground he cannot be committed except by due process of law, and that due process of law is exercised by the court.

Mr. GARFIELD. My friend is too good a lawyer to say contempt covers the question I am discussing.

Mr. KELLEY. O, no.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is not contempt but the question of jurisdiction to imprison and punish, and to refuse to allow the courts of the country to pass upon the constitutional rights of the citizen, which it is claimed we have invaded.

Mr. HOAR. My question to the gentleman is this: He argues that you cannot deprive a man of liberty without due process of law, and the gentleman says due process of law is an adjudication of a court. Now, if that be true, whatever other arguments there may be on one side or the other, then every man in prison for a contempt of this House, whether a recusant witness or otherwise, is unconstitutionally imprisoned. But if the act of this House be a due process of law under the Constitution, then the court having jurisdiction of this matter has decided it, to wit, the House.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Due process of law means the judgment of a court; and that provision in the amendment to the Constitution which relates to due process of law does not apply to imprisonment by this House.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is to me a most bold and startling heresy, that this House is above the Constitution. We have of course the power to expel a member. We have the power to preserve order. We have all those ordinary parliamentary powers. But when we have pushed these rights of the House so far in these modern days that, according to the doctrine of my friend from Ohio, [Mr. HURD,] the House may imprison a citizen for two years, and the Senate may imprison him for life, (because the Senate is an immortal body;) when we have so far pushed the privileges and powers of this House as to make it an uncontrolled and uncontrollable despot, a tyrant that overbears all boundaries, that forces its way into all private closets, and breaks into every man's domicile, that its power knows no limit but its own discretion, that it shall have the right to uncover the secrets of all families within the Republic, that there shall be no privity to which it cannot penetrate, but, unrestrained by law, unlimited by the Constitution, like the despots of the Middle Ages, shall be lord paramount of all rights within its boundaries, is a doctrine so monstrous, if adopted by us, that it ought to cover us with infamy and bring down upon us the wrath of an outraged people.

Let this doctrine be once proclaimed and you arm every citizen in hostility against the Congress of his country. You make the House the natural enemy of every citizen, and every citizen ought to be our enemy. I declare myself the implacable foe of such a tyrant and of the doctrine that makes such tyranny possible. The doctrine asserted to-day on this floor would make this House the most odious tyranny that ever stalked abroad over any land to curse it.

Now, I believe, Mr. Speaker, that we have two duties to perform. The first is to show that we are willing to obey the law. Here is a plain law that we have enacted, which declares that when the return to the writ of habeas corpus is made the body of the petitioner shall be returned with it. We have ordered the return to be made to the court, but we refuse to return the body. Why? Because we assume to be above the law, and refuse to obey it. I deny the arrogant and wicked assumption. We must obey the law by delivering the body of the witness.

Let us do that as our first duty, just as we did it a year ago when we were under the strongest temptation to refuse. When we were told that the money-bags of a corrupt corporation had reached the corridors of this House; when its bribes had corrupted some of our officers; when the shadow of unutterable disgrace was thrown upon every member of this House by the refusal of a witness to a question which we had an undoubted right to have answered; when this House had the strongest possible reasons for commanding that by all the power and penalties we could inflict upon him he should be compelled to disclose what had been done with that money, even then we were fortunate in being able to do what it was our duty to do—obey the law. There are twenty-five men to-day on the democratic side of the House who voted that the witness should be delivered up to the court; and there are as many more men now on this side of the House who voted in the same way. There are about fifty men in this House who in the last Congress voted to deliver Irwin in answer to the writ. Now, if in that case we obeyed the law under such provocation to resist it, much more should we obey it now when, to say the least, it is a question of gravest doubts whether we have any right whatever to propound the question to the witness.

Let us do that. Let us show ourselves obedient to the law; and then let us calmly set about the work of undoing the wrong we have committed against this private citizen, by rescinding the order that required him to answer about a matter of his private concerns alone; and let our committee go on with all that part of their investigation which relates to the Government or any of its officers or agents.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HURD. I desire to inform the House that the Sergeant-at-Arms appeared at ten o'clock to-day before the judge of the District, and the order for a return to the writ was continued until ten o'clock on Tuesday morning. I now move that the House adjourn; and I give notice that I will move the previous question at three o'clock on Monday afternoon, after two hours have been allowed for debate. It is absolutely indispensable that the vote be taken on Monday, as no further time will be given to the Sergeant-at-Arms for a return of the writ.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to ask the gentleman by what authority the Sergeant-at-Arms made any arrangement?

Mr. HURD. The Sergeant-at-Arms made no arrangement. The court, interfering with the jurisdiction of the House, has made an arrangement.

INTERNAL REVENUE.

Mr. MORRISON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3137) to amend the laws relating to internal revenue; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

CITIZENSHIP OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr FAULKNER. The bill (H. R. No. 2245) to carry into execution the provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution concerning citizenship and, to define certain rights of citizens of the United States in foreign countries and certain duties of diplomatic and consular officers, and for other purposes, was made the special order to-day, but these proceedings have crowded it out. I now ask unanimous consent that it be made the special order for next Saturday, and from day to day thereafter until disposed of.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

WASHINGTON, CINCINNATI AND SAINT LOUIS RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. I rise to a question of privilege. I desire to correct the Journal. I reported from the Committee on Railways and Canals the bill (H. R. No. 2798) to authorize the Washington, Cincinnati and Saint Louis Railroad Company to construct a narrow-gauge railway from tide-water to the cities of Saint Louis and Chicago, and had it made the special order for the 18th day of April; but by a mistake of the Journal it was put down for to-day. The only way in which I can correct it is by asking unanimous consent that the bill be made the special order for Tuesday next.

There was no objection, and the order was made.

COMMERCE AND NAVIGATION.

Mr. SAYLER. There has been a mistake in the engrossment of what is known as the steamboat bill, and I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the House request the return from the Senate of the bill (H. R. No. 2799) to amend certain sections of titles 48 and 52 of the Revised Statutes, concerning commerce and navigation and the regulation of steam-vessels.

The resolution was agreed to.

The question was then taken upon Mr. HURD's motion, and it was agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock and twenty minutes p.m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. COOK: A paper relating to the establishment of post-routes from Montezuma to Drayton, and from Hawkinsville to Hayneville, Georgia, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. DE BOLT: The petition of S. S. Franklin and 50 others, of Grant Township, Putnam County, Missouri, for the repeal of the resumption act, and for tea and coffee to remain on the free list, to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. FAULKNER: A paper relating to the establishment of a post-route from Barrettsville to Inkerman, and from Savagetown, via Birch River post-office and John Baughman's mills to Welch Glade, West Virginia, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 25 mechanics of Harper's Ferry, West Virginia, for an appropriation to pay them their wages, earned for services rendered the Government for the months of March and April, 1861, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, the petition of citizens of the counties of Nicholas, Braxton, and Webster, West Virginia, for the establishment of a post-route from Savagetown, via Birch River post-office and John Baughman's mills, to Welch Glade, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. GARFIELD: The petition of Ella Long, that Congress pass a law making her the lawful heir of Jeremiah Long, deceased, to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

By Mr. HAMILTON, of New Jersey: The petition of Hall Colby, for compensation for services and valuable information rendered navigators, to the Committee of Claims.

By Mr. HOAR: The petition of Frank Donahue, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOPKINS: Six petitions from 193 business men of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, for the prohibition of discriminations by common carriers, to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, four petitions from business men and laboring-men of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, of similar import, to the same committee.

By Mr. HUNTON: Papers relating to the petition of G. W. Taylor, late postmaster at Winchester, Virginia, for relief, to the Committee of Claims.

By Mr. JENKS: The petition of 100 oil-producers of Pennsylvania, for the prohibition of discriminations by common carriers, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. KIDDER: The petition of C. F. Mallahan and 32 other citizens of Union County, Territory of Dakota, for the repair of the military bridge over the Big Sioux River, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LEAVENWORTH: The petition of W. H. H. Geer and others, that the present tariff laws may not be disturbed, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. LUTTRELL: Memorial of General William T. Sherman, and several hundred pioneers and former residents of California, relative to the claim of General John A. Sutter, to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

By Mr. MACDOUGALL: The petition of citizens of Lyons, New York, that certain lands in Brooklyn, New York, be transferred to that city for market purposes, to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. MCMAHON: The petition of J. Oblinger, for the adoption by the Post-Office Department of a return postal card designed by him, and, if adopted, for compensation for the invention, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. O'NEILL: Memorial of the New York Produce Exchange, suggesting such amendments to the revenue laws as they deem will do justice to dealers in distilled spirits, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. SPRINGER: The petition of D. W. New Kirk and 105 other citizens of the twelfth congressional district of Illinois, for the unconditional repeal of the resumption act, the retirement of the national-bank currency and the substitution therefor of legal-tender notes interconvertible with bonds, to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. STEVENSON: The petition of W. O. Davis and others, of Bloomington, Illinois, for an amendment of the postal laws, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, April 17, 1876.

PRAYER.

Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D., Chaplain to the Senate, offered the following prayer:

O Thou almighty and everlasting God, the Father of light, help us to see light in Thy light. When we are as men walking in darkness, be Thou our Guide. When we are as men that encounter judgment, be Thou our Adviser and Friend. We pray Thee be very specially nigh to Thy servant who presides in this place, and to Thy servants, the Senators, in the discharge of the high and solemn functions with which they are here now invested. May they not fail to see the right and to dispense justice for the confirmation of all that is good and for the welfare of the nation. Through Jesus Christ. Amen.

JOURNAL.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. DAVIS presented the petition of Joseph Wheeler and 100 other citizens and workingmen of Mason County, West Virginia, praying that the existing tariff laws may remain undisturbed for the present; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BOGY presented the petition of the board of directors of the Merchants' Exchange of Saint Louis, Missouri, praying for the passage of the bill providing for the organization of the Signal Service Corps, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DENNIS presented the petition of the Board of Trade and citizens of Georgetown, District of Columbia, and also of merchants and citizens of Washington, District of Columbia, praying Congress to make an appropriation of $50,000 for dredging the Georgetown and Virginia channel of the Potomac River, and removing rock therefrom between the Aqueduct and the Long Bridge; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the petition of James T. Earle, William McKenney, Samuel I. Earle, and others, praying for an appropriation for the improvement of Corsica Creek, Maryland; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HAMLIN presented the petition of J. H. Hamlin & Son, of Portland, Maine, praying that they may be allowed to change the name of the brig A. S. Pennell, registered in the district of Portland and Falmouth, Maine, to City of Moule; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WALLACE presented a petition of citizens of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of a law to regulate commerce and prohibit unjust discriminations by common carriers; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of workingmen of Centre County, Pennsylvania, remonstrating against any change in the present tariff laws; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of envelope manufacturers, printers, and other citizens of Pennsylvania, praying that the manufacture and sale of stamped envelopes may be discontinued by the Government; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented the petition of the Captains and Vessel Owners' Association of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, praying for the repeal of the law providing for compulsory pilotage on coasting vessels; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. JONES, of Florida, presented the petition of William Curry, of Key West, Florida, praying that he may be allowed compensation for damage to certain property belonging to him in the city of Key West by the careening of the United States ship Pursuit in the year 1862; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CONKLING presented a memorial of the workingmen of Essex County, New York, remonstrating against any change of the present tariff laws; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented five memorials of citizens of Saint Lawrence County, New York, remonstrating against the passage of any law allowing an American register to foreign-built vessels; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented two memorials of citizens of Detroit, Michigan, remonstrating against the passage of any law allowing an American register to foreign-built vessels; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HOWE presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Wisconsin, in favor of an appropriation for the completion of the improvements on the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Rock County, Wisconsin, praying for the immediate repeal of the resumption act, so called; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

DISTRICT COURT OF WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 472) changing the times of holding terms of the district court for the district of West Virginia to report, recommending that the Senate disagree to the amendment proposed by the House. As the bill merely relates to holding the terms of the court, I ask that it be considered now. I move that the Senate disagree to the House amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on disagreeing to the amendment of the House. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment of the House of Representatives was to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert the following:

That hereafter the district court of the United States for the district of West Virginia shall be held at the times and places following; but when any of said dates shall fall on Sunday the term shall commence the following Monday, to wit: At the city of Wheeling on the 1st day of March and the 1st day of September; at Clarksburgh on the 1st day of April and the 1st day of October; at Charleston on the 1st day of May and the 1st day of November; and at Martinsburgh on the 1st day of June and the first day of December; and all pending process, rules, and proceedings shall be conducted in the same manner and with the same effect as to time as if this act had not passed: Provided, however, That the terms of court hereby authorized to be held at Martinsburgh shall be void and of no effect unless all buildings and conveniences necessary to the holding of said courts shall be furnished by the proper authorities of the county of Berkeley free and clear of all costs and expense to the United States.

Mr. DAVIS. I regret that the committee has not been able to recommend the establishment of a court at Martinsburgh. In my judgment it would be economy on the part of the United States to establish a court there. I, however, have done my duty by trying to persuade the committee to think as I do on that point, and have been unable to accomplish that purpose; but as the bill is important, I will not make unreasonable objections to the disagreement recommended by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on disagreeing to the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3128) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for prior years, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I am directed by the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, to whom were referred certain propositions of amendment to the Revised Statutes, sent to that committee upon the ground that there were errors in the revision, to report a bill. The committee find that in these particulars the request is for new legislation. I therefore report back those proposed amendments in the form of a bill, and as they relate to commercial matters, I will ask its reference to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (S. No. 742) to amend the Revised Statutes was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOWE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred a resolution of the Senate directing that committee to inquire into the expediency of repealing section 8, of chapter 2, title 1, of the Revised Statutes, reported a bill (S. No. 743) to amend section 8, chapter 2, title 1, of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read, and passed to the second reading.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2459) for the relief of Theodore F. Miller, late private Company G, Third Regiment Iowa Cavalry Volunteers, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK, from the Committee on Railroads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1771) to declare forfeited to the United States certain lands granted to the State of Kansas in aid of the construction of railroads by act of Congress approved March 3, 1863, reported it with amendments.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 586) for the relief of Henry K. Kelly, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. BOOTH, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 677) granting a site for an observatory to the trustees of the Lick Observatory of the astronomical department of the University of California, reported it with an amendment.

PAY OF P. B. S. PINCHBACK.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Committee on Privileges and Elections, having had under consideration the question as to the proper amount of compensation to be paid P. B. S. Pinchback, late a contestant for a seat in this body, have instructed me to report the following resolution and recommend its adoption:

Resolved, That P. B. S. Pinchback, late a contestant for a seat in the Senate, from the State of Louisiana, be allowed an amount equal to the compensation and mileage of a Senator from the beginning of the term for which he was a contestant, up to the period of the determination of the contest by the Senate.

I move that the resolution lie on the table and that it, together with the written report which I submit, be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL AND STATE RIGHTS.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that I will on next Monday, if there be no unfinished business, ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of certain resolutions which I offered at the beginning of the session declaring that the people of the United States constitute a nation and the true nature and character of the Government.

COUNTING OF ELECTORAL VOTES.

Mr. THURMAN. I rise merely to give notice that at the earliest time I can have opportunity I will ask the Senate to take up the motion submitted by me to reconsider the vote on Senate bill No., 1 to provide for and regulate the counting of votes for President and Vice-President and the decision of questions arising thereon, and I will ask the Senate to hear me for a very few minutes to give the reasons why I think the vote ought to be reconsidered.

IMPEACHMENT OF W. W. BELKNAP.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will at this time take occasion to say that, inasmuch as the bill authorizing the Presiding Officer to administer oaths has not become a law, if there be no objection the Chair will appoint a committee to wait upon the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States and request him to appear in the Chamber to administer the oath. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Chair appoints on that committee the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] and the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN.] They will now discharge that duty.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

A bill (H. R. No. 256) for the relief of Herman Hulman, of Terre Haute, Indiana;

A bill (H. R. No. 1765) respecting the limits of reservations for town sites upon the public domain;

A bill (H. R. No. 1947) granting to the city of Stevens Point, Wisconsin, a certain piece of land;

A bill (H. R. No. 2110) for the restoration to market of certain lands in the Territory of Utah; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3136) extending the time within which homestead entries upon certain lands in Michigan may be made.

The message also announced that the House requested the return from the Senate of the bill (H. R. No. 2799) to amend certain sections of titles 4852 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning commerce and navigation and the regulation of steam-vessels.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. No. 34) to confirm pre-emption and homestead entries of public lands within the limits of railroad grants in cases where such entries have been made under the regulations of the Land Department; and

A bill (S. No. 701) further to provide for the administering of oaths in the Senate.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CONKLING asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 744) to restore to notaries public their authority in the Federal courts; which was read twice by its title, and, together with the accompanying memorial, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HAMLIN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 745) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a register and change the name of the brig A. S. Pennell to the City of Moule; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WINDOM asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 746) to amend section 4220 of chapter 3 of title 48 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, entitled "Regulation of commerce and navigation;" which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 747) to establish a post-route; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. KEY asked, and by unanimons consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 748) for the relief of James B. Guthrie; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

On motion of Mr. BURNSIDE, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of C. G. Frendenburg be taken from the files of the Senate.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. DAVIS and Mr. HAMILTON submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them to the bill (H. R. No. 3022) making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 3128) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for prior years, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

IMPEACHMENT OF W. W. BELKNAP.

The Chief Justice of the United States, Hon. Morrison R. Waite, entered the Senate Chamber, escorted by Messrs. EDMUNDS and THURMAN, the committee appointed for the purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of twelve o'clock and thirty minutes having arrived, in pursuance of rule the legislative and executive business of the Senate will be suspended, and the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the articles of impeachment exhibited by the House of Representatives against William W. Belknap, late Secretary of War.

The Chief Justice took a seat by the side of the President pro tempore of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Sergeant-at-Arms will make the opening proclamation.

The SERGEANT-AT-ARMS. Hear ye! Hear ye! Hear ye! All persons are commanded to keep silence on pain of imprisonment while the Senate of the United States is sitting for the trial of the articles of impeachment exhibited by the House of Representatives against William W Belknap, late Secretary of War.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will now call the names of those Senators who have not been sworn, and such Senators as they are called will advance to the desk and take the oath.

The Secretary proceeded to call the names of the Senators who had not been heretofore sworn; and the Chief Justice administered the oath to Senators ALLISON, BURNSIDE, CAPERTON, CHRISTIANCY, CONKLING, CONOVER, DENNIS, GOLDTHWAITE, HOWE, JONES of Nevada, MORRILL of Maine, RANSOM, and ROBERTSON.

On motion of Mr. EDMUNDS, it was Ordered, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that the Senate is in its Chamber and ready to proceed with the trial of the impeachment of William W. Belknap; and that seats are provided for the accommodation of the members.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will invite the House accordingly.

At one o'clock p. m. William W. Belknap entered the Senate Chamber, accompanied by his counsel, Hon. Jeremiah S. Black, Hon. Montgomery Blair, and Hon. M. H. Carpenter, who were conducted to the seats assigned them in the space in front of the Secretary's desk on the right of the Chair.

At one o'clock and two minutes p. m. the Sergeant-at-Arms announced the managers on the part of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The managers will be admitted and conducted to seats provided for them within the bar of the Senate.

The managers were conducted to seats provided in the space in front of the Secretary's desk on the left of the Chair, namely: Hon. SCOTT LORD, of New York; Hon. J. PROCTOR KNOTT, of Kentucky; Hon. WILLIAM P. LYNDE, of Wisconsin; Hon. J. A. MCMAHON, of Ohio; Hon. G. A. JENKS, of Pennsylvania; Hon. E. G. LAPHAM, of New York; and Hon. GEORGE F. HOAR, of Massachusetts.

Mr. Manager LORD. Mr. President, in accordance with the invitation extended, the House of Representatives has resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole and will attend upon this sitting of this court on being waited upon by the Sergeant-at-Arms.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Sergeant-at-Arms will wait upon the House of Representatives and invite them to the Chamber of the Senate.

At one o'clock and five minutes p. m. the Sergeant-at-Arms announced the presence of the members of the House of Representatives, who entered the Senate Chamber preceded by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, (Mr. SAMUEL J. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania,) into which that body had resolved itself to witness the trial, who was accompanied by the Speaker and Clerk of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will now read the minutes of the sitting on Wednesday the 5th instant.

The Secretary read the Journal of proceedings of the Senate sitting for trial of impeachments of Wednesday April 5, 1876.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will now read the return of the Sergeant-at-Arms to the summons directed to be served.

The Secretary read the following return appended to the writ of summons:

The foregoing writ of summons addressed to William W. Belknap and the foregoing precept addressed to me were duly served upon the said William W. Belknap by delivering to and leaving with him true and attested copies of the same at No. 2022 G street, Washington City, the residence of the said William W. Belknap, on Thursday the 6th day of April, 1876, at six o'clock and forty minutes in the afternoon of that day.

JOHN R. FRENCH,
Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that Rule 9 will be suspended for reasons already stated, and the Chief Justice will now administer the oath to the officer attesting the truth of this return.

The Chief Justice administered the following oath to the Sergeant-at-Arms.

I, John R. French, do solemnly swear that the return made by me upon the process issued on the 6th day of April, by the Senate of the United States, against W. W. Belknap, is truly made, and that I have performed such service as therein described: So help me God.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee will please escort the Chief Justice to the Supreme Court room.

The Chief Justice retired, escorted by the committee, Mr. EDMUNDS and Mr. THURMAN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Sergeant-at-Arms will now call William W. Belknap, the respondent, to appear and answer the charges of impeachment brought against him.

The SERGEANT-AT-ARMS. William W. Belknap, William W. Belknap, appear and answer the articles of impeachment exhibited against you by the House of Representatives.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President, William W. Belknap, a private citizen of the United States and of the State of Iowa, in obedience to the summons of the Senate sitting as a court of impeachment to try the articles presented against him by the House of Representatives of the United States, appears at the bar of the Senate sitting as a court of impeachment and interposes the following plea; which I will ask the Secretary to read and request that it may be filed.

The Secretary read as follows:

In the Senate of the United States sitting as a court of impeachment.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA } Upon articles of impeachment of the House of vs. } Representatives of the United States of WILLIAM W. BELKNAP. } America, of high crimes and misdemeanors.

And the said William W. Belknap, named in the said articles of impeachment, comes here before the honorable the Senate of the United States sitting as a court of impeachment, in his own proper person, and says that this honorable court ought not to have or take further cognizance of the said articles of impeachment exhibited and presented against him by the House of Representatives of the United States, because, he says, that before and at the time when the said House of Representatives ordered and directed that he, the said Belknap, should be impeached at the bar of the Senate, and at the time when the said articles of impeachment were exhibited and presented against him, the said Belknap, by the said House of Representatives, he, the said Belknap, was not, nor hath he since been, nor is he now an officer of the United States; but at the said times was, ever since hath been, and now is a private citizen of the United States and of the State of Iowa; and this he, the said Belknap, is ready to verify; wherefore he prays judgment whether this court can or will take further cognizance of the said articles of impeachment.

WM. W. BELKNAP.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
District of Columbia, ss:

William W. Belknap, being first duly sworn on oath, says that the foregoing plea by him subscribed is true in substance and fact.

WM. W. BELKNAP.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 17th day of April, 1876.

DAVID DAVIS,
Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, Hon. Montgomery Blair, and myself also appear as counsel for Mr. Belknap.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will note the appearance of the respondent and the presence of the counsel named.

Mr. Manager LORD. Mr. President, the managers pray a copy of the plea that has been filed, and the House of Representatives ask time to consider what replication to make to the plea of William W. Belknap, late Secretary of War, to the jurisdiction of this Senate sitting as a court of impeachment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no objection, I believe, to the filing of the plea of the respondent. The Chair hears no objection; it will be filed. The managers will please reduce their motion to writing.

Mr. Manager LORD. We will do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the officers and members of the House of Representatives, that if it is to their convenience to withdraw at any time, they are at liberty to do so.

The House of Representatives then withdrew.

Mr. Manager LORD. Mr. President, I have sent to the Secretary the request of the managers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The managers submit a motion, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of Representatives request a copy of the plea filed by W. W. Belknap, late Secretary of War, and the House of Representatives desire time until Wednesday, the 19th instant, at one o'clock, to consider what replication to make to the plea of the said W. W. Belknap, late Secretary of War.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators, you have heard the motion of the managers. Those who concur will say ay; those who nonconcur will say no, [putting the question.] The ayes have it; the Senate so orders.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will ask the gentlemen counsel for the respondent if they will be ready to proceed at the time named in the motion submitted by the managers?

Mr. CARPENTER. That will depend entirely upon what the managers do. We cannot anticipate. If they do what we suppose they will do, we shall be ready. If not, we shall have to consider what we will do next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Have the managers on the part of the House of Representatives anything further to propose?

Mr. Manager LORD. We have nothing further to propose at this time. With the leave of the Senate we beg permission to retire.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Leave is granted. Have counsel for the respondent anything further to propose?

Mr. CARPENTER. Nothing, Mr. President.

The managers and counsel thereupon withdrew.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate sitting for the trial of the impeachment adjourn until Wednesday next, at half past twelve o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate sitting for the trial of impeachment adjourned to Wednesday, the 19th instant, at twelve o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.

REPAVEMENT OF PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes its legislative business.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Calendar.

Mr. INGALLS. I suggest that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the unfinished business, being Senate bill No. 680, for the repaving of Pennsylvania avenue.

Mr. DORSEY. I believe the unfinished business is the bill for paving Pennsylvania avenue.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (S. No. 680) authorizing the repavement of Pennsylvania avenue is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] which will be read:

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 3, line 7, after the word "repair," it is proposed to insert:

The cost of paving the intersections of all streets and avenues and all parks lying and abutting upon said avenue to be paid out of the general revenue of the District, except the portions of such intersections lying between the tracks of the said railroad company and two feet on each side thereof, which shall be paid by the said railroad company. The cost of the said pavement lying between the Botanic Garden and a line two feet outside of the westerly side of the said railroad tracks to be paid by the United States; and, after the aforesaid deduction, the residue of the cost to be as follows:

Mr. DORSEY. I think that amendment is entirely just and equitable to the property-holders on Pennsylvania avenue, who a few years ago paid nearly one-half the entire cost of paving Pennsylvania avenue. This amendment lessens the burden on them very considerably.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not precisely understand the amendment. Does it mean that the paving of the Avenue opposite the Botanic Garden shall be paid entirely by the Government?

Mr. BAYARD. On the side next to the garden, the space between the Government lots and the westerly line of the railroad track. The Government owns that property.

Mr. LOGAN. But on the opposite side, how is it?

Mr. BAYARD. It is expressly stated that it is from the side of the curb next to the Botanic Garden up to a line two feet west of the side of the railroad track. It is meant that the Government shall pay for the paving of the whole of that portion.

Mr. LOGAN. I see. Then on the opposite side of the railroad track the cost of the paving would be paid one-third by the Government, one-third by the property-holders, and one-third by the District. I merely suggest that if the Government pays for all on the west side of the railroad, why should not the Government be exempt on the east side of the railroad?

Mr. WEST. It only pays, according to the amendment, between the Botanic Garden and the railroad; it has nothing to do with paying on the other side.

Mr. LOGAN. I beg the Senator's pardon; it has to do with paying on the other side under this bill; it pays one-third on the other side. If it is right for the Government to pay all on the side next to its own property, then it is equally just that the District and the property-holders should pay all on the other side. It is not just that the Government should pay all on one side and one-third of the balance on the other side. That certainly is not equal and just.

Mr. BAYARD. The Senate will see that it is placing the obligation of the Government in this act precisely on the basis of the private citizen. I do not hold that that exists. I do not mean to say that there is any principle connected with this assessment of the cost of one-third to the Government, one-third to the District of Columbia, and one-third to the private property-holders on the Avenue; but I merely say that it is an inequitable assessment growing out of the fact that already the cost to the property-owners along the Avenue for the very defective pavement laid down in 1871 has been very great, and my only object in offering this amendment was to diminish the cost of this pavement to them. The Senate will see that the bill in this respect is not based on any principle of natural equity. There is no rule in regard to this one-third. I only considered that it was reducing their share of this great expense to such proportion as they ought properly to bear. If we made them pay the same proportion of this proposed pavement that we made them pay in 1871, the cost of the two combined would amount to about $54.58 per front foot of all their property; and that occurred to me to be a very crushing tax. For the sake of limiting their expense I propose that they should bear the proportion which I have suggested. There is no basis for that beyond a general equitable assessment.

The Senate knows as well or better than I do that there has been a rather undefined understanding that the Government of the United States should keep in repair thoroughly all the avenues, leaving the people here to take care of the cross-streets. If such a rule ever existed it has never been carried out precisely. On the contrary they have assessed the property-holders on these wide avenues just as much as they have on the side streets. Nor do I mean to say that if we had abided by any such rule it would have led to any better results to property-owners under the unrestrained system of improvement which we lately witnessed all over this District and the pavement of streets far beyond the presence of any buildings. There is no more reason why the property-owners on the side opposite the Botanic Garden should pay more for paving the street on their side than the other property-owners pay on other portions of the Avenue.

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly not.

Mr. BAYARD. I admit that by making the Government pay the whole of the frontage along the Botanic Garden we do undoubtedly increase the Government's proportion. I am not certain that the whole work ought not to be done by the Government of the United States.

Mr. LOGAN. I understand the Senator's proposition; and, according to his idea of it, his proposition is fair and proper; but I beg leave to differ on a question of principle. There is no rule that I know of laid down in the government of cities in reference to pavements or other public works that will require a larger percentage to be paid by one set of property-owners than by others on the same street. The Government of the United States, so far as it is assessed to pay for the pavement of streets, stands precisely in the same situation to the law that an individual does; and the very moment that you depart from the principle that the Government stands in the same relation with individuals as property-owners, so far as assessment on property is concerned, then you leave it a wide open sea, unguided, undirected by any line of principle whatever, to be assessed merely at the will and dictation of a majority of the Senate or House. That certainly is not the rule as applicable to assessments in any place in this country. I agree that the Government of the United States, where it owns property fronting upon any street or avenue or side street, should pay the assessment for paving, renewing, or mending that anybody else would pay who owned the same amount of property. That is the true principle, in my judgment, to regulate the assessment.

Now, if the Government of the United States pays for the entire pavement in front of the Botanic Garden of one-half of the width of the street, (which is certainly going beyond the principle that would govern in reference to assessments,) it should be exempt from paying any proportion on the other side of the railroad track, on the east side of the street. If it pays half of the paving of the whole street somebody else should pay the other half; because that half of the assessment itself is a greater proportion than is assessed under any rule upon any citizen. I am willing in a liberal spirit to say that the Government shall pay one-half, or pay under the rule of the bill up to within two feet of the railroad line; but then let the Government be exempt from its third on the opposite side of the track. It is no heavier on the property-owner who has a frontage on the Avenue. He pays but his one-third any how. If you pass this proposition he is still assessed the one-third and pays that. Let, then, the other two-thirds on that side of the street, not on the whole street, be paid by the District. That would leave the Government of the United States a sharer in the amount paid for the pavement to a greater extent than other property-holders.

In reference to the side streets, while I am up I will give the reason, as I understand it, for the rule adopted. Property, for instance, fronts on the Avenue and at the same time that property fronts on a side street. Why is it that the property fronting on the Avenue and the side street pays a greater assessment than the inside property of a block that only fronts on the Avenue? The same principle that governs in all other cities must govern in this. The interior property of a block has but one frontage; it is less valuable than the property that has two fronts. The property fronting on the Avenue and on a side street, called corner property, has a frontage on the side street and also on the Avenue. Having two fronts, the rule of assessment would assess that property higher, not higher on the front upon the Avenue, but higher taking it altogether, because it pays for the two frontages, the property being more valuable on that front, the value of the property being increased in the same proportion by paving the side street that it is by paving the Avenue. That is the reason for it.

When we lay an assessment on any principle or any rule of reason, or right, or justice, then we must establish that rule and stand by it. This is a greater assessment than the Government has paid heretofore; but so far as I am concerned I shall make no objection to it, provided the Government is excluded from paying the one-third on the other side of the Avenue. That would be just and fair, in my judgment. I will say to the Senator from Delaware that if his amendment is adopted, unless that provision shall be added that the Government shall be exempt on the other side of the railroad, I will, when we come down to the clause which provides that one-third shall be paid by the United States and out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in lines 16 and 17, move to strike out that portion so far as it applies to the side of the street opposite the Botanic Garden. If the Senator will agree to that, I shall have no objection to his amendment.

Mr. BAYARD. I have not the least objection to that. I suppose the reason why this amendment was suggested to me was simply that here was a long stretch of about eight hundred feet owned entirely by the Government.

Mr. LOGAN. I know it is.

Mr. BAYARD. The object clearly was to make the Government pay more there, and the individual owners pay less; but if the Senator thinks there is a principle involved in it, I do not know that I shall object to a modification. I do not see that the difference would be great, because under the bill the Government as an owner would pay a third and its proportion of the remainder is a third, and the other third is thrown on the District of Columbia.

Mr. LOGAN. But it makes it balance because the Government as it stands would pay only one-third of the whole. Now you make it pay half for part of the distance and add the other third to the District of Columbia. It will equalize it if you do what I propose. The Government will still pay more than was originally intended under the bill, one-third more anyhow if you agree to the amendment I suggest.

Mr. BAYARD. I comprehend the suggestion of the Senator from Illinois, and his proposition would be reached by amending the amendment by striking out the words "the cost of the said pavement lying between the Botanic Garden and a line two feet outside of the westerly side of the said railroad tracks to be paid by the United States." If those words were striken out, it would then leave the Government to pay its proportion. I have no objection to that.

Mr. LOGAN. My objection to the Senator's original proposition is that it does away with the rule and appropriates just what we choose.

Mr. BAYARD. I have no objection to the amendment being modified in the way I have stated, and I will accept that proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be so modified.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Delaware to a part of his amendment. As I understand his amendment, it provides that the pavement in front of the parks shall be paid out of the general treasury of the District of Columbia. The Government of the United States owns those parks. It takes charge of them. The pavement is but an incident to the park. On the principle which is so well stated by the Senator from Illinois, that property-owners should pave in front of the property they own, that pavement ought to be paid for by the United States and not by the citizens of the District of Columbia. These parks are theirs, because this is the capital and they are there to beautify the city. The Government of the United States recognizes that; it spends large sums of money in keeping them in repair. I think that amendment ought to be made to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. LOGAN. The proposition I make affects the parks the same as anything else. The principle ought to govern property owned by the Government, as, for instance, the parks. Under the rule laid down in the bill, the Government pays one-third and the property-owner pays one-third; and the Government, owning the property, pays two-thirds, and the District the balance. That is the bill as it stands now.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. But this amendment provides——

Mr. LOGAN. It provides that the Government shall pay all.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. No; it provides that in front of these parks the cost of paving shall be paid by the District, which ought not to be.

Mr. LOGAN. I am not speaking of the amendment; I am speaking of the bill. I am speaking in opposition to the principle laid down in the amendment; but I speak of the bill. As the bill stands now, the Government being a property-owner, so far as the parks are concerned, it pays as property-owner and as Government too.

Mr. DORSEY. This whole question was gone over with great thoroughness in the committee, and we there had a schedule of the property owned by the Government between the northwest gate of the Capitol and the Treasury building. We considered the manner in which the pavement was paid for in 1871; and the best judgment of the committee was that we had better put it in a lump, and then divide it into thirds: let the District of Columbia pay one-third, the Government one-third, and the property-holders owning property on the Avenue one-third. I think after all, now, that is the easiest and the best way.

Mr. WEST. In connection with what the Senator who has just taken his seat has said, I should like to call the attention of the Senate to the mode in which that expense would be distributed between the various parties who are to pay their one-third. Taking the estimate of the engineer officer and the limitation prescribed by this bill of $4.60 a yard, you will find that the total sum amounts to $312,295, exclusive of the amount that is to be paid by the railroad company. Under the provisions of the bill as advocated just now by the Senator from Arkansas, the District will have to pay $104,098, and the Government $104,098, and private property-owners $104,098, making a tax upon all the individual frontage of real estate upon the line of the Avenue on both sides of $15.27 a foot—a rate exorbitant and out of proportion to all the taxes to which other property in the District has been subjected. Without considering the fact that this very property has within five years been further and earlier subjected to a still greater tax, this fact should induce us to have some consideration in the direction suggested by the Senator from Delaware.

But the proposition of the Senator from Delaware is not altogether equitable to the District, and his attention has been called to that by the Senator from New Jersey. He proposes to tax the District at large for paving in front not only of public parks, but reservations; the market space, for instance, which is retained by the Government. The proposition of the Senator from Illinois would make it still worse for the District. Let me show what will be, in figures, the various proportions to be paid under the amendment of the Senator from Delaware. Taking his amendment to leave the intersections to be paid by the District, we have 2,776 feet; the park spaces, 2,188 feet; total cost to the District of Columbia out of $312,000, $172,000. Senators will please notice that there is no mention made either in the debates so far, or in any amendment that has been suggested, of the market reservation, but including that as the property of the Government and not included by the proposition of the Senator from Delaware the Government will have to pay $85,000 for the Government reservations and the Botanic Garden, and the private property-holders will pay $54,000.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will allow me, does he claim that in front of the market property the Government ought to pay the tax?

Mr. WEST. I have not claimed any such thing. I have only noted the fact that it belonged to the Government.

Mr. LOGAN. Does the Senator say the Government ought to pay that tax?

Mr. WEST. I do not. I call attention to the fact that it belongs to the Government, and nobody has said anything about it yet.

Mr. LOGAN. It belongs to the Government in this way. It is in the hands of a corporation here for ninety-nine years, I believe. The Government has nothing to do with it in the world, and the tax ought to be assessed on the parties who hold the property, for the reason that the Government receives no benefit whatever from it.

Mr. WEST. Then the Senator from Illinois ought to be very much obliged to me for calling his attention to it.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator from Louisiana did not first call my attention to it; I noticed that it was left without mention in the bill. My attention had been called to it before. I was talking to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DORSEY] about it before the Senator from Louisiana mentioned the subject. I think the corporation ought to pay the tax themselves.

Mr. WEST. I was calling attention to what would be the practical result upon property in this District and the payments out of the Treasury of the United States, as proposed by the Senator from Delaware. I will recur to that again and show what the figures are. There will be $172,000 to be paid by the District proper.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator from Louisiana allow me to call his attention to the fact right there that this $172,000 is to be paid out of the District treasury, so that the United States will probably contribute by appropriation from one-half to one-third of it?

Mr. WEST. Why?

Mr. ALLISON. That is the custom. We have done so in the last year. We contributed a million and fifty thousand dollars last year to the general expenses.

Mr. WEST. Whenever that shall occur, then I presume the Senator's suggestion would be proper. These are the facts. I do not think the Senate ought to agree exactly to the proposition when they know what would be the results. The District will be required to pay $172,000, the Government of the United States $85,000, and the private property-holders on the line of the street $54,000. That is all there is of it. If the Senate is prepared to put that tax upon the District at large, which is out of all proportion to its interest in the property, I shall not for myself be in favor of such a proposition.

Mr. DORSEY. Will the Senator from Louisiana allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. WEST. Yes, sir.

Mr. DORSEY. The Senator is in error in regard to the manner in which the general revenue of the District is raised. It is not obtained by taxation altogether, but only in part. I think the last year a very small part was obtained in that way. Congress last year appropriated $1,500,000, not all but a large portion of it to go to the general revenue of the District, out of which this expenditure will be borne. One-third is to be paid in this way and another third charged to the property on the Avenue. I think the Senator from Louisiana must be very much mistaken in his estimate that the one-third proposed in the bill, as it now stands, to be charged to the property will amount to $15 per front foot. There are 711,000 front feet on the Avenue, and $15 a front foot would make a very large sum of money. I have not made a mathematical calculation, but I am very sure the Senator is in error.

Mr. WEST. A gentleman who has not made a mathematical calculation says that one who has made a mathematical calculation is in error. I have here a diagram which was handed me, and I have looked over it with a great deal of attention, in which the total private frontage on that street is 6,818 running feet. The city intersections and the park spaces, according to the proposition of the Senator from Delaware, are 4,964 feet, and the United States reservations and the Botanic Garden 1,330 feet. If, as the Senator says, this work will be paid for by the Government of the United States out of the contribution that the Government is to make for the support of this District, let us get at it at once, then, and charge this paving to the Government, so that we shall have no complication on this score hereafter, and the equanimity of the Senator from Iowa will not be disturbed.

I only wish to direct attention to the fact that under this amendment the District is to pay $172,000, the Government $85,000, and the private property $54,000. The Senator from Arkansas has been a good deal misled by the report made by the board of public works. The $9.55 per running foot that is alleged to have been charged upon this property is not within $10 of the amount per foot, as the Senator from Delaware knows, because he showed us the bills here. His is the right calculation. It is very easy for any one to sit down with a pencil and make it in two minutes. It is $19 instead of $9.

Mr. DORSEY. I will not undertake to controvert the official report of the engineer of this District. I supposed that the man competent to act as the chief engineer of this District was competent to determine what the cost of the pavement laid down on Pennsylvania avenue was. I simply took his figures, and I assumed that they were correct. At all events they are over his official signature and over the official signatures of the commissioners of the District.

Mr. WEST. The Senator does not certainly suppose that I am arraigning him or holding him accountable for the mistake of a man upon whose official position he relies. If a mistake has been made, certainly we ought to know it; and we do know, first from the tax bills (and the Senator can compute from them for himself) that the Senator from Delaware has produced here, Pennsylvania avenue is one hundred and ten feet between the curbs. Twenty feet of space are taken up. In my opinion it would be more equitable—and I will show the Senate the results of this proposition—to charge to the District at large the intersections of the streets. Beginning first with the railroad company, and charging it its share; then charge the District with the intersections; then charge the Government with the reservations and the parks; and then let the private property pay one-third of the remainder. A very trifling amendment to the proposition of the Senator from Delaware would accomplish that object.

This will be the result in figures: The District property of Washington at large will pay $120,000 of the expense; the Government of the United States will pay $137,000; and the private property on the line of the street will pay $54,000. I cannot offer an amendment now, because there is an amendment of the Senator from Illinois pending to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware. Under the proposition of the Senator from Illinois the District will pay a great deal more money than I have stated, and I do not think the amendment to the amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. BAYARD. The proportion of the expense to be borne by the Government of the United States, the District of Columbia, and the private property is agreed upon by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WEST] and myself. In looking over the figures which have been handed me, I find that he rather increases the total cost of this work, and there is also some slight discrepancy between us as to the distances of frontage; but it does not alter the proportion of payment. I am inclined to think that there should be an amendment to the amendment which I have offered that would substantially produce this result: that the District government shall pay for the intersections of the streets and avenues abutting upon Pennsylvania avenue, and also a small amount for alleys, amounting to about ninety feet, and also pay one-third of the cost of paving upon private frontages; that the United States shall pay for paving eight hundred feet in front of the Botanic Garden, for the reservations and park spaces, and also one-third of the cost of paving in front of the private property; and that the private property shall pay the remaining one-third. Upon the supposition that the entire work will cost $303,287.50, it would leave the government of the District to pay $118,165.77; the United States Government to pay $133,246.53; and the private property-holders to pay $51,875.19. Under the bill as reported by the Senator from Arkansas there would be the same amount to pay, distributed in equal proportions between these three parties, leaving $101,095.83 to be borne by each.

There seems to be a concurrence between the Senators who have discussed this subject that it would be inequitable to throw upon the private property-holders along Pennsylvania avenue so large an expense as one-third of the gross amount, and that they should be relieved to some extent. That we should let the Government bear only its fractional proportion of its share of pavement in front of the Botanic Garden is to my mind quite clear. There is no principle at the basis of the division of this cost. It is a purely equitable and arbitrary arrangement on the part of Congress as to what further taxation for the sake of improvement they will put upon this District and upon the property-owners. As has been said and shown here to the Senate, for a wooden pavement exceedingly expensive and luxurious, which was not desired by these property-holders, which they did not vote for, which they had no opportunity of voting for, which they did not contract for, and which they had in a great part to pay for, a tax already, within five years, of nineteen dollars and some cents a front foot on their property has been laid. The present bill would add about $15 more, which it seems by the common opinion of the Senate must be regarded as exceedingly onerous and harsh.

I am quite willing that the amendment offered by me should be modified in any way that will produce the result which I originally contemplated, and which was a relief to these people of the cost of a large portion of this expensive work. If I were a property-owner upon the Avenue, I do not know that I would desire any such improvement as this now contemplated. I must say that I do not think it is in proportion to their use of the property. This Avenue is laid down for the convenience of non-resident citizens of the United States. It is an avenue that is in every sense of the word the avenue of the Federal Government, and those who traverse it and use it are in the proportion probably of 95 per cent. non-residents of the District of Columbia. Therefore it would seem utterly unreasonable to condemn the property-holders, who form so small a fraction of those who have the use of this Avenue, to pay any such proportion of its cost.

I believe I agreed to accept the modification of the Senator from Illinois about the Botanic Garden. That is not a very important part of this expense. It is about eight hundred feet, and the difference between the amount here fixed and the third of the Government under the bill would not be a matter of very great importance. Although I agreed to accept his modification, I am prepared to insist on the amendment as I first offered it, but I am quite willing that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WEST] should offer his amendment.

Mr. EATON. Before the Senator from Louisiana suggested the substitute, I was about to propose an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware. As he very properly observed, there is no precedent in the case. It is an arbitrary act of Congress at all events which determines the relative amount of expenditure. I understand the expenditure will be in round numbers about $300,000 over and above what the railroad company will pay for its own paving. In my judgment the United States should pay, not a third, but a half of it. Let the United States pay one-half that amount, let the District pay one-fourth, and the private property-holders on the Avenue one-fourth. That would make $75,000 to be divided among the property-holders and $75,000 to be laid on the District generally. It seems to me that is fair and equitable. This is the avenue of the United States, and I think it ought to pay one-half the expenditure for this pavement.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator allow me to suggest to him what the result will be if you establish that principle, if it is a principle? I cannot see any principle in it.

Mr. EATON. Nor I.

Mr. LOGAN. Suppose you establish that precedent that the Government shall pay one-half the cost of paving Pennsylvania avenue, after that is paid a great many other streets and avenues here which are in the same condition nearly will need paving; and what principle will you go on when you pave the other streets and avenues? The same?

Mr. EATON. If my honorable friend desires an answer, I would answer by saying that when the subject should come before me I would take such action upon it as I deemed advisable. I regard this avenue as different from K street, or A, or I, or L street. It is the great public avenue of the country. Therefore I would adopt the proportion I have suggested to-day for this purpose.

Mr. LOGAN. Although you denominate Pennsylvania avenue as of great importance, there are other avenues in this city that are very nearly as important as this Avenue—quite a number of them. Are they to be paved? If so, some principle must regulate the Government. It is well known to all who legislate that when you once establish a precedent for a thing, it is very hard to get rid of it. There has been difficulty about this thing of paving these streets for a number of years, and each year there is an encroachment made on the Treasury of the United States. There seems to be a disposition, in other words, in legislation here to levy taxes on the people outside of the city to do that which the people of the city themselves ought to do. That is the whole of it. Taxation is levied on your constituents and mine to do that which should be done by the people here. It is not governed by any principle that is laid down in any city in the world. I ask Senators on what principle they can so act?

If the Government of the United States pays its proportion according to the property its owns, that is all that can be asked of the Government to do and all that upon any just basis or principle whatever it can be asked to do. All that your constituents and mine should be asked to do is to contribute their proportion, so far as Government property is concerned, and let each other citizen of the town contribute his proportion the same as citizens who do not live here. I ask the Senate upon what principle it is, on what rule of justice or equity, that they ask my constituents to contribute the same amount to paving the streets of Washington City that they ask the citizens of Washington City to contribute—people who never travel these streets? Sir, the true rule for us to be governed by is to assess the Government of the United States in proportion to the amount of property it owns. Then we have a rule by which we are guided. Whenever we deviate from that, we are governed by no principle of justice, economy, or equity. I have heretofore in this Senate and in the other House opposed propositions of this kind time and again on the very ground I state to-day, that you cannot justify them upon any rule of justice or equity. Unless you can find a rule by which you can justify your action, it is wrong.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, having been called from the Chamber temporarily, I beg to know the condition of the pending question. What amendment is now before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] as modified at the suggestion of the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. LOGAN.]

Mr. INGALLS. I ask to have it reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. EATON] did not offer an amendment.

Mr. EATON. No, sir.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment, as modified, reads:

The cost of paving the intersections of all streets and avenues and all public parks lying and abutting upon said avenue to be paid out of the general revenue of the District, except the portions of such intersections lying between the tracks of the said railroad company and two feet on each side thereof, which shall be paid by said railroad company, and after the aforesaid deductions the residue of the cost to be paid as follows.

Mr. WEST. After calling the attention of the Senator from Delaware to the fact that he proposes to make the District pay for paving in front of the public parks which belong to the Government of the United States, he sees the impropriety of that and agrees to a modification of his amendment. The result of his amendment, if modified in the way I propose, will be to charge the District with the intersections, the Government with the cost in front of its reservations, with the exception, as I understand, of the Market Space, for which the Senator from Arkansas proposes to provide, and it will distribute the cost around somewhat in the same proportion as he has spoken of and as I have agreed upon; that is to say, the District will pay about $120,000; the Government, $130,000; and property holders on the Avenue, $54,000. The amendment, as thus modified, is:

The cost of paving the intersections of all streets and avenues abutting upon said avenue to be paid out of the general revenue of the District, except the portions of such intersections lying between the tracks of said railroad company and two feet on each side thereof, which shall be paid by the said railroad company; the cost of the said pavement lying between the public parks and the Botanic Gardens and a line two feet outside of the said railroad track to be paid by the United States, and after the aforesaid deduction the residue of cost to be paid as follows.

Mr. BAYARD. I accept the modification.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Delaware will be so modified.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think that improves the amendment of the Senator from Delaware, and, if I shall not disturb my friend from Louisiana, I will give one or two reasons for saying so. I think the distribution under the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware is more easily arranged for than that provided for by the amendment as now modified.

There are no public parks on Pennsylvania avenue between First and Fifteenth streets, except two little spaces, one at Thirteenth street and one at the intersection of Seventh street.

Mr. WEST. If the Senator will look at this diagram he will see that there are five.

Mr. ALLISON. I have walked the Avenue a great many times and I think I know exactly the condition of the Avenue. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware it seems to me is a very just one and perhaps not at all objectionable, but I call his attention, and also that of the Senator from Louisiana, who seems to have taken sufficient interest at least to have a diagram of the Avenue, to the fact that from the Saint Marc Hotel, between Sixth and Seventh streets to Ninth street, is an entire public space; it is at the intersection of Louisiana avenue and C street and a small park. As I understand the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware, the District government would pay for the paving between that entire space, of which the Government of the United States would be required to pay about one-half. So, when you reach Thirteenth street, there is another space, a small portion of which is covered by a park. From Thirteenth street to Willard's Hotel the entire space would be paid for, as I understand the amendment of the Senator from Delaware, by the District Government.

Mr. WEST. On both sides of the street.

Mr. ALLISON. And on both sides of the street; and one-half in turn again would be paid out of appropriations made from the Treasury of the United States. So it seems to me this mode is simpler than the mode proposed by the Senator from Louisiana. The amendment of the Senator from Louisiana is that the Government shall pay in front of the public parks. The public park between Seventh and Eighth streets is but a very small portion of that public space; and you will have confusion as to computations if you undertake to make so many divisions. I would prefer therefore to vote for the proposition of the Senator from Delaware, saving perhaps the provision as to the Botanic Garden; and my vote will be controlled in that respect by a question that I propose to ask the Senator from Arkansas. Aside from that, I think the fairest method is the method proposed originally by the Senator from Delaware.

Now I want to ask the Senator from Arkansas who has charge of this bill, if the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware should not be adopted, would the United States pay one-sixth of the cost of paving in front of the Botanic Garden under the bill as it stands?

Mr. DORSEY. In answer to that I wish to state the theory on which this division was made. The United States owns about one-third of the frontage of the Avenue—something less than one-third. The District authorities control the cross streets and avenues, the intersections of which amount to nearly a third—not quite. The property-holders of course, then, own something more than one-third. So we thought it would be best, the most equitable, and the fairest way to make a division from one end of the street to the other, leaving one-third to be paid by the United States, one-third by the District, and one-third by the property-owners. The paving in front of the Botanic Garden will be paid just the same as that in front of Willard's Hotel; and so of the pavement in front of all property on the Avenue.

Mr. ALLISON. Would the space in front of the Botanic Garden be assessed under this bill?

Mr. DORSEY. It would be assessed under this bill.

Mr. ALLISON. That is, it would pay one-sixth, and the property-holders on the opposite side one-sixth?

Mr. DORSEY. No; the assessment would be spread over the whole Avenue.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand, according to the frontage; but the United States owning the Botanic Garden or that space, would that be assessed at all, or would it only be that the private owners of property on the street would be assessed?

Mr. DORSEY. That would be assessed.

Mr. ALLISON. As private property?

Mr. DORSEY. Not as private property. That goes to make up the Government's one-third.

Mr. ALLISON. It is only the private property on the Avenue that is assessed, then, as I understand?

Mr. DORSEY. That is all.

Mr. ALLISON. With all due deference to the Senator from Louisiana, who has given this subject a great deal of disinterested attention, I do think we ought to adopt the original proposition of the Senator from Delaware, that the District government shall pay for the pavement in front of these spaces, and that the remainder of the property shall be assessed as provided in the bill. But I think the wording of this bill will require an assessment to be made on the line of the whole Avenue unless there shall be some amendment; that is, extending from the Capitol to Georgetown. Is that the understanding?

Mr. DORSEY. From the Capitol to Fifteenth street. The pavement only extends to Fifteenth street.

Mr. ALLISON. But the bill says "by the owners of property lying and abutting on said Pennsylvani avenue in proportion to their frontage thereon." If you mean that portion of the Avenue lying between Fifteenth street and the Capitol, say it.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, the subject is one that is not free from difficulty and is open to some embarrassment in whatever aspect it may be presented; but, in justification of the report made by the committee and the views that have been suggested by the Senator in charge of the bill, I will submit the fact that while this bill was in committee and before it had been reported to the Senate I was called upon by two gentlemen, residents of the city of Washington, who had a petition signed by a very large proportion of the owners of real estate upon the Avenue, representing a very large percentage of the entire assessment of property to be affected by the tax to be levied by this bill, and I then stated to them the views that I entertained in regard to the distribution of the tax upon the property-holders, upon the Government, and upon the District, substantially as set forth in this bill; and those gentlemen, claiming to represent the property-holders, stated to me that they were entirely satisfied, so far as they were concerned, with the assessment that was proposed by this bill to be levied as the share to be paid by the owners of private property. I believe now that, considering all the circumstances, the difficulties that surround the question, and the conflicting rights of the Government and of the property-holders themselves, and considering also the amounts that have been paid under previous assessments, the bill as reported by the committee presents the fairest and most equitable method that can be devised for paying the sum to be raised for this purpose, and I hope that the Senate will agree to the bill as reported by the committee, and reject the various amendments that have been proposed by the Senator from Delaware and others upon the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware, as modified.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DORSEY. I move to insert in section 3, line 12, after the word "Avenue," the words "including the frontage of the ground occupied by the Washington Market Company." That is to require the Washington Market Company to pay for the pavement in front of their market.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I see that the seventh section of the bill provides that the old pavement shall be removed and delivered to the authorities of the District of Columbia for such use as they may see fit to make. I understand that the District authorities used blocks in the pavement now on Pennsylvania avenue which will be of value to them. These blocks were put down originally at the expense of the property-holders on the Avenue. These blocks were their property; they paid for it originally. If there is any value in it, they ought to have the title to the blocks or other materials which were put down at their expense. It is not right to take private property, property for which value was paid, and convert it to public use without proper compensation. I have prepared an amendment which I will send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Delaware will be reported.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will say that I do not know personally whether the District authorities desired to have these materials or not. I have been told, however, that they will be of service to them in repairing other streets; and, if so, it is but fair and proper that proper compensation should be allowed to the property-holders who originally put them down.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment as follows:

Add to section 7:

Provided, That the materials in the old pavement in front of the property of each property-owner shall be valued by the commissioners, and the amount of said valuation credited to said owner and be deducted from the amount of his assessment under this act: And provided further, That the railroad company may, if they so desire, remove and retain the cobble-stone and other materials forming the bed of their said railroad.

Mr. DORSEY. I certainly hope that that amendment will not be adopted. In the first place, the provision in regard to the disposition of the old pavement was thoroughly considered by the committee. We have in this city a very large number of streets paved with wooden pavements. A great many of them are giving out and some of them are indeed already gone. It was thought by the committee that the commissioners of the District could take such of these blocks as were good and sound and use them on other streets, as E street, for example. If they were appraised and sold at auction, they would bring but a very small sum of money, and the result would be that they would be frittered away and no benefit realized to the property-holders or to the District.

As to the provision in regard to the railroad company, I desire to say a single word. This company had been, through its president, Mr. Hurt, before the committee and urged the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware very strenuously on the ground that it could not afford to stand thirty or forty thousand dollars, the sum which would be required to repave the railroad tracks and the space between the tracks. The truth is that this railroad company has got by all odds the most valuable franchise in this District or that this District can ever grant. It paid last year, as was shown by the president in a paper which he submitted to me, 13 per cent. on $900,000 capital, bonds and stock, while the actual cost of the railroad, in answer to a question propounded by myself to the president, was shown not to be over $300,000. It pays 13 per cent. on a capital three times its original cost. I am sure we do not want to grant a corporation of that sort any extraordinary privileges to which they are not entitled under the law. Their charter requires them to do this paving and keep it in order, and to pave two feet outside of their tracks. As the bill now stands, the question of the kind of pavement they are to use, the manner of laying it down, and the whole subject are referred to the commission appointed by the bill, in whose hands I hope it will be left.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I understand that when this pavement was laid down originally the property-holders paid the expense of laying the wooden pavement in front of their property. If so, every block of wood which enters into the pavement was paid for by the property-holder adjoining whose property it was placed. Therefore whatever value there may be in these blocks when removed from the pavement certainly belongs to the property-holders in justice and equity. I do not propose to take that which honestly belongs to a man without compensation. This amendment does not propose to take this material from the District authorities; it only provides that the commissioners who are to lay down this new pavement shall value these blocks and credit each property-holder with whatever value they may have. I do not know that they will value them at anything scarcely; but if there is any value in them, if they have any value, let the property-owner who originally placed them there be credited with that amount, and let the amount be deducted out of his assessment under this bill.

Now, in reference to the railroad company, I have no doubt that company obtained from Congress, or whoever granted it, a very valuable franchise; that it is worth a great deal of money to the company; still it is true that they placed a great deal of stone on the bed of their road. They placed it there at very considerable expense. They did it at their own expense, not at the expense of the Government of the United States, not at the expense of the District government; and you compel them by this act to replace those stones by some other material. The amendment that I have offered only secures to that company which placed these cobble-stones there the right to remove and retain them. They may be valuable to them in some other place. They cost them originally a considerable amount of money, I have no doubt, and they may be of use to them hereafter. They are their property. They paid for it originally. Why do we want to take it now and give it to the District government? I have no special partiality for railroad corporations. I did not help to grant this franchise originally. I have no doubt that it was unwise to grant them a franchise without proper compensation for it; but you have already granted it, and you have compelled them to pave the bed of their road with cobble-stones, and now you require them to remove them. All that my amendment does is simply to secure to the company the right to remove these stones and retain them for their own use.

Mr. DORSEY. I wish to remind the Senator from Delaware that the Senate struck out the provision in this bill requiring the railroad company to pave the space between its tracks with square blocks of stone, and it is now left to the judgment and the discretion of the commission appointed under this bill to determine how and of what material the pavement shall be made. I certainly hope that the Senate will not intervene and indicate to the commission in any manner what shall be used to pave the space between the railway tracks.

As to the wood pavement, the Senator is only partially correct in saying that the owners of property along the Avenue originally paid for it. They only paid for a part of it. They paid for half of it, and they have had the use of it for five or six years, which, I think, is a fair compensation for what they paid in 1871. It seems to me that if this old material was appraised and put up at auction and sold it would bring a very small sum, hardly worth considering by the property-holders, while if it were put into the hands of the District commissioners it could be made useful in repairing some of the worn-out streets in other parts of the city. That was the purpose of the committee in leaving the matter in the hands of the commissioners.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. SAULSBURY.]

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DORSEY. In section 6, lines 5 and 6, I move to strike out the words "left at the property assessed," and insert "published in one or more papers printed in the District of Columbia," so that the notice of the assessment will be printed in a public newspaper instead of left on the premises.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DORSEY. In line 26 of the same section I move to strike out the word "20" and insert "10," so that on default of the payment of any sum assessed the property-owners shall only be mulcted 10 per cent. instead of 20 per cent.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. I desire to call the attention of the Senator having this bill in charge to the fact that there is between Ninth and Tenth streets, on the north side of Pennsylvania avenue, a very considerable tract of pavement of concrete or asphalt that is in perfectly good condition to-day. I ask him whether or not that fact has been taken into consideration in this bill heretofore, as I have been out and have not been present during the consideration of all the amendments that have been offered?

Mr. DORSEY. In reply to my friend from Kansas, I will say that I have considered that fact. I thought it would be better to leave it entirely with this commission, who will probably want to change the grade somewhat. If they do not absolutely lay down a new pavement at that place, they will be likely to lay a new coat over that already down. There are two pieces of pavement there, and if my recollection is right one piece of it is much lower than the other. I thought it best not to make any reference to it in this bill.

Mr. WEST. I presume that now the conclusion of the Senate will be to vote affirmatively on the passage of the bill. I only wish to say in a few words why the bill will not meet my assent. In conjunction with some other Senators I have essayed to protect the owners of property on the line of this avenue from what must be considered nothing less than an extortion, and I will state why. As the bill stands, rejecting the amendment of the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] the property-holders on the line of Pennsylvania avenue between the Capitol gate and Fifteenth street will be once more subjected to a cost of $15.79 per running foot for paving in front of their property. They paid in 1871 $19 a foot. Consequently you will have over $34 per running foot assessed upon that property for paving within five years. Take Pennsylvania avenue west, from its junction at Fifteenth street to Rock Creek, and the property fronting upon that avenue has paid $4.83 per foot; so that the unfortunate property-holders between the Treasury and the Capitol are to pay $34 and the fortunate property-holders west of that are to pay less than $5. That would be a gross injustice, and certainly is not to receive my assent. Whatever I have said here with reference to protecting the rights of these people has been, if I have any interest at all, directly against my own personal interest, being somewhat concerned in a small piece of property here. The more that is charged to the District the worse I should be off. I propose that the District should in justice incur the greater proportion, and that these unfortunate property-holders should be exempted from this extortion. It would be nothing more and nothing less than extortion. It is $34 a running foot upon their property in five years, which is $30 more than other property pays in the District. The proposition is wholly unjust, and it will not meet my support.

Mr. DORSEY. I should like to ask the Senator from Louisiana a question. I ask him to state to the Senate in what manner the pavement on Pennsylvania avenue west of Fifteenth street was paid for.

Mr. WEST. It is one of those conundrums that "no fellow can find out" how it was paid for. I can only state how much the property that fronts on the street paid for it.

Mr. DORSEY. I will answer the Senator. The pavement was paid for with 3.65 bonds of the Government of the United States, and the cost was never assessed on the property.

Mr. WEST. That may be, but yet the District has to pay for those bonds eventually and the property at large is taxed to pay for them. I remind the Senator once more that under the provisions of his bill he assesses a tax of $34 on one man's property while he allows another to be assessed only four or five dollars. That is the whole of it. I endeavored to come to their rescue, and the Senator from Delaware endeavored to come to their rescue, so as to reduce this enormous extortion which is now sought to be imposed upon these people. The proposition has been voted down. I think before the Senate votes on such a proposition it ought to understand just what it is.

Mr. WHYTE. I move to strike out the words "and sixty cents" in the seventh line of the fifth section, so that the sum shall not exceed $4 per square yard. If those words are stricken out it may probably save the parties who are called upon to pay for this pavement some $42,000. The highest price that I have heard stated here for laying the best pavement is $3.90. I think therefore that $4 is an ample limit as the maximum price which shall be paid for this work.

Mr. DORSEY. I call the attention of the Senator from Maryland to the fact that $4.60 is not only for the pavement, but it is for removing the old one, for grading the street, and for all other expenses attending the work. I will call his attention further to the fact of the importance of laying down a pavement that will last for at least ten years. If a pure asphalt pavement is laid, such as Neuchâtel, Val de Travar, Trinidad, or Grahamite, it will cost at least $4 per yard. A pure asphalt pavement cannot be put down for less. Of course we could get a pavement made of ashes and gravel and coal-tar. There are such pavements which we could probably get for $3 a yard and perhaps for less, but the intention of the committee was to fix on such a sum as would warrant the putting down of the very best kind of pavement. I hope the words "sixty cents" will not be stricken out so as to reduce the limitation. The commission need not go to that figure unless it is necessary in order to get a good pavement. I have faith enough in their integrity and ability to determine what is the right sum to pay to believe that they will not go to that limit unless it is absolutely necessary.

Mr. RANDOLPH. May I ask the Senator whether this $4 or $4.60 is to include the renewal of the pavement for the next three or four years.

Mr. DORSEY. It is the custom, I understand, for those who put down a pavement to keep it in repair for a period of three years, and that expense would be included of course in the contract.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I quite agree with the Senator from Arkansas that the price fixed by the bill is quite low enough. If the experience of experts upon this subject be of avail, the limit is already low enough, taking into consideration the removal of the old pavement, the substitution of the new, and the preparation that would be necessary in order to make a thorough foundation for a new pavement.

Mr. DORSEY. I will state further—and I call the attention of the Senator from Maryland to the fact—that this limitation was added at the suggestion of the property-holders, many of whom in discussing the subject with me thought if it was left open the cost of preparation for the pavement would amount to about as much as the pavement itself. They preferred this limitation or even a higher one to be put in the bill rather than no limitation at all.

Mr. WHYTE. The reason for my offering the amendment is to be found in the fact that we have reports made to us here which ought to give us some information certainly; and I observe that the wood pavement on the Avenue cost about $2 or $2.50 a square yard. I understood from the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON,] who spoke the other day on this subject, that the pavement which confessedly was the best pavement in use in this District, the Neuchâtel pavement, cost but $3.90 a square yard. There is no grading to be done. The grading has been done already. All that is to be done is to take up the wood pavement and carry it away and use it for the purposes of fuel, to which I suppose it will be appropriated, and to lay down the new pavement. There is therefore no extra expense except to lift that pavement away and put down the other pavement, and I think a saving of $40,000 is of some importance to the people of this District.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maryland, reducing the limit of the cost from $4.60 to $4.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

Mr. BAYARD. I desire to submit to the Senate at this time an amendment which was offered in what I conceive to be a just consideration for the rights of the private property-holders along the route of this Avenue. I do not propose to repeat to the Senate what I have said on the subject or to reread the documents in my possession. The people of this District have no representatives on the floor of either House of Congress, and yet they are taxed without representation. The Avenue which it is now proposed to repave is more of a national highway than any other within the limits of the United States. It runs between the Legislative and the Executive Departments of the Government of the United States. It is traversed by a very large population of non-residents. It ought to be a handsome and well-kept Avenue for every reason. It is the most public street in the United States and probably the finest avenue in the United States. Therefore, for these local property-holders to keep this avenue in a proper condition with expensive pavements at their own cost, seems to me utterly unreasonable. If their property should be enhanced in value it is assessed according to value and pays its share of tax according to value; but to compel them to put down these luxurious pavements for the benefit of the citizens of the United States who are non-residents of the District seems to me utterly unfair in any way that it can be looked at.

I have shown the Senate by tax bills handed to me that for a pavement badly constructed, unwisely contracted for, and most extravagantly paid for by these very property-holders, they have been assessed within five years nineteen dollars and some cents per front foot. If the present bill reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia should become a law, $15 a front foot more will be added to that cost. It seems to me that the statement of such a proposition shows how unjust it is that we should subject this property to an expense of $35 and perhaps fifty cents per front foot to pave and adorn a street that is used by these property-owners only in common with so vast a body of their fellow-citizens who have nothing to do with the expense. Therefore it is that I propose to renew now the amendment which I offered in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "repair" in line 7, section 3, it is proposed to insert:

The cost of paving the intersections of all streets and avenues and all public parks lying and abutting upon said avenue to be paid out of the general revenue of the District, except the portions of such intersections lying between the tracks of the said railroad company and two feet on each side thereof, which shall be paid by the said railroad company. The cost of the said pavement lying between the Botanic Garden and a line two feet outside of the westerly side of the said railroad tracks to be paid by the United States; and, after the aforesaid deduction, the residue of the cost to be as follows.

Then follow the words in the bill:

By the owners of private property lying and abutting, &c.

Mr. WEST. Will the Senator from Delaware permit me to make a suggestion to him? He has used the expression "the westerly side of the said railroad tracks." I call his attention to the fact that Pennsylvania avenue runs nearly east and west. It should be "outside of the side of the said railroad tracks." It is not the westerly side. He intended the term "westerly" to apply to the Botanic Garden, which is on the southerly side. If he will omit the words "of the westerly side" he will accomplish what he wants.

Mr. BAYARD. I will modify my amendment by striking out the words "of the westerly side."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so modified. The question is on the amendment as modified.

The amendment was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 30, noes 9.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask, for information, if the amendment requires the intersections of the avenues and streets to be paid by the city government? If that is the case, it seems to me it is rather hard upon the city government.

Mr. DORSEY. As I understand it, it requires the District government to pave all intersections of streets and avenues; that is, two feet from the railroad track back to a line even with the curb-stone on Pennsylvania avenue.

Mr. SHERMAN. It seems to me that there is great injustice in making this pavement at the expense of the city. If there is any force in the argument of the Senator from Delaware, it certainly ought to be to reduce the cost to the city. It seems to me the Government of the United States ought to make all this road between the Treasury Department and the Capitol except such as immediately abuts or fronts on private property. There would be no hardship in doing that, because the Government of the United States undertook five years ago to make this road and made it in a very imperfect manner. To require the city government to pay for it per yard by the taxes of the people of the District, and then make the people themselves pay for the intersections, is very hard. It seems to me the Government of the United States ought to do that.

I did not intend to interfere with the passage of the bill, and will not offer any amendment. I voted for the amendment of the Senator from Delaware. To require the city government to pave all intersections must apply to the whole length of the Avenue. There are fifteen streets or more than that—at least fifteen—the ordinary width of which I suppose would be one hundred feet or more. There would be fifteen hundred feet to be paved by the city authorities. It is between a third and a quarter.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Just about a third.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I agree entirely with what the Senator from Ohio has said. I voted for the amendment of the Senator from Delaware because I thought it was better that this expense should come out of the general treasury of the District than out of the particular property-holders on the Avenue. I think that the expense of paving the intersections ought to be borne by the United States.

Mr. WEST. The whole of it?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. In front of these streets. An amendment was proposed here that the United States should pay in front of its own property, its parks, and it was voted down, as I understand.

Mr. WEST. If the Senator will permit me, the amendment as adopted requires the Government of the United States to pay $137,000, the District $120,000, and the property-holders on the Avenue the balance.

Mr. DAVIS. What amount will the property-holders have to pay?

Mr. WEST. Fifty-four thousand dollars.

Mr. SHERMAN. The property-holders of the city then have to pay $120,000 besides?

Mr. WEST. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is a very heavy tax upon the city. The city is now overburdened with debt. It seems to me it would be better that the United States should at once assume this burden rather than throw it upon the District. The District is not able to pay it. It is not in a condition to pay it. One hundred and twenty thousand dollars put by this bill upon the city government is about one-tenth of all the taxes that are laid upon the private property of the city of Washington annually. The tax levied at the rate of 1½ per cent. on the property of the city will not yield over $1,300,000, I am told, the valuation being about $85,000,000 or $90,000,000. Therefore this would be in addition to the other taxes to be imposed upon the city, a tax of one-tenth of the amount. I do not think it is just or right. I would a great deal rather that the Government of the United States should at once assume the entire expense of repaving Pennsylvania avenue except that which properly belongs to private property-holders for the portion abutting on their property. There the private persons ought to pay their portion of the tax, although even then it is very hard upon them. Persons owning property along Pennsylvania avenue have been severely taxed. They have been very much injured already by the pavement that has been laid down; and now within five years to require them to renew this tax and pay it over again is pretty severe. That expense could be borne; but when you add to that and impose upon the general property of this District private property $120,000 more, it seems to me that it is unjust.

Mr. BAYARD. My attention has been drawn by the Clerk to the fact that a portion of the amendment offered by me was not read by him. It was owing to the manner in which it was printed in the RECORD. I handed it to him in that shape. I will ask, therefore, that the remaining portion of my amendment be read. I will state to the Senate by way of explanation that it controls the fractions of this cost which are to be relatively assumed by the Government of the United States, by the government of the District, and by the private property-owners. The amendment as I had it first proposed that the Government should bear one-third, the District government one-third, and the private property-holders one-third. Upon some conversation with the senior Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN,] I have enlarged the proportion to be borne by the Government of the United States and decreased the proportion to be paid by the government of the District and private property-holders, making the Government of the United States to bear one-half and the others to bear one-fourth of the cost of this improvement each. I ask that the remaining portion of my amendment be now read. The Clerk has it.

The CHIEF CLERK. That part of the amendment which was not reported is to amend section 3 by striking out "one-third" in line 13 and inserting "one-fourth;" in line 15 by striking out "one-third" and inserting "one-half;" and in line 17 striking out "one-third" and inserting "one-fourth;" so that if amended the clause will read:

In proportion to their frontage thereon, one-fourth of the expense, after deducting the amount paid by said Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company; one-half to be paid by the United States out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; and the remaining one-fourth to be paid out of the general revenue of the District of Columbia.

Mr. LOGAN. That applies to the whole Avenue?

Mr. DORSEY. Am I to understand that the Senator from Delaware withdraws his first amendment and now proposes this instead of it?

Mr. BAYARD. O, no. I have not withdrawn my first amendment. There was a misapprehension, owing to the form in which it went to the desk. But a part of the amendment was read. The Clerk left out the last clause of it, which divides the cost of this work, and that has just been read.

Mr. SHERMAN. I call for the reading of the whole section as it will read if amended.

The CHIEF CLERK. Section 3, if amended as proposed, will read:

That the cost of laying down said pavement shall be paid for in the following proportions and manner: The Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company shall bear all of the expense for that portion of the work lying between the tracks of their road, and for a distance of two feet from the track on each side thereof, and of keeping the same in repair.

The cost of paving the intersections of all streets and avenues and all public parks lying and abutting upon said avenue to be paid out of the general revenue of the District, except the portions of such intersections lying between the tracks of the said railroad company and two feet on each side thereof, which shall be paid by the said railroad company. The cost of the said pavement lying between the Botanic Garden and a line two feet outside of the westerly side of the said railroad tracks to be paid by the United States; and, after the aforesaid deduction, the residue of the cost to be as follows: By the owners of private property lying and abutting on said Pennsylvania avenue, in proportion to their frontage thereon, one-fourth of the expense, after deducting the amount paid by said Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company; one-half to be paid by the United States out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; and the remaining one-fourth to be paid out of the general revenue of the District of Columbia from any funds in the hands of the commissioners or the treasury of said District, upon the warrants or orders of said commission, when the same shall have been passed in the Treasury Department, as in case of the disbursement of public money.

Mr. DORSEY. I did not understand that amendment at all. I observe, now that it is read with the whole section, that it throws at least three-fourths of the entire expense of the pavement on the United States.

Mr. SHERMAN. As I understand it, it yet throws upon the District government the entire expense of the intersections of the Avenue, which is at least one-fourth of the total expense of the whole road. That is unjust. Certainly the United States ought to pay one-half or one-third of the expenses of the intersections. There is no reason why the city should bear the whole of that expense and the Government of the United States no portion of it.

Mr. DORSEY. In the first instance the United States pays the entire cost of pavement from the railroad track back to the curbstone in front of all its reservations and parks. For example, in front of the Botanic Garden it pays the entire expense for two or three squares on one side of the street. In front of the little triangular spaces, where an avenue crosses Pensylvania avenue, the United States pays the entire cost on the side of the street where that triangular piece is, and then in addition to that it pays one-half of the remaining part. It strikes me it is drawing upon the United States Treasury to rather a dangerous point.

Mr. MERRIMON. I beg to say a word in justice to myself and likewise in justice to the committee. I am very sure that I am far from desiring to do any human being on Pennsylvania avenue the slightest injustice. The committee found that to repave that avenue is absolutely necessary. Whether it will cost much or little, some one is bound to bear that burden. Their effort and the effort of the subcommittee of the committee was to ascertain, as nearly as they could, how the burden ought to be borne by the three classes, to wit: first, by the Government of the United States; secondly, by the owners of property along the Avenue; and, thirdly, by the city of Washington. They could adopt no rule, except one arbitrary in its character, but I think they honestly endeavored to see how they could make the levy operate as equitably as possible. In doing so they came to the conclusion that the Government of the United States ought to pay one-third of the gross cost; the people who own property along the Avenue, one-third; and the city of Washington, one-third, after deducting the cost of the railroad track along the center of the Avenue. I myself do not possess a great deal of information upon this subject, but the subcommittee were at a great deal of trouble to ascertain what would be right and equitable. I learn that they consulted with a good many of the property-owners to get their views, and they thought, so far as they were consulted at all, that the proposition named in the bill as reported was reasonable and just and satisfactory.

Very much has been said in this body about the injustice that is to be done the property-owners along the Avenue. I do not see their liability in the light that some Senators do. The great bulk of property-holders along Pennsylvania avenue are engaged in some sort of business or other, and they have an advantage which is superior, and greatly superior, to the advantages enjoyed by any other of the business people of the District of Columbia or the city of Washington. There is more travel upon that street, more passengers go over it, and there are more circumstances that attract people there than upon any other street in the District. They have advantages in the point of trade, growing out of the number of persons who pass over this street, whose attention is attracted there, more than double or treble that of any other portion of the city.

Mr. BAYARD. I suggest to the Senator from North Carolina that, if that is true, that makes their property more valuable; but as it becomes more valuable it is assessed at higher rates and they pay higher general taxes upon it.

Mr. MERRIMON. I was going to remark upon that. That is very true. That is right and just. But I mean to say that they have more advantages, over and above the increased value of their property and the increased assessment, than any other people in the District. I think that they realize the fact themselves. The committee were of opinion that, in view of that additional advantage, it was right and just, inasmuch as their traffic went over the street more than other people's, that they should pay this increased price. It is true it is burdensome. I regret that; but it is of no use to discuss it. That is a fact out of the case entirely. The evil is here. It must be met; the street must be repaved, and the three classes I have mentioned are bound to do it. The simple question is, what is the reasonable proportion among those three?

Mr. RANDOLPH. But they have already paid within the last five years for the pavement some eighteen or twenty dollars a foot.

Mr. MERRIMON. That was their misfortune, and they must bear the misfortune like other people.

Mr. RANDOLPH. It was owing to mismanagement entirely that it was done.

Mr. MERRIMON. I do not think the people of the United States are to be blamed at all. I do not think the people of the city of Washington generally are to be blamed about it. It was a calamity, and this calamity must be borne by these three classes; and according to the best information that the committee after a great deal of labor could obtain, they thought that this arrangement, although arbitrary, was as equitable and fair a one as the committee could hit upon. I do not believe, if the Senate work here six months, that they will come to one that is more equitable. I consented to tax the people along the line one-third of the gross cost, because they have an advantage that no other people of the District of Columbia or of the city of Washington have. They have an advantage over and above the allowed increased valuation of their property and over and above the increased taxes they pay upon that account. It was for this reason that the committee consented to the proportion and arrangement provided in the bill. It was for this reason that I yielded my assent. I am as far from wanting to do the people along the Avenue injustice as any one can be, but I could not see it in any other light than that which I have endeavored to bring to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. LOGAN. From the indications I presume the Government will have to bear all this burden. A short time ago I thought the Senate had the impression that fair dealing toward the tax-payers outside of the District of Columbia should at least be shown in this bill. I do not expect to convince any man, but if I can have the attention of the Senate for five minutes I can satisfy any one that the amendment moved by the Senator from Delaware is an imposition upon the United States Government fourfold more than any that has heretofore been advocated on this floor. Let us consider the proposition in the bill. It is to pave Pennsylvania avenue and allow the Government to pay one-third of all the expense, the city government one-third, and the property-holders one-third. What is the proposition now partially adopted by the Senate? I have not time to show by a map or drawing or anything of that kind, but take Pennsylvania avenue as it runs. On the left we have the Botanic Garden, a short distance farther on we have a park on the right, and so on. The proposition which the Senator from Delaware now proposes requires the United States to pay all of the assessment in front of the Botanic Garden up to the railroad line. What else? It then requires the Government to pay one-half of the amount taxed against property on the other side of the railroad line. That is the proposition of the Senator from Delaware.

I supposed, when we discussed it before, the proposition as we then had it was for the Government to pay one-half in front of the Botanic Garden; and I suggested that the Government be exempt from its third on the other side. He said that was fair, and the Senate partially consented to that; but now he proposes an amendment, not to exempt the Government from the one-third on the other side, but that the Government shall pay the whole on one side and one-half on the other side, instead of one-third, as originally proposed in his amendment. And the Senate seem disposed to take that as being a proper way to dispose of this question, when I think there was no man in the Senate when the proposition was first made this morning who advocated it; the Senator from Delaware himself would not do it.

Let us go a little further. Now the proposition is that Pennsylvania avenue shall be paved. How? That the Government shall pay all the expense of paving in front of its own ground up to the railroad; then it shall pay one-half of all the balance. What do the property-holders pay? Not one dime for the pavement in front of the Government ground, according to this amendment, but one-fourth of the pavement in front of their own property where it is not along Government property, and that the District itself shall pay for the cross streets and one-fourth of the tax on the private property, not one-fourth of the tax on the General Government. I ask any man to tell me on what principle of honesty or justice a proposition of this kind can be advocated?

If, Mr. President, the Senate are determined to saddle this upon the Government, upon their constituents, let them make a smooth thing of it, have no mystery about it, say that the Government shall pay it all except a mere pittance, for that is the meaning of this. Why not say so if that is what you mean? Why not say that the Government shall pay for paving in front of all these hotels and all these large stores? That is what you mean by the amendment; and why not say so? I ask any Senator here if he believes it is honest and just for his constituents to pay for the paving in front of Willard's Hotel, and the National Hotel, and the Metropolitan Hotel, establishments that perhaps make more money than any other parties in this city? You are willing that your constituents shall be assessed to pay what? First, the whole paving in front of your own property, and then one-half in front of these hotels, and then the owners shall pay but one-fourth and the city shall pay the balance. If there has ever been such a proposition passed either in Congress or in a State legislature or in a city council in the United States of America, I should like some man to show it. There never has been so unjust a proposition agreed to anywhere in reference to the paving of streets in any city in the United States.

I know it is not a very comfortable thing to fight against spending the people's money for the pleasure of the District of Columbia. I have done it very often. I have not succeeded very well in doing it. I do not expect to succeed now. But I tell you, Mr. President, when the people of the United States do once understand that outside of the city of Washington taxes are imposed on them which ought to be imposed on the citizens here, aside from the taxes imposed on Government property, they will want to know the reason why. What is the reason? I cannot tell. I do not understand it. No man can tell. No Senator can explain the reason for it. Of course it is not private interest. No man would insinuate that it is private interest. Of course it cannot be that. What is it? It is a disposition to deal with public funds, not as the agent of the people, not as the representative of the people, but merely to deal with them as a man who receives charities would deal with the charities again.

I understand the principle upon which the paving of streets is done to be this: In front of my house I pay a certain portion of the expense of the paving; the city pays the balance. The property-holders along the side of the streets are assessed first in the opening of the street for the right of way; then when you come to pave the street the property-owners are assessed for that, on either side, a certain amount, and the general fund of the city goes to pay the balance. That is the rule everywhere. If any man can show me a reason for making the Government of the United States pay for paving streets in front of private property, where they own nothing whatever, and pay one-half of it, then I will give it up.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Does the Government of the United States pay anything into the District treasury for taxes on its property?

Mr. LOGAN. The Government of the United States has its property in the city of Washington assessed at $60,000,000 for taxing purposes.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Does it pay taxes on that?

Mr. LOGAN. It did do it.

Mr. WEST. When?

Mr. LOGAN. Not long ago.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I did not know it.

Mr. LOGAN. I beg pardon. In the estimates that were made here before the Senate agreed to pay the portion of Government property, the property of the Government was estimated at $60,000,000, and the proportion was fixed on that ratio of assessment right here in the Senate.

Mr. MERRIMON. It was expressly provided in the act of last year or the year before that the Government should be taxed in proportion to its property to pay the interest on the 3.65 bonds.

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir. I remember it well, and other Senators do who paid attention, that the estimate was $60,000,000; and after paying taxes on that enormous amount, more than all the property cost, you then come forward and make it pay one-half of all that which is incumbent on the city and its citizens to pay besides.

Mr. DORSEY. That is not so.

Mr. SARGENT. The Government never has paid any money in the sense of taxes in the District. The law in reference to the 3.65 bonds pledged the Government to pay its proportion; and it has been used as matter of argument that the property of the United States in the District was worth $60,000,000, and that in making our appropriations we ought to keep that in view, and appropriate a sum which would be equal to the taxation on it; but it never has been done. If it could be done, if a fair rate could be paid by the Government annually, equivalent to that taxation, then we ought not to tax the Government to pay for this paving at all, and it should all be assessed upon the District treasury.

Mr. BURNSIDE. That was the point I had in view.

Mr. LOGAN. I will answer that proposition, I do not care by what name you call it. You may say it is not assessed as taxes and paid into the District treasury; but, call it by what name you please, under your law that gives the right to assess this property at $60,000,000 in making your estimate for appropriations, it is a tax, and by no other name can it be known. The same principle applies in reference to customs duties. They are not commonly known as taxes, and yet they are taxes, and should be known as taxes.

Mr. MERRIMON. Will the Senator from Illinois let me read the clause of the statute to which I referred a moment ago?

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. MERRIMON. In the act approved June 20, 1874, creating the present commissioners as the government of the District of Columbia, it is provided in section 7:

> And the faith of the United States is hereby pledged that the United States will, by proper proportional appropriations as contemplated in this act and by causing to be levied upon the property within said District such taxes as will provide the revenues necessary to pay the interest on said bonds as the same may become due and payable, create a sinking fund for the payment of the principal thereof at maturity.

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly; that is the law making the Government pay its proportion in accordance with the valuation of its property, as I said; and it was valued at $60,000,000. It is a tax, and it is nothing less, nothing more. Now I want to ask a few questions of the Senate before they propose to make their constituents pay this amount for the paving of this avenue other than what is just according to the ratio that we ought to pay for paving in front of our own property.

For the benefit of the District of Columbia you passed a law but a few days ago assuming the debt of this District and paying the interest on it, amounting to $15,000,000 for improvements in this city. The improvements in this city in the last few years, under the direction of the Congress of the United States, have cost the people of this country very nearly $30,000,000. This is a tax upon the people outside of the District; it is a tax upon the whole people of this country. You have a law here in this District that exempts personal property from taxation. The banker may have his millions in his vaults and he is not taxed on that property. This was done, as I understand, as an inducement for what? To induce rich men to come and live in the District of Columbia where they would not have their private assets taxed; their bonds and their moneys are all exempt here under your laws. Wealth is exempt from taxation! With these exemptions on the citizens of the District of Columbia, you as legislators propose now that you will exempt them further by imposing these burdens upon your own people; and that is called honest legislation!

I said this morning and I say now that I am willing that the Government shall be assessed to pay its proportionate share for pavement in front of every foot of ground it owns, and around its buildings, around its gardens, and all its public grounds. Let it pay that which is just and proper, the same as if it was an individual owner. I ask any man to tell me the difference. A corporation in law is considered an individual. What is the difference between the assessment on property belonging to the Government and the assessment on property belonging to an individual? Will some man explain the difference? One belongs to an individual, and he has a right to deed or assign it, and the other belongs to the Government. The difference is that the individual pays the tax on his own property and the people pay the tax on the property of the Government. But when you come to the just rule of levying assessments, there is no difference; the rule is and ought to be the same.

I enter my solemn protest against this robbery of the Government of the United States. You may call it what you please; but it is the Congress of the United States putting its hands in the public Treasury and dealing out the funds without respect to the interests of the people or the Government. These funds ought to be reserved for other purposes. In other words, this is a legal robbery of the Treasury of the United States for the benefit of the District of Columbia. That is exactly what it is—a legal robbery of the Treasury for the benefit of individuals who reside within the confines of this District. Whenever you impose one dollar's tax on the Treasury of the United States more than you do on the city and the property-owners on account of the property that they own, every cent over and above that which you impose on them is just that much money robbed and wrenched from the pockets of the people outside of this District for the benefit of these people who pay no tax on personal property.

I am willing to see the bill pass as it came from the committee. That made the Government pay one-third, the property-owners one-third, and the District one-third. That is in accordance with some rule, some principle, some justice, and some equity. But when you make the Goverment pay it all, or nearly all—all in front of its own property and one-half in front of everybody else's property—you then rob the Government of that one-half in front of everybody else's property.

This amendment is the stepping-stone to the paving of all the streets in this city finally by the Government of the United States. It is to be a precedent for payment by the Government for paving all the avenues of this city out of the Treasury finally. I think the Treasury has paid about enough for this city. Senators talk about frauds in pavements, about frauds and rings here that rob the Government. How did those men rob the Government? They robbed the Government by taking contracts and defrauding the contracts, by violating the law, by failing to do that which they were required by law to do. They robbed the Government in that way. What is the difference? The difference is that you legalize robbery by an act of Congress. You take it out of the Treasury by an act of Congress; and they take it out by violating the law that you pass by frauds in their contracts. The only difference is that one is punishable and the other is not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Delaware to move a reconsideration of the amendment for the purpose of perfecting it.

Mr. BAYARD. Only that justice should be done. The amendment, owing to the imperfect form in which it was handed to the Clerk, was not read in full; and although the Senate by a very decided vote adopted the first part, it would be incomplete unless the whole were adopted. I therefore suggest that the amendment be passed upon as an entirety; that the two portions be read together, which was not the case when I first offered it. I state that to the Senate frankly that they may understand the precise state of the case.

Mr. SARGENT. I suppose there will be no objection to the reconsideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator moves to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment as modified by the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. DORSEY. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is perfectly impossible to finish this bill to-night. There are several other amendments to be proposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill; and it was ordered to be printed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and seven minutes spent in executive session, the doors were re-opened; and (at four o'clock and fifty-seven minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, April 17, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of Saturday last was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say to the House this morning, in reference to the order of business for to-day, that the pending matter of privilege which was up on Saturday last will come up this morning as the unfinished business after the reading of the Journal, under the rules; but it can only continue under that privilege until the hour of two o'clock, at which time the right of the Committee for the District of Columbia, this being the third Monday of the month, will attach to control the House until the adjournment to-day, unless the House now makes some other arrangement by which that committee may enjoy its right of being heard at another time.

Mr. BUCKNER. I desire to say in reference to the reports from the Committee for the District of Columbia that we are very anxious to report a tax bill for this District, and under the circumstances I will ask unanimous consent that the Committee for the District of Columbia shall have this day week at the same hour to the exclusion of everything else; and if the House will agree to that proposition I will give up our right to-day; if not, I shall be compelled to ask that there be a session to-night.

Mr. HENDEE. I would like to inquire how much time the committee who have in charge the Kilbourn matter will require to-day.

Mr. HURD. It is impossible to state; I think the discussion may be finished by three o'clock; but then I shall wish to make the final argument.

Mr. HENDEE. I think that if the discussion on the question of privilege could be disposed of by three and a half o'clock the Committee for the District of Columbia might perhaps conclude its business within a reasonable time before adjournment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair in that connection, with the leave of the gentleman from Vermont, would suggest to the House that judging from the list of gentlemen who desire to be heard upon the question of privilege, of whom there are twelve, it would be almost impossible for the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. HURD,] who has charge of this matter of privilege, to call the previous question before three o'clock, as he has already announced, and if thereafter an hour be consumed under the privilege allowed him under his motion, then it may be safe to assume that it will take another hour to do the voting on the question, which would bring it up to five o'clock.

Mr. HENDEE. I would inquire whether, if the House by unanimous consent or otherwise shall assign to the Committee for the District of Columbia Monday next, it is possible for the House by any proceeding or motion or any pending special order to take that day from us?

The SPEAKER. If the House assigns Monday next to the committee in a proper manner beyond question the right of the committee will attach as firmly and irrevocably as to-day, and the Chair would regard it to be his duty to maintain in that respect the faith of the House.

Mr. HENDEE. With that understanding I would have no objection to giving to-day to the consideration of the question of privilege.

Mr. STEVENSON. As a member of the Committee for the District of Columbia I desire to say that there are a number of bills of importance to be reported by that committee, especially the bill suggested by the chairman, [Mr. BUCKNER,] relative to taxation in this District. I do not agree with the chairman that to-night would be a proper time for considering such an important measure. I am perfectly willing as a member of that committee to give way for to-day, with the understanding that one week from to-day, at the same hour, the committee shall have the same privilege for the consideration of this business that it has to-day.

The SPEAKER. That is the motion pending.

Mr. STEVENSON. The chairman suggested to-night.

Mr. BUCKNER. I suggested a session to-night, if we could not get consent to the other arrangement.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon postponing till Monday next at two o'clock the consideration of business to be reported from the Committee for the District of Columbia, with the same privilege that the committee would have to-day under the rule.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

HABEAS CORPUS—HALLET KILBOURN.

The SPEAKER. The House will now resume the consideration of the unfinished business of Saturday, being the question of privilege reported from the Committee on the Judiciary.

The preamble and resolution reported from the Committee on the Judiciary were as follows:

Whereas one Hallet Kilbourn was subpœnaed to testify in a certain investigation ordered by this House before a committee duly authorized to send for persons and papers; and whereas during his examination as a witness the said Hallet Kilbourn refused to answer certain questions propounded to him as such witness by said committee, and to produce certain books and papers which he was ordered by said committee to produce; and whereas for such refusal the House of Representatives has adjudged the said Hallet Kilbourn to be in contempt of its authority and has ordered him into custody until he shall purge himself of said contempt and answer the questions as propounded and produce the papers and books ordered to be produced; and whereas said committee is still engaged in the investigation which it was ordered to make by the House, and is unable to complete the same because of the contumacy of the witness; and whereas the said Hallet Kilbourn is now in execution by the legal process of this House as aforesaid; and whereas the chief justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia has issued a writ of habeas corpus to the Sergeant-at-Arms of this House to produce before the said judge the body of the said Kilbourn: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to make a careful return of said writ, setting out the causes of the detention of said Kilbourn, and to retain the custody of his body, and not to produce it before the said judge or court without further order of this House.

The substitute proposed by Mr. LYNDE, on behalf of the minority of the Committee on the Judiciary, for the preamble and resolution was as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be, and he is hereby, directed to make careful return to the writ of habeas corpus in the case of Hallet Kilbourn that the prisoner is duly held by authority of the House of Representatives to answer in proceedings against him for contempt, and that the Sergeant-at-Arms take with him the body of said Kilbourn before said court when making such return as required by law.

The amendment moved by Mr. JENKS to the original resolution was as follows:

After the word "Kilbourn," where it last occurs in the resolution, insert the following words:

And the irregularity of issuing the writ without a previous order nisi, or rule to show cause.

Mr. McCRARY. I was not a member of the subcommittee that considered this subject under the appointment of the Committee on the Judiciary; but I was present in the committee when the report of the subcommittee was discussed, and its discussion suggested to my mind— [After a pause.] I am advised that on account of other engagements of my colleague upon the Committee on the Judiciary, the gentleman from New York, [Mr. LORD,] it is desirable that he should speak first upon this question. I will therefore very cheerfully give way and follow him.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LORD] will proceed, after which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. McCRARY] will be recognized.

Mr. LORD addressed the House, but had not concluded his remarks, when was communicated to the House by Mr. GORHAM, their Secretary, informing the House that the Senate was sitting in its Chamber and ready to proceed with the trial of the impeachment of William W. Belknap, and that seats were provided for the accommodation of the members of the House.

HABEAS CORPUS—HALLET KILBOURN.

Mr. LORD resumed his argument, but before concluding said: I understand that the Senate is ready to proceed with the impeachment trial. I therefore ask that I may have ten or fifteen minutes more to conclude my remarks after we return from the Senate.

Mr. COX. I move that the gentleman from New York have leave to conclude his remarks hereafter.

There was no objection.

Mr. McCRARY obtained the floor.

IMPEACHMENT OF W. W. BELKNAP.

Mr. COX. I rise to a question of order. The question is suggested by members around me whether the House as a body should go to the Senate in the impeachment trial, the Senate having advised the House officially that it is ready to proceed with the trial.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. SPRINGER.) The Chair will entertain any motion on that subject.

Mr. KELLEY. I would ask the gentleman from New York whether he has consulted the precedents as to what the usage has been?

Mr. COX. I remember very well that in the case of Judge Humphreys the House in a body went over to the Senate. I do not know how it was in other cases. I believe there are precedents on both sides.

Mr. KELLEY. I participated in two impeachment trials, and in each case the House went over for the first sitting.

Mr. KNOTT. I understand the practice as settled by the precedents to be this: That after issue is joined and a day fixed for the trial, the House upon that day proceeds in a body to attend at the bar of the Senate.

Mr. KELLEY. Such was the usage on the two occasions to which I have referred; the case of Judge Humphreys and the case of Andrew Johnson.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to ask the chairman of the Judiciary Committee if he did not notice that in the message received from the Senate they notified us that they have provided seats for members of the House. If that has been done, does it not seem to be required of us that we should accompany the managers?

Mr. LORD. I request the reading of the resolution of the Senate.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, April 17, 1876.

Ordered, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that the Senate is sitting in its Chamber and ready to proceed with the trial of the impeachment of William W. Belknap, and that seats are provided for the accommodation of the members.

Mr. LORD. Allow me to say that in an interview with Judge ED-

MUNDS, the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate, he stated that the Senate had determined to invite the House to come over to-day. This seems to be changing the rule, which, as has been stated by the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, was to go over upon the trial. For some reason the Senate has seen fit to change that rule and extend this invitation, and therefore I suggest that the managers at once take their places in the Senate Chamber, and that the House, headed by the Speaker, shall go over in response to the invitation of the Senate, seats having been prepared at considerable trouble, and as it will require considerable trouble hereafter we may as well go over to-day as at any other time. When the argument is made to the plea of jurisdiction, which I suppose is the argument first to be made, then all the members can leave who please, or the House can leave in a body when it pleases; but I suggest that, inasmuch as the Senate, with a knowledge of its own rules, has seen fit to extend this invitation to the House on this day, the House should go over in a body, headed by the Speaker; and I make that motion.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that I have consulted the precedents in this matter. In the Blount trial the House did not attend except on one occasion. It was represented entirely by the managers. On the trial of President Johnson, the Journal of the Senate sitting as a court of impeachment reads in this way:

The managers on the part of the House of Representatives attended and took their seats:

Then subsequently there is this entry:

The House of Representatives, in Committee of the Whole, preceded by the Chairman of the committee and attended by the Clerk and the Speaker, entered and took the seats provided for them.

It therefore seems to me that it would be most in pursuance of precedent and most in accordance with respect to the Senate and to the House itself that the House should this morning resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of attending the trial, and should, headed by the Chairman of the committee and accompanied by the Speaker and the Clerk, proceed to the Senate accordingly. Hereafter it will be in the power of the House to determine, if it shall see fit, that it will proceed with its legislative business without attending the entire trial, and be represented there by the managers only, or on the other hand that it will attend the entire trial if it thinks that preferable. I will move now that the House of Representatives at one o'clock precisely resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, and as such committee attend the trial of the Ex-Secretary of War in the Senate Chamber, accompanied by the Clerk and the Speaker.

Mr. LORD. I accept that in lieu of my motion.

Mr. HOAR. On that motion I propose to call the previous question; but I will first hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY.]

Mr. KELLEY. I desire to say a word or two in connection with this matter. It is not a point at all material, but in connection with the remarks that dropped from the gentleman from New York, [Mr. LORD,] I desire to say that on the two occasions to which I have referred this morning the House of its own proper motion attended its managers to the Senate Chamber, arrangements having been made for the accommodation of members. It seemed to the House then fitting that they should attend their managers at least for the opening of the trial. If I remember aright, in the earlier case, which I think occurred in 1862, the House took a recess of one hour that it might do that, and business was resumed at the end of the hour. The sense of the House appeared to be at that time that, as it preferred the articles of impeachment and designated its managers, it should attend in person those managers at least at the opening of the trial, and I would prefer going in that way than to going as a body, having no interest in the trial, but by reason of its dignity, having been invited by the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I have here the Journal of the Senate sitting as a court of impeachment, and the record of the Senate on the day when the answers of the President were filed, which is what is expected to occur to-day in the case of the late Secretary of War:

MONDAY, March 23, 1868.

At one o'clock p. m. the Chief Justice of the United States entered the Senate Chamber, escorted, &c.

The Sergeant-at-Arms opened the court by proclamation.

The managers of impeachment on the part of the House of Representatives appeared at the door, and their presence was announced by the Sergeant-at-Arms.

The CHIEF JUSTICE. The managers will take the seats assigned to them by the Senate.

The managers accordingly took the seats provided for them in the area of the Senate to the left of the presiding officer.

The counsel for the President appeared and took the seats assigned to them.

The Sergeant-at-Arms announced the presence of the House of Representatives, and the Committee of the Whole House, headed by Mr. E. B. Washburne, of Illinois, chairman of the Committee of the Whole, and the Clerk of the House, entered.

The chairman and members were conducted to the seats assigned to them.

A later day's record shows the fact in like manner, except that it records that the House was accompanied by the Speaker as well as the Clerk.

Mr. COX. I suggest that we ought to have some understanding for the resumption of business at the end of this proceeding in the Senate, either a motion for a recess or that the House shall resume business at some fixed time.

Mr. HOAR. The Committee of the Whole will return, and the House will at once resume business.

Mr. GARFIELD. The committee of course must return, and the chairman will report.

Mr. COX. But there should be some fixed time.

Mr. GARFIELD. There cannot be any fixed time, as we do not know when the proceedings of the court of impeachment will terminate.

The question was taken on Mr. HOAR's motion, and it was agreed to.

Mr. KELLEY. Do I understand that the action of the House is equivalent to an adjournment of to-day's session, or would it be in order to move that a recess be taken for an hour?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands this to be simply equivalent to a continuance of the session of the House in Committee of the Whole for the performance of a specific duty. The House is not adjourned, it is not in recess, but simply in Committee of the Whole for the performance of a specific duty which takes it out of the Hall of the House. When it returns to this Hall, having performed that specific duty, it will proceed with such business as properly comes before it.

Mr. KELLEY. Had we not better fix some time?

Mr. GARFIELD. You cannot do that.

Mr. RANDALL. We cannot fix any time for resuming business in this Hall until we know how much time will be required in the Senate. If we could know that in advance, then we could fix the time for resuming business in this Hall.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] will please take the chair in Committee of the Whole. The Committee of the Whole, preceded by its chairman and accompanied by the Speaker and the Clerk of this House, will follow the managers of the House to the Senate Chamber.

Accordingly (at one o'clock p. m.) the House, as in Committee of the Whole, preceded by its chairman, Mr. RANDALL, and accompanied by the Speaker and Clerk, followed the managers of the House to the Senate Chamber.

[For proceedings while absent from the Hall of the House see Senate proceedings.]

At one o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m. the Committee of the Whole returned to the Hall of the House.

The Speaker having resumed the chair,

Mr. RANDALL made the following report:

Mr. Speaker, the House, as in Committee of the Whole, pursuant to order, accompanied the managers on the part of the House to the Senate to be present at the opening of the impeachment trial of William W. Belknap, late Secretary of War.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President, by Mr. GRANT, his Private Secretary, informed the House that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 111) granting a pension to David J. Garrett;

An act (H. R. No. 356) concerning cases in bankruptcy commenced in the supreme court of the several Territories prior to the 22d day of June, 1874, and now undetermined therein;

An act (H. R. No. 610) granting a pension to Seth A. Homestead;

An act (H. R. No. 2143) for the sale of the arsenal and lot at Stonington, Connecticut;

An act (H. R. No. 2450) to provide for a deficiency in the Printing Bureau of the Treasury Department, and for the issue of silver coin of the United States in place of fractional currency;

An act (H. R. No. 2482) for the relief of Charles W. Mackey, late first lieutenant of the Tenth Regiment Pennsylvania Reserve Volunteer Corps;

An act (H. R. No. 2655) to amend section 1044 of the Revised Statutes relating to limitations in criminal cases;

An act (H. R. No. 2800) to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay judgments provided for in an act approved February 15, 1876, entitled "An act providing for the payment of judgments rendered under section 11 of chapter 459 of the laws of the first session of the Forty-third Congress; and

An act (H. R. No. 2934) to provide for the expenses of admission of foreign goods to the centennial exhibition at Philadelphia.

HABEAS CORPUS—HALLET KILBOURN.

The SPEAKER. The House will now resume the consideration of the preamble and resolution reported from the Committee on the Judiciary concerning the habeas corpus in the case of Hallet Kilbourn. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MCCRARY] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MCCRARY. I was about to say, when interrupted, that the discussion of this subject in the Committee on the Judiciary suggested to my mind such grave and difficult questions as to make it my duty, as I thought, to reserve for the time being my own conclusions upon them and give to them such personal examination as I might be able to do; and, although I have not been able to devote as much time and care to the investigation of the subject as I should have desired, yet I have reached the conclusion that the safe and proper course for the House to pursue is to adopt the report of the minority of the Committee on the Judiciary.

It will be observed by gentlemen who have looked into the subject that, when we are asked to refuse to send before the court issuing the writ the body of this prisoner, we are asked to do what no legislative body in this country has ever done and what no legislative body in England has done for more than one hundred and fifty years. We are asked to do this, too, against the liberty of the citizen. If the subject presents difficulties, if the question is surrounded by doubts, I think it is our duty, as it would be the duty of a court of justice, to solve those difficulties and those doubts in favor of liberty.

Now, it seems to me that the real question in this case is the one which has received the least consideration. What is the case of Hallet Kilbourn as disclosed by his petition presented to the court? In brief, it is this: He sets out the whole record fairly and fully of the proceedings of this House in the investigation in the course of which he was called as a witness. He does this as the basis of the allegation, which he makes the foundation of his application, that the House of Representatives has no jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the inquiry in the course of which his imprisonment was ordered.

Now, sir, I am not going to stop here to discuss the question whether the House of Representatives has jurisdiction over that subject-matter or not. I know, sir, that there is much that may be said on either side of that question; but it is not for the House now to consider it. The question which this case presents, and which I wish to call to the attention of this House, is this: whether in any case where a citizen is imprisoned by order of one of the Houses of Congress the judiciary of the country upon a petition for a writ of habeas corpus may inquire whether that House of Congress has jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the proceeding in which the imprisonment was ordered? And if the House will stop to consider the importance of this question as settling, at least in a large degree, the law of the House upon this subject for all future time, it will be seen I think that this step ought not to be taken unless we are very sure that it is right.

It may be, sir, that no outrage has been committed against Hallet Kilbourn. It may be that this House has jurisdiction of the subject-matter of what is known as the real-estate pool investigation. It may be that the questions propounded to him were lawfully propounded, and that the House has a right to compel the answers to them. But we are establishing a precedent for all cases; and the extent of the precedent (if we adopt the report of the majority of the committee) is just this: that when a House of Congress shall lawfully or unlawfully, constitutionally or unconstitutionally, seize and imprison a citizen of the United States, there is no remedy for that citizen. This is the precedent we are asked to establish; for, let it not be forgotten, the position of the majority of the Committee on the Judiciary is that the courts have in no case a right to inquire whether the House has exceeded its powers in ordering the arrest and imprisonment. It follows inevitably that this doctrine would deny the benefits of the writ of habeas corpus to a citizen wrongfully, illegally, arbitrarily imprisoned by order of the House. His petition would be answered by the return that he is imprisoned by order of the House of Representatives, and that would be an end of the controversy.

Do gentlemen say it is not to be presumed that either House of Congress will ever wrongfully imprison anybody? But, sir, that argument begs the whole question. It may be just as well answered that it is not to be presumed that any court of justice upon whom Congress in its wisdom shall confer jurisdiction in cases of habeas corpus will ever refuse to return to the jurisdiction and control of the House a person properly held in a proceeding in which we have jurisdiction. We have a right to put extreme cases for the purpose of testing the soundness of the principle upon which we are proceeding; and, sir, I say that if the doctrine of the majority report is the correct doctrine, namely, that the House is the final judge as to the extent of its own jurisdiction and powers, then in every case where the House may act unjustly and arbitrarily, in violation of the Constitution, in the very teeth of the Bill of Rights, there is no remedy for the citizen. Sir, I should hesitate long before consenting to such a doctrine as that.

I had occasion to say a few words in opposition to the proposition to deliver over this prisoner to be tried upon an indictment before a court in the District of Columbia. I think that the action of the House upon that question was right. That, however, was a very different question from the one now before us. That was not a petition of the citizen himself to be released upon a writ of habeas corpus; that was not a proceeding based upon an allegation that this House had no jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the inquiry. On the contrary, its very foundation was that the House had jurisdiction and that this witness had failed to answer a proper question in a proper inquiry and was liable to be indicted and tried under the laws of the land therefor. That case presented simply the question whether instead of holding him and requiring him to answer we should turn him over to the court to be indicted and punished for the same act. I said, sir, in the course of that debate that in my judgment the decision of the House holding Mr. Kilbourn to be in contempt was final and not subject to review. So far as the question before the House at that time was concerned, that, I think, was a correct proposition. But I am satisfied upon more mature consideration that I stated the doctrine more broadly than I ought to have done; for, sir, if I understand the law concerning habeas corpus, the court which has the jurisdiction to issue the writ and to try the case may in all cases inquire as to the jurisdiction of the court or the officer that has ordered the commitment and imprisonment of the prisoner.

I think, sir, that the very authorities which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HURD] cited in his speech upon this subject will bear me out in this position, that the court may inquire as to the jurisdiction of the tribunal that has committed the prisoner. The gentleman read from Hurd on Habeas Corpus, page 38, as follows:

It is a rule essential to the efficient administration of justice that, where a court is vested with jurisdiction over the subject-matter upon which it assumes to act and regularly obtains jurisdiction of the person, it becomes its right and duty to determine every question which may arise in the cause without interference from any tribunal.

But, sir, it has no right to proceed unless it has "jurisdiction over the subject-matter upon which it assumes to act."

And again, the gentleman read from the same authority, as follows:

The right of punishment for contempts by summary conviction is inherent in all courts of justice and essential to their protection and existence. A commitment under such conviction is a commitment in execution, and the judgment of conviction is not subject to review in any other court, unless specially authorized by statute. It cannot be attacked under the writ of habeas corpus—

Does the authority stop there? No, sir.

It cannot be attacked under the writ of habeas corpus except for such defects as render the proceedings void.

And if the court which has ordered imprisonment had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the inquiry, then its proceedings are void.

Again, sir, my friend reads from the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, in Kearney's case, (7 Wheaton, 44,) as follows:

The Supreme Court, in Kearney's case, after quoting from Mr. Justice Blackstone, says:

So that it is most manifest from the whole reasoning of the court in this case that a writ of habeas corpus was not deemed a proper remedy where a party was committed for a contempt by a court of competent jurisdiction, and that if granted the court could not inquire into the sufficiency of the cause of commitment.

From which it is clear that if the party was committed by a court not of competent jurisdiction the writ is an appropriate remedy.

And in all the authorities this very clear distinction will be found, that the inquiry may be made, not into the manner of exercising jurisdiction, not as to the propriety or impropriety of a particular question which may be put to a witness, but as to the jurisdiction of the court over the subject-matter of the proceeding, and where that is wanting, where it is made to appear to the court which issues the writ that there is no jurisdiction over the subject-matter, then the writ may issue and the prisoner may be discharged.

But we are told, sir, the House is the final judge of its own jurisdiction, and that no court can inquire as to whether the House has exceeded its jurisdiction. Let us see if that be true. This House has not unlimited power. The Constitution nowhere in words confers any power upon the House to arrest or imprison a citizen. It is only by implication we get any power of this kind at all. We have it as the necessary result of the power to legislate, of the power to make rules, of the power to punish or expel a member, of the power to impeach a civil officer of the Government of the United States; but we have it for no other purpose. Our power then, sir, is limited, and it is limited to a well-defined class of cases. And shall it be said that we of our own motion may go outside of any and all these powers, drag a citizen here, compel him to disclose his private business and his private affairs in an inquiry which we have no right to institute, which we have no right to carry on, over which we have no jurisdiction; that we may imprison him at our pleasure; and in such a proceeding as that the great writ of habeas corpus can afford him no remedy and no relief? Why, sir, if both Houses of Congress unite to pass a law and the Executive gives it his sanction so it becomes a statute of the United States, in form at least, yet by all the decisions of the courts of this country and by common consent the judiciary of this land is clothed with the power of inquiring whether the whole legislative department and the executive department have gone beyond the powers conferred by the Constitution of the United States in passing that law which may affect only rights of property. The courts have authority to annul your statute when your whole legislative department and the executive department have united to pass it; and yet are we to be told that a single branch of Congress, deriving its authority from the same Constitution, has the right to make an order by which a citizen may be deprived of his liberty; and, when it does, that there is no power in the judiciary to inquire whether that branch of Congress has gone beyond its jurisdiction?

Sir, by the logic of the committee's report we are led to the absurdity of saying that what both branches of Congress and the Executive in a matter affecting only the rights of property have no right to do one branch may do in a matter affecting the liberty of the citizen. Why, Mr. Speaker, even the Parliament of Great Britain—and nobody claims the Congress of the United States has the unlimited powers conferred upon Parliament—even the Parliament of Great Britain is subject to have its jurisdiction inquired into by the courts of that country in cases of this character. I wish to call the attention of the House to the decision of Lord Ellenborough, which is very long and very elaborate, of which I can only read a very brief extract touching on this point. It is the case of Burdett vs. Abbott, to be found in 14 East's Reports. I read from page 148.

Now to what extent it may be warrantable to inquire into the cause of commitment, it is not necessary to pronounce; the commitment must always be by a court of competent jurisdiction; and the competence of the House of Commons to commit for a contempt and breach of privilege cannot be questioned. A competence to commit for all matters and in all cases has never been asserted or pretended to on the part of either House of Parliament. The House of Commons does not pretend to a general criminal jurisdiction. But if the judges before whom those applications were made on writs of habeas corpus had felt that the houses had no pretense of power to commit, or had seen upon the face of the returns that they had exercised it in those cases extravagantly and beyond all bounds of reason and law, would they not have been wanting in their duty if they had not looked into the causes of commitment stated, and would it have been an excuse for a most imperfect discharge of their important duty upon the writ of habeas corpus to say that, though they remanded the prisoner, he had his remedy by action, if the case were that he ought never to have been committed at all? Is not the value of the intermediate liberty of the subject of such importance that, where his case falls within the remedy of the writ of habeas corpus, the judges were bound at common law to give the party the benefit of his immediate liberation rather than to turn him over to a distant remedy by action against a party who may die before he can obtain his judgment or, if he live, may become insolvent.

It seems, therefore, that even the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Great Britain may be inquired into by the courts of that country in cases of that sort.

Let me say here that the effect of the rule proposed to be established by the adoption of the report of the majority necessarily leads us to the assertion of the doctrine that in no possible case when either House of Congress commits a person for contempt can any court of the country inquire as to our jurisdiction! Because it would be a mockery to say to the court, "You may inquire into this question, and if you choose to decide we may hold this man, all right; but, if you decide the other way, we will disregard your mandate." That would be saying to the court, "You have jurisdiction to remand, but not to release." If the court has the right to decide that question, then the body of the prisoner must be taken into the presence of the court and surrendered to its jurisdiction, so that it may decide either one way or the other. That is inevitable.

But, sir, I say that the authorities in this country sustain the doctrine that the court applied to for the writ of habeas corpus may inquire as to the jurisdiction of the body that has committed the prisoner. There are two cases, Mr. Speaker, which have been decided by the supreme courts of two of the States of this Union, which involve the right of the judiciary of a State to inquire as to the jurisdiction of the legislative body of the State which has committed a witness for refusing to answer questions. In both of those cases the supreme courts of those States decided squarely and distinctly that the courts of the State had the right to inquire as to the jurisdiction of the legislative body. One of these cases was decided by the supreme court of Wisconsin, and the decision was read by my friend from that State, [Mr. LYNDE.] The other was decided by the supreme court of Massachusetts, and I desire to read briefly from the opinion of the court in that case, delivered by Mr. Justice Hoar.

Now let me premise, Mr. Speaker, that the question whether the courts of a State may inquire into the jurisdiction of one of the houses of the Legislature—State Legislature—in ordering a commitment is the same question exactly as that which is now before the House. The Legislature of a State has the inherent power to commit for contempt in all cases which come within the jurisdiction of the Legislature. I do not know, sir, but what in the State Legislatures the power is greater, because the range of legislation is much broader in State Legislatures than it is in Congress. But, at all events, the Houses of Congress have no greater power to commit for contempt than the houses of our State Legislatures. And yet in the only two cases in all this Union where the question has been raised as to the power of the courts to inquire into the jurisdiction of a legislative body of the State, it has been decided that the courts have that power. I read from Judge Hoar's opinion, 14 Gray, 240:

The house of representatives is not the final judge of its own powers and privileges in cases in which the rights and liberties of the subject are concerned, but the legality of its action may be examined and determined by this court; that the house is not the Legislature, but only a part of it, and is therefore subject in its action to the laws, in common with all other bodies, officers, and tribunals within the Commonwealth. Especially is it competent and proper for this court to consider whether its proceedings are in conformity with the constitution and laws, because, living under a written constitution, no branch or department of the government is supreme, and it is the province and duty of the judicial department to determine in cases regularly brought before them whether the powers of any branch of the government, and even those of the Legislature in the enactment of laws, have been exercised in conformity with the constitution, and if they have not been, to treat their acts as null and void.

Mr. HURD. I desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa one question. Did not the learned judge who delivered that opinion, when a member of the House in the last session of Congress, advocate and vote for a resolution in the Irwin case precisely the same in effect as that submitted by the majority of the Judiciary Committee of this House?

Mr. MCCRARY. I believe there was no vote taken on the proposition to which the gentleman refers; or, at least if there was, there was no record of it. But I am aware that the gentleman who delivered that opinion in the course of the debate and in a very brief speech made the observation that, if he were sitting as a court trying a man for a murder and another court should send a writ of habeas corpus to take the prisoner out of his hands, he would say he had other use for that prisoner just at that time. And in that I entirely agree with him. But, sir, that would not be a proper answer in all cases. It will not do to say that no other return shall ever be required of the House of Representatives, when it has imprisoned a citizen and when he has applied by writ of habeas corpus for a trial, than that the House has other use for that citizen at that time.

Sir, I apprehend that what the gentleman from Massachusetts, formerly a judge of the supreme court of that State, meant was this: That, assuming the jurisdiction of the House, assuming that it had a case in which it had a right to proceed, and that it was in the midst of its proceeding, it would have a right to make answer that it had use for the body of the prisoner and would not return him. I do not suppose that anybody believes that the writ of habeas corpus can be employed to take a prisoner out of the hands of a court which has jurisdiction over him when it is engaged in trying him. But, sir, I lay down the broad proposition that when a prisoner is confined in jail—and these are the cases which are covered by the statutes of the United States—when a prisoner is confined in jail he has a right to apply to any court that is authorized by law to issue a writ of habeas corpus, and to allege that the authority which put him in jail had no power to put him in jail; and when he makes that allegation the court has the right to have the prisoner brought before it and to inquire into that question.

Now, sir, the case stands thus: No legislative body in the country has ever refused to return the body upon a writ of habeas corpus. The Parliament of Great Britain has not for more than a century refused to do it. In the only two cases which have been decided by the supreme courts of the States on this question, it has been held that the courts might inquire into the question of jurisdiction. I think, sir, that, to say the very least of it, this raises a question of very great doubt, of very great difficulty. It presents a case where, if we decide to hold this prisoner, we decide against all the authorities, against every precedent in this country and against every one in England for more than one hundred years. And I think it presents a case where even if gentlemen have doubts in their minds they ought to resolve those doubts in favor of the liberty of the subject.

The supreme court of the State of New York have held the doctrine for which I contend in some cases to which I beg to call the attention of the House. In the case of the People vs. Cassels, in the fifth volume of Hill's Reports, in an opinion delivered by no less an authority than Judge Bronson, I find this doctrine laid down on page 168:

But the prisoner had an undoubted right to show that the committing magistrate acted without authority; and this is so notwithstanding the commitment recites the existence of the necessary facts to give jurisdiction.

And I call attention to the following from the same authority:

No court or officer can acquire jurisdiction by the mere assertion of it—

And what is it, Mr. Speaker, that this House now claims? What is it that is claimed by the majority of the committee except simply this, that this House can acquire jurisdiction over the body and the liberties of Hallet Kilbourn by the mere assertion of it? Nor is it the case of Hallet Kilbourn alone that we are trying. We are trying the great, broad question whether there is any authority or power in the judiciary of this country to review the action of the House when it asserts that it has jurisdiction to imprison a citizen.

No court or officer can acquire jurisdiction by the mere assertion of it, or by falsely alleging the existence of facts on which jurisdiction depends.

The court there, upon an inquiry and investigation, decided that the commitment was not made upon the trial of a case which the committing court had a right to try.

Again, sir, the same doctrine is laid down in the case of The People ex relatione Mitchell vs. The Sheriff of New York, in the second volume of Barbour's Reports, the syllabus in which is as follows:

On a habeas corpus in a case of commitment for a contempt, only two questions can be examined; first, as to the jurisdiction of the court or officer making the commitment; and secondly, as to the form of the commitment. If the jurisdiction is undoubted and the commitment is sufficient in form, and contains the cause of the alleged contempt plainly charged therein, the prisoner must be remanded and the writ discharged. The court has no power to inquire into the justice or propriety of the commitment.

Now, sir, the case of Ableman vs. Booth has been cited as authority for the refusal in this case to return the body. That case has no application whatever to this. The decision was simply this and nothing more: that a State court shall not be permitted to take the body of a prisoner out of the hands of a court of the United States, and that in such a case the marshal shall simply return the fact that he is held under process issued by a court of the United States and that shall be sufficient.

There was much difference of opinion, Mr. Speaker, in this country at the time that decision was rendered as to whether it was good law or not, and I think there will be no disposition, at least I think there ought to be no disposition, to extend the principle there laid down any further than the case required.

Here, sir, we have precisely the case which the statute contemplates, for the statute of the United States which Congress has enacted declares that this writ may issue whenever a prisoner is held in jail under or by color of the authority of the United States. That this prisoner is so held I think will be admitted by every gentleman upon this floor. Giving to the case of Ableman vs. Booth the full scope that any gentleman can claim for it, it does not reach or touch the question now before the House. This prisoner is held under color of the authority of the United States, and the statute expressly provides that when a prisoner is so held he is entitled to the writ and that his body shall be returned to the court.

The effect of the decision in the case of Ableman vs. Booth has been thoroughly considered in the opinion of the late Attorney-General Stanbery, and his opinion on the subject is recorded in the twelfth volume of the Opinions of the Attorneys-General. I will read a sentence or two from page 273:

The construction I have applied to the language used by the Supreme Court, confining the right to refuse production of the body to the case of a prisoner held under judicial process of the United States, is further fortified by authority in England and in the United States.

The English courts have admitted, as one exception to the duty of producing the body on habeas corpus, a return that the party was imprisoned "for treason or felony, plainly expressed," or was "convict or in execution by legal process."

This exception was admitted under an implication arising upon a clause in the first section of the act of Charles II. (Hurd on Habeas Corpus, page 254.)

Mr. Hurd adds: "This, however, is not only an exception to the general rule, but should be regarded as a particular indulgence; for if the officer had a right to stand upon his construction of the warrant of commitment there would have been but little gained by the act of 31 Charles II."

Nor can I understand the language of the court in Ableman vs. Booth, in reference to the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, as applicable to any other jurisdiction over persons restrained of their liberty than that which depends upon jurisdiction acquired under process of the courts of the United States.

The late Attorney-General, who was one of the ablest of our Attorneys-General, has declared that the decision in the case of Ableman vs. Booth goes no further than to hold that where the prisoner is held under process issued by a court of the United States, a State court shall not be permitted to release him, and that this exception to the rule requiring the production of the body with the return can be carried no further.

My friend from Ohio [Mr. HURD] has also read from the decision of Judge McLean in the case of Robinson, quoting an extract from his opinion with a citation from Hurd on Habeas Corpus, page 347. I read the extract from his remarks as published in the RECORD:

That the commissioner had jurisdiction in the case is clear.

That is the very first sentence which the court lays down; and upon that the court proceeds to hold that the prisoner must be remanded. But the court inquired into the jurisdiction; the court decided upon the jurisdiction; the court declared the jurisdiction to be clear. The gentleman read also from a decision of the circuit court of the United States for the State of New York, from which he quoted as follows:

The recorder, therefore, had jurisdiction of the case, and authority to proceed in the inquiry whether the person so seized and brought before him doth, under the laws of the State from which he fled, owe service or labor to the person claiming him.

There, again, the first inquiry of the court was as to the authority to commit the prisoner, the jurisdiction of the subject-matter. The court decided that the recorder had jurisdiction, and upon so deciding proceeded to hold that the prisoner must be remanded.

Now it will not do to say, as several gentlemen have said, that we are surrendering the powers and functions of this House to a single judge of the supreme court of the District of Columbia. Why, sir, if there is anything wrong in the conferring of this jurisdiction upon that court, it does not lie in the mouth of Congress to complain. The law of Congress confers that jurisdiction upon the court; Congress by law has given to this court the authority to issue this writ. If it is not the proper court to exercise that authority, though I believe it is the highest court known to the laws of the United States except the Supreme Court of the United States itself, or as high as any other, yet if it is not the proper court to exercise that authority, let the law be so amended as to send all cases of this kind to the Supreme Court of the United States itself. But as it is the law, you can no more complain of the exercise of this jurisdiction by this court than you could complain of its exercise by the Supreme Court of the United States if it had been applied to for this writ.

Furthermore, if Congress does not mean that a writ shall issue under the statute for the release of a prisoner held by either House of Congress, let it be so provided in the law which we make, that it may be understood. As the law now stands it declares that the body shall be returned with the writ.

I do not desire to detain the House longer. I will simply repeat that even conceding that doubts can be raised as to the correctness of the course proposed by the minority of the committee, yet I think it is a safe course, it is in accordance with all the precedents, it is leaning, if at all, in the direction of the liberty of the citizen.

I know the importance of maintaining the right and power of the House to compel disclosures in its investigations in all proper cases. But I am not willing to believe that the judiciary of this country or the judiciary of this District will put itself in the way of this House in any legitimate and legal and constitutional inquiry. I am not willing to proceed here upon the assumption that the court which we have ourselves authorized to exercise this authority, to issue this writ, to possess this jurisdiction, is going to abuse its power and put itself in the way of Congress, so as to prevent the development or the disclosure of any facts which either House of Congress has a right to bring to light.

But if any court does so the House has the power of impeachment. And here is another reason why I think this law should be construed as requiring us to give up the body of this prisoner. If the court abuses its power, if the court tramples upon our right, we have power over that court. But if this body possesses this power, and if this body tramples upon the rights of the court, if it tramples upon the rights of the private citizen, there is no power anywhere to deal with us in a similar way.

I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. FRYE,] my colleague on the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. SPRINGER.) The gentleman has five minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. FRYE. I do not desire to occupy the floor for that length of time.

Mr. MCCRARY. I have occupied more time than I intended. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague from Maine have further time.

Mr. FRYE. I do not know that I care about it now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] will be recognized after the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTON,] now recognized by the Chair, has concluded his remarks.

Mr. HUNTON. I will yield my time to the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. HOOKER.]

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, the question presented to the House is certainly one of very grave interest. And in saying what I have to say upon this subject I approach the discussion of it with no feeling at all so far as the person to whom it applies is concerned. I think it is important to the House in investigating and deciding this question to do it deliberately and carefully, with a desire to conform to what is the established law of the land. It is a matter of total indiffference as to who the person is to whom the proceeding refers.

I start out first with the proposition that the power exists in the House to do either one of two things, as it may see fit: The power exists in the House to surrender with the return the body of the prisoner or not to surrender it, as it thinks proper. In this particular case the principle has been invoked by the gentlemen who have discussed it upon the other side in favor of the minority report, based upon the sanctity of the writ of habeas corpus and the sanctity of the personal right of the citizen to be protected against unlawful imprisonment. I say that this is the idea which has been current in all the speeches which have been made on this subject. If I thought that the House in agreeing to the report of the majority of this committee were infringing upon the personal right of the citizen, and violating thereby his constitutional right to have his liberty protected, I should be very averse to giving my sanction to the report of the majority. But if the House possesses not the power to determine the question of contempt, and not so much to punish for an offense committed as to exercise such power of restraint over a recusant witness as shall bring him to obey the order of the House—I say if the House possesses not this power, and if it does not possess it because of the constitutional right of the citizen to his liberty, then this House, acting as a quasi court, and every court in the land would be powerless to conduct its own proceedings.

I will not go back to the question whether the judgment of the House was correct or not in reference to the question which was propounded to the witness, because that would be to go behind the judgment of the House, which is of record, and to open up again the question whether or not the House, through its agent the committee, had acted correctly in propounding the question to the witness. The judgment of the House that the party has been in contempt and the penalty which is imposed in the shape of imprisonment by way of restraint constitute an adjudication of the House upon that question which you cannot go behind.

At first, Mr. Speaker, this recusant witness, who had refused to answer the question propounded by the House, attempted to avoid and evade the penalty which the House had pronounced upon him for the purpose of compelling an answer by a resort to an indictment found in the criminal court of the District of Columbia. That indictment was presented here, and the capias of the court was issued upon that indictment, demanding the custody of the body of the party for the purpose of being tried for the offense under the statute. It was insisted then that under sections 102, 103, and 104 of the statutes in the revised code the power of the House no longer existed, because the Congress of the United States under the revision last made of the statutes had determined that the party could be and should be proceeded against for a misdemeanor in the criminal court of the District of Columbia, and that it was the duty of the Speaker of this House to certify the refusal of the witness to testify to that court. The answer which was very properly made is this: that that statute made it a misdemeanor for a party to refuse to answer, and the whole offense in its entirety was consummated, and was, as the French say, un fait accompli whenever the party had refused to answer. If he had relented on the very next day and had proposed to give his answer to the House, as the House was entitled to require of him, he would still have been amenable to the criminal courts for a misdemeanor committed in refusing to answer the question propounded by the House under the law. I say therefore that, when that proceeding was resorted to for the purpose of taking this party out of the possession of the House and its officers, the answer was very properly made, that the statute was simply cumulative, that it did not rob the House of its power to punish for contempt; and so the House decided.

Thus we have two adjudications of the House. First, it was decided that the party was guilty of contempt. Secondly, we have a solemn adjudication of the House, on this indictment being found and this demand being made, that the party could not be surrendered, because he was then undergoing the execution of the judgment which the House had pronounced against him; precisely as would be answered if one court were trying a party for a murder and the court of an adjoining district should issue its writ of habeas corpus demanding possession of the body of the party under his allegation in his sworn petition that he was illegally held in custody.

Will it be contended by gentlemen on the opposite side of this Chamber that this writ can in no instance be refused? Will it be contended, in the case which was put by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR,] that that party should be surrendered to another and a different and a foreign jurisdiction? Why, sir, to do so would be in the very face of the habeas corpus act itself, which limits the cases to which the writ is applicable, and denies it in a case in which a party is being tried by a court of competent jurisdiction or is being punished under authority of such a court. If that doctrine were true it would apply to the case of every man imprisoned in the penitentiary, who might sue out a writ of habeas corpus. Who would say that in those cases the writ would lie?

But, sir, there is a different and a higher reason why the writ does not lie in a case in which a court is inflicting punishment for contempt. It has been said by the distinguished gentleman [Mr. McCRARY] who has just closed his address to the House—an address of marked ability—that you always test the validity of a principle by the supposition of an extreme case. Permit me, then, to test the position which he has assumed by supposing that upon the trial of a party for murder by a court of competent jurisdiction a single witness, having the sole knowledge of the transaction, refuses to testify to his knowledge of the offense. He is committed for contempt and then sues out his writ of habeas corpus, alleging that he is improperly in custody. Should that court therefore stop in the exercise of the only power it has to compel the giving of evidence in respect to an offense against the laws of the land? Should it allow another and a different and a foreign jurisdiction to determine whether that court was properly exercising its authority to punish for contempt?

Sir, if the position assumed be true, what a strange spectacle would be presented here! The subpœnas of this House are now running throughout the States and Territories of this broad Union, and wherever a witness refuses to obey such subpœna your writ of attachment or arrest is issued against the party so refusing. Is it true that when any such party in contempt of the House is in custody of your officer every court from Maine to California may stop the witness while in transitu to this House for the purpose of being examined, in order to ascertain by hearing upon habeas corpus whether the judgment of the House that the party is in contempt of its authority has been properly pronounced?

I am not aware, sir, that there has been a more pointed adjudication made with regard to this question of the power of the House to punish for contempt than was made by that distinguished jurist of Pennsylvania, Judge Black, who is now one of the counsel of the very party who is asking by the writ of habeas corpus a surrender of this prisoner. It was asserted by gentlemen that there was no case in which the court had undertaken to decide that the question as to whether the body assuming to punish for contempt possessed the power and jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the question could be adduced. I say that I have found nowhere any opinion so clear, so concise, and so pointed as the opinion of Judge Black rendered in Passmore Williamson's case, to be found in 26 Pennsylvania State Reports, which has been already cited in the progress of this debate. That opinion is expressed, as he usually does, in those plain, simple, forcible Anglo-Saxon terms which carry conviction whenever he speaks now, or whenever he uttered his adjudication in the tribunals over which he presided with such distinguished ability. I ask the attention of the House while I read an extract from the decision in that case, and which is so especially applicable to the very point which the House has now before it. In that case Judge Black says:

> It is most especially necessary that convictions for contempt in one court shall be final, conclusive, and free from examination by other courts on habeas corpus. If the law was not so our judicial system would break to pieces in a month. Courts totally unconnected with each other would be coming in constant collision. The inferior courts would revise all the decisions of the judges placed over and above them. A party unwilling to be tried in this court need only defy our authority, and, if we commit him, to take out his habeas corpus before an inferior judge of his own choosing, and if that judge is of opinion that we ought not to try him, there is an end of the case.
> This doctrine is so plainly against the reason of the thing that it would be wonderful indeed if any authority for it could be found in the books. There is none, except the overruled decision of Mr. Justice Spencer, of New York, already referred to, and some efforts of the same kind to control the other court, made by Sir Edward Coke in the King's Bench, which are now universally admitted to have been illegal as well as rude and intemperate.

And in conclusion, speaking upon the very question presented by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. McCRARY,] who last addressed the House, he uses this language:

> On the other hand we have all the English judges and all our own declaring their want of power to interfere with or control one another in this way. I content myself by simply referring to some of the books in which it is established that the conviction of contempt is a separate proceeding and is conclusive of every fact—

I call the attention of the House particularly to this language—> and is conclusive of every fact which might have been urged on the trial for contempt, and, among others, want of jurisdiction to try the cause in which the contempt was committed.

Thus you have the positive and emphatic adjudication of this distinguished jurist, that the point made by the gentleman who last addressed the House is not well taken, in his estimation at all events, namely, that the courts do not possess the power under writ of habeas corpus when a party is brought before them to pass upon the question of jurisdiction. Sir, if that were the case, your Speaker might be taken from his chair in this body by violence, and the parties who did it—if the writ of habeas corpus would lie in a case like that—would defy the authority of the House to punish them; and any other disorder, or any other contempt, or any other violence committed toward a member might be committed in your presence and yet, according to the theory of gentlemen who have spoken upon this floor in favor of the minority report, you would be powerless to punish for contempt manifested in open, broad daylight and before your eyes. The House would then be powerless to punish, and any tribunal might inquire whether it had the power to do so or not. I say such a doctrine would be utterly subversive of the organization of the House, and would at once put a fatal stop upon any effort you might make to investigate any question.

My attention has been called to still further passages in this same opinion of Judge Black, to which I beg very briefly to refer:

> But the counsel of the petitioner go behind the proceedings in which he was convicted, and argue that the sentence for contempt is void because the court had no jurisdiction of a certain other matter—

Mark you this language—

> because the court had no jurisdiction of a certain other matter which it was investigating or attempting to investigate when the contempt was committed. We find a judgment against him in one case, and he complains about another in which there is no judgment. He is suffering for an offense against the United States, and he says he is innocent of any wrong to a particular individual. He is conclusively adjudged guilty of contempt, and he tells us that the court has no jurisdiction to restore Mr. Wheeler's slaves.
> It must be remembered that contempt of court is a specific criminal offense. It is punished sometimes by indictment and sometimes in a summary proceeding, as it was in this case. In either mode of trial the adjudication against the offender is a conviction and the commitment in consequence is execution. (7 Wheaton, page 38.) This is well settled, and I believe has never been doubted. Certainly the learned counsel for the petitioner have not denied it. The contempt may be connected with some particular cause, or it may consist in misbehavior which has a tendency to obstruct the administration of justice generally. When it is committed in a pending cause the proceeding to punish it is a proceeding by itself. It is not entitled in the cause pending, but on the criminal side. (Wallace, page 134.) The record of a conviction for contempt is as distinct from the matter under investigation when it was committed as an indictment for perjury is from the cause in which the false oath was taken. Can a person convicted of perjury ask us to deliver him from the penitentiary on showing that the oath on which the perjury is assigned was taken in a cause of which the court had no jurisdiction?

And further, this judge proceeds to remark:

> Would any judge in the Commonwealth listen to such a reason for treating the sentence as void? If, instead of swearing falsely, he refuses to be sworn at all, and he is convicted, not of perjury but of contempt, the same rule applies, and with a force precisely equal.

So that even as to that point it will be seen that this decision emphatically lays down the rule that in a case of that sort, which was simply a proceeding in court, the party cannot escape because of his allegation that the tribunal which assumes to punish for contempt possessed not the jurisdiction of the subject-matter about which it was considering when the contempt was committed.

I think, however, Mr. Speaker, that there is another and a higher and a better reason than this for the rule of law, which I undertake to assert is uniform upon the subject, that every court and every parliamentary body, sitting as a quasi court, must have, and the Parliament of England always has had—the power to protect its own organization precisely as every court has the right to protect its own order and its own authority in the conduct of the cases before it. And if this principle is true with reference to different tribunals, possessed of equal power, a fortiori it is true with regard to the highest court in the land, sitting and making investigations with regard to affairs of public concernment, in which the interests of the whole people are involved in bringing to light the facts of the case.

Why, sir, it was said by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] on Saturday that in the case of Irwin, which occurred in the last Congress, there was proof aliunde that Irwin had some knowledge on the subject about which the committee were investigating him. Are we to be told that the rule with regard to a witness and the power of the House to coerce a witness is to depend on the power of the House to prove that the party possesses knowledge? In other words, the argument is that you must convict Kilbourn of possessing knowledge. The gentleman from Ohio made the argument that no one said, either by affidavit or say-so, that Kilbourn possessed information which would lead to impeachment. The idea therefore is, convict the witness of possessing the knowledge, establish that in the first place, and then, forsooth, you have a right to demand the witness's knowledge. But then you do not want it. If there is proof aliunde by which you can establish what you want Hallet Kilbourn to show, then Hallet Kilbourn is not necessary. It is because the information which the House desires and the House demands is probably within the breast of this particular witness in regard to the facts inquired of that it is important the power of the House should be exercised to coerce an answer.

But I proceed to the consideration of this question so far as it affects parliamentary bodies; and I must do so with brevity, because of the fact that I have but little time in which to address the House. I desire to call attention very briefly to the principle of law which is laid down upon this subject (Jefferson's Manual included) in Barclay's Digest, where it is condensed and very easy of reference, and then to the principle laid down by Mr. Cushing as it affects parliamentary bodies. On page 62 of the Manual this position will be found to be assumed, and the authorities quoted in favor of it:

> If an offense be committed by a member in the house of which the house has cognizance, it is an infringement of their right for any person or court to take notice of it till the house has punished the offender or referred him to a due course. (Lex Parliamentari, page 63.)

And if I can have the attention of the distinguished gentleman who last addressed the House, I will say that the true distinction which runs through all these cases is that when a contempt has been committed before this House, the House primarily and of right, and as essential to its very existence, possesses the power to punish. And the right of any other court or any other tribunal to inquire into the fact as to whether the party has committed an offense may occur after the punishment has been inflicted by the House but not before; and this, too, not only with reference to a member, but with reference to a witness before the tribunal.

I refer to page 231 of Barclay's Digest, in which this principle is laid down:

The failure or refusal of a witness to appear, or refusal to testify, is a breach of the privileges of the House, and has been punished by commitment to the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms, by expulsion from the floor as a reporter, and by commitment to the common jail of the District of Columbia.—Journals, 1, 12, pages 276, 277; 2, 33, pages 315, 318; 2, 34, pages 269, 277, 281, 384, 567; 1, 35, pages 371, 387—389, 535—539.

So it will be observed, Mr. Speaker, in answer to the argument of the gentlemen on the opposite side, that this is an effort on the part of one House under the parliamentary law to do that which it is asserted both Houses could not do under a law regularly passed and approved by the Executive. But the gentlemen forget that there is already upon the statute-book a law passed by both Houses and approved by the Executive clothing each House with the power to punish; which was unnecessary, because, as I will presently show, this power inherently exists in parliamentary bodies as a very necessity of their life, and without which they would be in a more terrible state of collapse than the distinguished judge in Pennsylvania said the courts would be when he used those strong, powerful, terse, old Anglo-Saxon words and said, if the rule is held that the court possesses not the power to punish for contempt, then you would not only have collisions between courts, but your judicial system would break to pieces in a month.

We have now in the Revised Statutes, sections 101, 103, and 104, these provisions:

SEC. 101. The President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, or a chairman of a Committee of the Whole, or of any committee of either House of Congress, is empowered to administer oaths to witnesses in any case under their examination.

SEC. 103. No witness is privileged to refuse to testify to any fact, or to produce any paper respecting which he shall be examined by either House of Congress, or by any committee of either House, upon the ground that his testimony to such fact or his production of such paper may tend to disgrace him or otherwise render him infamous.

SEC. 104. Whenever a witness summoned as mentioned in section 102 fails to testify, and the facts are reported to either House, the President of the Senate or the Speaker of the House, as the case may be, shall certify the fact under the seal of the Senate or House to the district attorney for the District of Columbia, whose duty it shall be to bring the matter before the grand jury for their action.

So that, if there was any need to strengthen the parliamentary power of the House by an act of Congress regularly passed through both branches of the national Legislature and approved by the Executive, it stands upon our statute-book. But, as I have said, this act, this defining the duties of witnesses and the power of the House, it is claimed to clothe a subordinate court of the District, a creature of Congress, breathed into existence by our own statute, which to-morrow you have the power at once to do away with—that that court, inferior to the power that created it, with reference to a question of contempt, can supersede the power of this House itself, or of the other House of Congress, and determine questions of contempt upon evidence not occurring in its presence, but simply on the oath of the witness.

I proceed now briefly to refer to the authorities in Cushing on Parliamentary Law, and first I will refer to page 246. He has referred to the privileges of this kind which accrue and belong to each branch of a legislative assembly, and there are enumerated some thirteen in number. Preceding that statement he says:

The privileges of this kind which belong to each branch of a legislative assembly may be classified and arranged under the following heads:

And the thirteenth specification is as follows:

To be free from all interference of the other co-ordinate branch and of the executive and judiciary departments in its proceedings on any matter depending before it.

This is the summing up of the doctrine as to the power of either House to proceed for contempt against a recusant witness.

He says:

One of the modes by which a legislative assembly obtains a knowledge of the facts upon which its orders, resolutions, or acts are founded is by the examination of witnesses, who, when a proper occasion occurs, may be summoned and examined, as in the ordinary courts of justice.

In section 645 the same principle is laid down. He lays down the law upon the subject as to how far this power of investigation and decision is exclusive and final in the House itself.

In that section he says:

This jurisdiction being conferred for the purpose of enabling a legislative assembly to discharge its peculiar functions in a free, independent, and intelligent manner is in its very nature original, exclusive, and final.

Final how? Final because no other tribunal can investigate the question whether it properly discharges its duties. To allow it to do so would stop all investigations in every legislative body.

Again, sir, he gives a reason for it:

It is exclusive; otherwise the objects for which it is conferred, namely, the freedom and independence of the assembly, would fail of their attainment, inasmuch as a portion of the means by which the assembly is enabled to perform these functions would be restrained by the concurrent or appellate jurisdiction of some other tribunal.

Again he says in section 649:

The jurisdiction of a legislative assembly acting judicially is necessarily final; that is, its proceedings cannot be revised nor its judgment suspended by any other court or tribunal. Thus when a member is expelled no other court can revise the doings of the assembly and re-instate such member in his place. So if a legislative body commit a member or other person as a punishment for a contempt or other offense, no other court or tribunal can discharge the prisoner on the ground of his having been illegally committed, provided the cause of the commitment appear with the requisite certainty. In cases of this kind, therefore, it should clearly appear in the warrant that the assembly has jurisdiction of the matter for which the commitment takes place. But the particular facts of the case upon which the assembly has predicated its judgment should not be stated. If they are they will be subject to revision.

Thus clearly implying that, where the return was that the party was adjudged guilty of contempt without assigning the particular cause, there was no power of revision or discharge.

Sir, I might read from a number of other sections of the same authority, but I will allude to one other portion only, in which he is treating, not on the question of the privileges of legislative assemblies, but upon the questions of the privileges of the question of State assemblies in the case of recusant witnesses.

In section 967 I find these words:

In regard to the phraseology of the questions which are put to a witness and the language of the answers returned by him while under examination, it is to be observed, on the one hand, that the witness is in the protection of the House; that no question ought to be permitted to be put to him which is couched in disrespectful terms and that no insulting or abusive language or conduct toward him ought to be allowed; and any member, counsel, or party who in examining a witness should insult or abuse him would subject himself to the censure and punishment of the House. On the other hand, it is the duty of a witness to answer every question in a respectful manner, both toward the House and toward the member, party, or counsel by whom he is examined. If a witness, forgetful of his duty in this respect, gives his answer in an indecorous or disrespectful manner the usual course is for the Speaker to reprimand him immediately and to caution him to be more careful for the future. If the offense is clearly manifest the Speaker will proceed at once to reprimand and caution the offender; if not, the witness may be directed to withdraw, and the sense and direction of the House may then be taken upon the subject.

I wish to call the attention of the House now to what has been laid down upon the subject of the difference between public documents and private papers, because it has been said that this is a drag-net thrown over this witness with the design and intention of compelling him to produce the papers. I will state the rule of law as to the distinction rather than weary the House with reading it. The rule is that where it is a public document which the House desires to obtain it is produced by an order of the House, and where it is a private paper in the possession of a private citizen who is a witness its production is obtained in precisely the same way that the subpœna duces tecum of any court obtains it, by compelling the party to produce the paper.

Now it has been asserted that this is an effort to compel this party to testify with regard to his private affairs, which would not be allowed in a court of justice, unless some foundation was laid for it. But in a court of justice that rule applies to parties litigant, who have no right to look at the papers of their adversaries, except upon an affidavit regularly filed, stating their relevancy to the subject-matter then pending before the court for adjudication. But does that rule apply to a legislative body making an investigation for the public benefit and the public weal? Does it apply to a witness before a committee of this House, and must you necessarily, before a subpœna can issue with authority to bring the person with the papers, make out a case against him by the affidavit either of your Speaker or of a member of this body? Surely not. Such a rule was never contended for until now; such an idea has never prevailed in any adjudication which has been made in reference to this subject. This author, proceeding to discuss this subject, says:

The difference between proceedings in Parliament and the ordinary courts has been established upon grounds of public policy, and is considered to be fundamentally essential to the efficiency of a parliamentary inquiry. But while the law of Parliament thus demands the disclosure of the evidence, it recognizes to the fullest extent the principle upon which the witness is excused from making such disclosure in the ordinary courts of justice, and protects him against the consequences which might otherwise result from his testimony; the rule of Parliament being—the rule of Parliament being that any evidence given in either house cannot be used against the witness in any other place without the permission of the house, which is never granted, provided the witness testifies truly. The parliamentary law on the subject is declared embodied in the following resolutions of the House of Commons, adopted in 1818:

And it is the rule of this House—

That witnesses examined before the house, or any committee thereof, are entitled to the protection of this house in respect to anything that may be said by them in their evidence.

I will not read the other resolution. So it will be perceived that this author lays down the rule with reference to investigations in public assemblies, like the Parliament of England or the Congress of the United States, that the same rule does not apply that exists in ordinary courts of justice.

This question has undergone investigation in several courts of the Union other than those referred to by gentlemen who have spoken in favor of the minority report. They have said that the power exists somewhere to make inquiry as to whether or not this House has acted within the scope of its authority in pronouncing this party guilty of contempt. Cases have also occurred in courts of States, as in the State of Mississippi, where the constitution of the State makes the writ of habeas corpus a writ of right, always available by prisoners; also in States where the constitutions and laws of the States make it an offense punishable by impeachment and dismissal from office for a judge to refuse to grant the writ of habeas corpus.

I desire now to call the attention of the House to a case which was decided in reference to one of the courts in a State where the constitution and laws were such as I have stated. It was a case not with reference to the action of the Legislature or either house of the Legislature. It was a case decided with reference to the power of an inferior tribunal to pass definitely upon and forever settle the question of contempt. It occurred not in a criminal proceeding, but in a case which was civil in its nature, where a guardian had refused to account to the probate court for the property of a ward which had passed into his possession, and had refused to file with the court a final account showing the condition of the accounts between the guardian and the ward. This case will be found in 7 George's Mississippi Reports.

A process of attachment issued from the probate court, possessing jurisdiction in testamentary questions and questions of administration. That attachment was served upon the party, and he still refused to answer. He was imprisoned by the court, and he sued out a writ of habeas corpus. The case went to the supreme court of Mississippi upon an appeal from the action of the probate court in passing upon the question of contempt. In that case the supreme court of Mississippi held that the inferior court passing upon the question of contempt, though it was a question whether the party was guilty of a contempt simply in the matter of accounting in dollars and cents, still the adjudication of the inferior court was final, conclusive, and decisive, and was not even subject to review by a court with appellate power over the inferior court. To say that that is not so, that that is not the true rule of law, would be to enable any party litigant or any criminal in an inferior court to stop the proceeding in medias res until the question could be adjudicated by the court of last resort whether he had been guilty of contempt or not.

Now, who ever heard of the doctrine that in the case of any court passing upon the question of contempt, and a witness who had seen the most flagrant crime committed, but positively refused to testify, had been imprisoned for contempt, according to the theory of the gentlemen supporting the minority report of the Committee on the Judiciary, it would be in the power of that party to stop the investigation and have the inquiry first by the inferior court as to whether he was guilty of contempt or not, and then if it was in a State where the constitution of the State provided that an appeal should be had in all cases, then and in that case the investigation would have to be stopped until the appellate court itself had decided whether a contempt had been committed or not? As I have said, if the principle contended for is true, then all investigations into the corruptions of this time, which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] calls the "dry rot" of this age, and which others have called festering sores upon the body-politic, numerous as they may be, flagrant as they are, and now the subject of inquiry by various committees of this body, may be stopped in limine in order to ascertain whether the House possesses the power to coerce a witness to answer.

Mr. KELLEY. If the gentleman will permit me, I disclaim the elegant phrase, "dry rot." I did not use it.

Mr. HOOKER. I rather think the gentleman must have used that expression. He probably has forgotten it. He uses so many elegant expressions that I know he does not remember them all.

Mr. KELLEY. I spoke of a citizen being held in a bastile to rot.

Mr. HOOKER. Probably that was it. But, in answer to that, permit me to say that Mr. Kilbourn has the key of his prison in his own pocket, or rather in his own mouth. Whenever he chooses to obey the order of this House he can unlock the door of that prison and walk out into the free air and sunshine. His imprisonment is of his own seeking and his own imposition. This House has done nothing more than indicate its own self respect and protect its very existence by putting him there until he shall be compelled to answer; for, as Mr. Cushing has remarked, that is the only punishment which is inflicted upon him. He is not punished because he has not done any particular act except refusing to answer. He may purge himself of that contempt and unlock his prison-door to-day if he wishes to do so, by coming into this House and answering the questions which have been propounded by your committee.

I was about to proceed to comment upon the authority of the case to which I referred, and I beg to state, without reading, that it was a question not of a criminal nature except in so far as it gave the court the power to imprison for contempt. It was a question in which a guardian refused to account, and the probate court imprisoned him for contempt. He took an appeal to the supreme court of the State; and one of the judges of that court, a man who added to his large learning, that highest ornament of the judiciary, an eminent conscientiousness in the search after truth in any and all questions or cases coming before him, Judge Harris, pronounced the opinion of the court after argument by able counsel. This doctrine is laid down by him:

> But it may perhaps be asked if each court is suffered to exercise the power of punishing contempts without control and revision of any other court, where is the security of the citizen—

The very question which has been propounded by the gentlemen on the opposite side—> where is the security of the citizen against the oppression of the judge by a willful infraction of the law? It is answered that the citizen finds security—

As I have just remarked Mr. Kilbourn could—> finds security in his own correct demeanor; in the great lenity and unwillingness which has generally been remarked in courts to resort to this exercise of their powers; but above all, in that responsibility which the judge owes to the assembled representation of the country for any corrupt or willful and arbitrary abuse of his power. It is the boast of our Government that no officer, however exalted his station may be, is above the law; neither can he indulge a wild, arbitrary, or licentious disposition without responsibility.

> Government cannot be administered without committing powers in trust and confidence. The exercise of discretion must be intrusted by the people to some agents in matters of this character. And it seems to us to be safer and more satisfactory under our system to leave it in the hands of the respective courts immediately deriving their authority from the people and amenable to the public for its just and wise exercise than to place it in the hands of an appellate tribunal removed in a great measure from their scrutiny as well as their direct authority.

This was a case in which it was assumed by the counsel on the part of the appellant that the supreme court of the State of Mississippi, being an appellate tribunal, with power to review the action of the inferior courts, had the power to review the action of this court with regard to the imprisonment of that guardian.

In this decision the various authorities on the subject, including the English authorities, are fully cited. Among others the case of the Earl of Shaftesbury, 2 State Trials, 615, who was imprisoned by the House of Lords for "high contempt committed against it." The case being brought into the King's Bench, the court held that they had no authority to judge of the contempt and remanded the prisoner. Chancellor Kent, referring in the case of Bates, 4 Johnson's Reports, to this decision in the Earl of Shaftesbury's case, says:

> The court in that case seem to have laid down a principle from which they have never departed, and which is essential to the due administration of justice. This principle, that every court, at least of the superior kind, in which great confidence is placed, must be the sole judge, in the last resort, of contempts arising therein, is more explicitly defined and more emphatically enforced in the two subsequent cases of The Queen vs. Paty et al., 2 Lord Raymond, 1105, and of The King vs. Crosby, 3 Wilson, 188; 2 Blackstone, 754.

The supreme court of Mississippi, referring to this question, says:

> In Crosby's case, the language of the judges is singularly impressive. Lord Chief Justice De Grey observed that when the House of Commons adjudge anything to be a contempt, or a breach of privilege, their adjudication was a conviction, and their commitment in consequence was execution; and that no court could discharge or bail a person that was in execution by the judgment of any other court.

The body of Hallet Kilbourn is in execution by judgment of this House for contempt; and it will not be denied, I suppose, that this House sitting as a quasi court ranks equal in dignity with any other court known to our Constitution or laws.

The opinion of Mr. Justice Blackstone is also quoted; but as it has been already referred to, I will not read it.

Chancellor Kent, after all these citations, adds:

> I have cited the opinions of other judges much at large, because I could not hope to improve upon the strength of their observations; and I entertain the most perfect conviction that the law, as they declared in this case, was well understood, and definitely established as part of the common law of England at the time of our revolution. Mr. Justice Grose, many years afterward, thought he did enough to prove the statement of the law on this subject by merely quoting this very able decision of Lord Chief Justice De Grey.
> These cases were also considered and reviewed by Cowen, J., in the supreme court of New York, nad approved as declarative of the common law of England. He says "that it was agreed in the mayor of London's case (Crosby, 3 Wilson, 188) that in cases of commitment for contempt by the Lords or Commons, or by any other court of general jurisdiction, no other court had power to interfere, and relieve by habeas corpus or in any other way, because there was no appeal.

Justice Blackstone lays down the doctrine thus:

> The sole adjudication of contempts and the punishment thereof in any manner belongs exclusively and without interfering to each respective court.

Again he lays down the doctrine:

> The right of punishing contempt by summary conviction is inherent in all courts of justice and legislative assemblies, and is essential for their protection and existence. It is a branch of the common law, adopted and sanctioned by our State constitution. The discretion involved in this power is in a great measure arbitrary and indefinable, and yet the experience of ages has demonstrated that it is perfectly compatible with civil liberty and auxiliary to the purest ends of justice.

These are the remarks of the courts in England in commenting on this power, and they expressly referred to it not only as existing in courts alone but as existing in Parliament, and they say that the experience of two hundred years has sanctioned the doctrine that the best ends of public justice and of human liberty are subserved by adhering to these adjudications.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOOKER. I will only occupy a few minutes longer to conclude what I have to say.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the gentleman will proceed.

Mr. HOOKER. Now, Mr. Speaker, let me read in conclusion:

> Our laws are not thus deficient. While they amply protect the liberty and rights of the citizen, they as amply provide for the prevention and punishment of the wrongs he may seek to inflict.
> Let the appeal be dismissed—

Why, Mr. Speaker? For what cause?

> for want of jurisdiction in this court.

Thus you have the decision of an appellate court declaring it could not review the action of an inferior court over whose proceedings and over whose judgments and all its decrees it had power to sit in any other cause. The courts say, in adjudging for contempt these tribunals must of necessity, as an element of their very life, possess the power of punishing for contempt.

We have seen a variety of devices resorted to to get this witness out of the possession of the House. First an indictment was found by the circuit court of the District of Columbia, and under that this drag-net—and we have heard in this debate frequently of "drag-nets" being thrown out—this drag-net of judicial proceedings was resorted to for the purpose of taking this witness out of the possession of the House and taking away from the House the power and authority to continue its investigation. When that failed, then this great writ of human right and liberty, which was so dear to our English ancestors, from whom we derive the great body of our laws, and which is regarded with such sanctity by tribunals in our own country in every State—this great writ of right, the writ of habeas corpus, is resorted to. But it has been clearly shown by the arguments already made that where a party is undergoing judgment of a competent court for contempt, undergoing the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, the right to resort to the writ of habeas corpus does not exist. Let us not therefore, by hesitating and paltering in a double sense with this question, furnish another illustration that he who is backed by the power of eminent counsel or who can array money and friends in his support and at his back can set at defiance the highest tribunal of the land engaged in investigating questions so pertinent to the public welfare and public weal. Let us not furnish another illustration of the saying of the great English dramatist:

> Plate sin with gold,
> And the strong lance of justice hurtless breaks;
> Arm it in rags, a pigmy's straw doth pierce it.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. Speaker, I did intend to discuss to a certain extent the legal propositions involved in this case, but the lateness of the hour and the absolute necessity of taking a vote on this question to-night is a reminder to me I must be brief. The authorities have been cited, the question has been discussed with signal and remarkable ability, even for the House of Representatives, and therefore I will forbear from discussing at all the questions of law involved and simply address myself to a few practical suggestions to the House in relation to the question at issue.

Now, sir, I was here in 1871 at the spring session, and the President of the United States sent to this House a message in which he declared that justice was invaded, that the rights of citizens were not protected, that citizens of the United States were being murdered, outraged, and deprived of all their rights under the law and the Constitution; and he asked the Congress of the United States to enact the necessary legislation to enforce the constitutional amendments. And what, sir, did I witness? I saw the democratic side of the House united to a single man for two long months, fighting night and day, fighting constantly and filibustering for two weeks, and for what? Why for the right under the writ of habeas corpus, and against the proposition of the republicans in this House that we should give the President authority to suspend that writ of habeas corpus. Again during the last session of the last Congress, when the proposition was made by the majority of this House to give the same right to the President of the United States to suspend the writ of habeas corpus and protect American citizens in their liberty and their lives, the same democratic unity existed. They fought for a fortnight, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] gained a world-wide reputation for the skill and power with which he led the forces of the democratic party against the right which the republicans asked that the President might suspend the writ of habeas corpus.

Now ever since I have known anything of the political history of the democratic party it has been entirely consistent in this view, that under no circumstances, for no men, for no court, no where shall the writ of habeas corpus be suspended and the citizen deprived of the liberty afforded to him by the laws and Constitution.

Now I am met with this new aspect of affairs. I find the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HURD] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. LORD] and the majority of a democratic committee reporting to this House and advocating in this House—what? Why, a proposition to entirely suspend the writ of habeas corpus as to this House and the other House. It is an exceptional case, it is said. O, no; it is not exceptional at all. You have got from thirty to forty investigations going on this very day while I am speaking. You are summoning here from all parts of the country from ten to twenty American citizens every day that this Congress is in session. Your committees are propounding to them any questions which may suggest themselves to the minds of the gentlemen on the committees; and there is a liability that you may not only have one American citizen but you may have a hundred American citizens where to-day you have got Hallet Kilbourn.

What is the bald and naked proposition, gentlemen, which you are advocating here to-day? Why, that it is in the power of the House to imprison an American citizen, right or wrong; that it is in the power of the Senate of the United States to take an American citizen, put him in jail, and keep him there for life, right or wrong; and the question of right and wrong, as is asserted by the gentlemen who have spoken on that side, has nothing whatever to do with it. Has it come to this, that the democrats of this House are prepared to say that an American citizen may be deprived of his liberty whether he is guilty of any wrong or not? Why, sir, if Hallet Kilbourn was right in refusing to answer the questions propounded to him, then you were wrong when you put him in jail.

Gentlemen say that the House adjudicated that he was guilty of contempt, and you cannot go behind that. How did you adjudicate that he was guilty of contempt? You demanded the previous question. You allowed no debate. You called the matter up before this House, and in five minutes of time you adjudged without debate that this citizen was guilty of contempt, and you sent him to jail.

O, what a magnificent power that would be for Congress to have! How, by means of it, we could dispose of these correspondents who interfere with us now and then! Take the committee of which my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] is chairman. The correspondents of the newspapers have treated that committee, in my judgment, very unjustly in many things. I know they have treated the chairman of that committee with injustice, because I know him to be a thoroughly honest and upright man. Now, he has every reason to feel aggrieved and outraged at what has been written to the newspapers of the country in relation to him and his committee. What a splendid opportunity this affords that committee to redress all their wrongs! Let them call any newspaper correspondent before it, ask him any question under the sun, it makes no difference what—ask him "Who struck Billy Patterson?"—and if he declines to answer report him to the House, demand the previous question, refuse debate, commit him to jail, and then determine that your power is without limit and nobody can inquire into it.

Why, sir, we can dispose of any gentleman who insults our dignity in an hour's time, without the slightest difficulty. The lawyers on this floor know perfectly well that they can badger any gentleman brought before any committee so as literally to compel him in defense of his own manhood to refuse to reply to the interrogatories that are propounded to him. And what a chance this gives for the Senate, too! The doings in executive session of the Senate have been divulged by newspaper men, and there is great grief that the discussions in executive session should appear before the country. Just make this a law of the land, and they can settle all that matter without any difficulty. They can take the correspondent of the New York Tribune, or of any other newspaper, and ask him what Senator informed him of the secrets of the executive session; he will decline to answer; then put him into jail, and there is an end of him. You may keep him there for life; you can punish him all he ought to be punished. There is no trouble about it all.

Now, sir, I have agreed to occupy but a very few minutes upon the floor, and I simply desire to say this with regard to Mr. Kilbourn: I hardly know the man myself; I do not know his politics; but it does seem to me beyond a peradventure that there is a very serious doubt about our right to hold him. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] admits the doubt. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HURD] in his speech admitted the doubt. The very discussion upon the floor admits it. Now, there is a rule of law that in the construction of a statute relating to liberty you must construe it liberally. Are we doing any more than right and justice to give Mr. Kilbourn the benefit of this doubt which this very discussion shows to exist in this House to-day? Let him go before the court; and then, I trust, if the court returns him here, that a resolution will be offered and passed at once giving him his liberty without day.

Mr. HURLBUT. Mr. Speaker, I think it is very well that this House should come back to the consideration of the single question before it. We have listened to a great deal of eloquence relating to a matter which to my mind seemed to be entirely remote from the pending question. There has been a great deal of learning displayed as to the derivation of the power of the House—a power properly described by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] as arising from the necessity of things; an inherent power; a power improperly described by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HURD] as a power dependent upon precedents and the customs and usage of the English Parliament.

The customs and usages of the English Parliament are not the law of this land. The precedents in favor of liberty in the English Parliament since 1744 are indications tending to show the course the American Congress should adopt, but the old principles of England are invoked by men deyning the rights of personal liberty. Now, sir, a certain thing we all agree upon, that the House has power in any matter which is properly within its own jurisdiction to call witnesses before them, to examine those witnesses and to exert the power of the House to enforce attendance and to enforce answers, and that we agree upon. But there is a possibility that this House may be mistaken. There is an undoubted limitation upon the power of this House as to the character of the subject-matter of the investigation submitted to it. There are rights belonging to individual men, rights guaranteed by the Constitution, rights to guarantee and to secure which the Constitution was made. The Constitution of the United States was not made to guarantee the prerogatives of this House, but it was made to protect the rights of the individual man. It was made for the weak, not for the strong; and it would be far better, in my judgment, if this House should devote itself somewhat more to the consideration of the duties that devolve upon it, rather than the assertion of doubtful privileges.

But, sir, we have exercised a power. Whether we have wisely exercised it or not, I do not care to discuss now. We have exercised it and said by our resolution that this man, Hallet Kilbourn, shall be committed to the common jail of the District until he shall purge himself of a contempt. What then? Hallet Kilbourn by being committed to jail by the House of Representatives has lost no rights that belong to him as an American citizen. He applies to the courts of the country and asserts a certain right, the foundation of liberty in England and in this country. He applies to a court constituted by the law in a case prescribed by the law itself. He presents his petition, and that petition must be judged of by the judge of the court and not by us. The judge is compelled under the law to examine that petition, and if he finds cause to issue a writ of habeas corpus, he is under penalties if he does not do so. The judge, acting under the law and under his official oath, under the penalties prescribed by the habeas corpus act if he neglects his duty, issues this writ and the writ issues to the Sergeant-at-Arms, the representative of this House, commanding him to bring the body of Hallet Kilbourn before the court together with the cause of commitment.

Now, sir, the single question before the House to-day is whether the House of Representatives will obey the plain provisions of the law and send the body before the court. The law requires it; the language is plain, undeniable, imperative, and conclusive, and any gentleman who takes the opposite side of this case necessarily claims that the House of Representatives is above the law of the land, a doctrine which for one I am not inclined to admit.

That is the single question presented now, whether or not this writ shall be obeyed according to its terms by our officer in producing the body of the party detained before us in order that the court may pass upon the question as to his rights. That is the one question presented; but the resolution of the majority, if I remember it correctly, requires the Sergeant-at-Arms to disobey the writ; in substance it undoubtedly does.

Now there is one other consideration which I would like to put before the House in the brief time that is allotted to me here, and that is, what would be the probable results of the adoption by this House of the doctrine contained in the majority resolution? This House certainly has no control over the judicial decision of any judge. The judge himself is and ought to be unfettered and free to carry out the law as he believes it to be. If this judge construes the law as I should if I were in his place, he would refuse to recognize the return made by the Sergeant-at-Arms of this House as not being a compliance with the plain terms of the statute, and were I in his place I should proceed to hold the officer who disobeyed the process of the court, whether he was an officer of this House or of any other body, as not only in contempt of the law but in contempt of the great writ of habeas corpus. Now suppose that shall be done, by what process now known to the law do gentlemen ever expect that their officer and Sergeant-at-Arms is so be relieved from that contempt. If I understand correctly the doctrine stated by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] he read authorities to prove that the determination of any court upon a question of contempt was binding upon all other courts except in cases where the court holds appellate jurisdiction. If that be so there is no remedy for our Sergeant-at-Arms. In that case the burden of power is all upon the other side. We are placed in the position of asserting what at all events is a doubtful power when the weight of the law and of the judicial tribunals of the country and of the Executive who is bound to sustain these judicial tribunals is against us.

Now, because these things are dangerous; because I believe that this writ ought to be obeyed in precisely the terms in which it is given; because I believe that no court that respects itself under such circumstances would take cognizance of a return without having the body produced in court and that the court has the right to have the body there; and because I believe that the jurisdiction of this House over the subject-matter, and thereby over the man whom they hold, is a subject which by the law of the land can be properly inquired into by any court, I hold that this House, laying aside all merely partisan relations—to which I would not now refer—laying aside all those questions that are thrown in here charging that the obedience of the law of the land will defeat this investigation, will consider this question upon a fair and honest and correct basis; that is, that in this country of ours there is but one thing that is sovereign, and that is the law; and that that law binds the Executive, the Senate, the House, the judicial officers, and all citizens; and that outside of the provisions of law there is no safety for liberty and a great deal of opportunity for tyranny.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had passed and requested the concurrence of the House in a bill of the following title:

A bill (S. No. 472) changing the times of holding terms of the district court for the district of West Virginia.

The message further announced to the House that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. No. 472) changing the time of holding the terms of the district court for the district of West Virginia.

The message also announced that the Senate had adopted a resolution setting the time for the trial of William W. Belknap, late Secretary of War, upon articles of impeachment exhibited against him by the House of Representatives, and transmitted to the House a copy of the plea of the said Belknap.

IMPEACHMENT TRIAL OF WILLIAM W. BELKNAP.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent that the communication from the Senate sitting as a court of impeachment and the copy of the plea of the Secretary of War be referred to the managers on the part of the House.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

HABEAS CORPUS—HALLET KILBOURN.

The House resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee on the Judiciary on the subject of the writ of habeas corpus in the case of Hallet Kilbourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. TUCKER. I do not propose to launch upon the wide sea of debate which we have had upon this subject for two days. I will preface my remarks by an amendment which I propose to offer, which amendment is perhaps out of order, unless the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. JENKS] will withdraw the one he has proposed, which I understand he is willing to do.

Mr. JENKS. I will withdraw my amendment for the purpose of allowing the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] to offer the one he indicates.

Mr. TUCKER. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "Kilbourn," where it occurs before the word "therefore," at the close of the preamble, and insert the following:

And whereas the facts stated in the petition and complaint of said Kilbourn present the question whether the said writ could lawfully and properly be issued, and whether the same was not therefore improvidently awarded: Therefore

Be it resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of this House be directed to appear by counsel before the said court and make a motion to quash or dismiss said writ, or take such other proceedure as he shall be advised is proper to raise the question of the legality and propriety of the issue of said writ, upon the facts stated in the petition or complaint and as preliminary to any return to the same; and in the mean time he is directed to retain the custody of the body of said Kilbourn, and not to produce it under the order of said writ without the further order of this House.

Mr. TUCKER. I believe, as I said the other day, that the commitment of this man Kilbourn for contempt of the authority of this House was right. I believe that the questions that were propounded to him in reference to those who were interested in the real-estate pool involved so necessarily the quantum of interest of Jay Cooke & Co. in the real-estate pool, in whose assets the United States are deeply interested in the proceeding in bankruptcy, that the question of who were the parties to the real-estate pool was a pertinent inquiry, and that the refusal of the witness to answer that question put him in direct contempt of the authority of this House.

I am so well satisfied of that, that I am just as well satisfied that any court that respects law or respects precedents, English or American, upon the fact appearing in any way to it that the party is held in custody by reason of his contempt, will at once under habeas corpus remand the custody of his body to the keeping of this House. And I go further, so well satisfied am I that the English and American precedents sustain that proposition, that, if any judge in this land should decide otherwise, he would bring himself very nearly within the alternative or dilemma either of knowing nothing about the law or corruptly defying it.

Now in the few remarks that I will address to the House I desire to say that so far as I am concerned as to this amendment which I propose it is not necessary for me to determine the extent of the powers of this House in respect to punishment for contempt. Whether the power be punitive or merely remedial is perhaps not necessary to inquire, although I am frank to say that the inclination of my mind is that this House, in committing for contempt, is only exercising a remedial jurisdiction, a coercive jurisdiction, and not a punitive jurisdiction.

This party having been committed for contempt of the authority of this House, the question is, Can this writ issue or ought this writ to have issued? Upon that question I have before me the Revised Statutes, and I will read a passage quoted from chapter 13, section 755, by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] the other day:

The court, or justice, or judge to whom such application is made shall forthwith award a writ of habeas corpus, unless it appear from the petition itself that the party is not entitled thereto.

Now I apprehend that our relations to the writ of habeas corpus issued in this case is just the same substantially that it would be to any suit brought against our Sergeant-at-Arms. The Sergeant-at-Arms may plead either to the jurisdiction, or demur, or plead to the issue, plead in bar. If he pleads to the jurisdiction, it is on the ground that the court has no jurisdiction to issue the writ at all or to issue the writ in this particular case. If he demurs, it would be on the ground that upon the facts appearing in the petition itself the court had no right to award the writ; and that is the ground upon which I put my amendment. If he makes a return to the writ it is in the nature of a plea—gentlemen will excuse me for the forensic phrase—a plea in confession and avoidance; that is to say he confesses he has the party in his custody, but he avoids any subjection to the order of the court upon the ground that it is a legal custody.

Now, if he makes return the court may say, as it did say, I understand, in Irwin's case, "How can we adjudicate in respect to the subject-matter in controversy, which subject-matter is the body of the petitioner, unless you bring the subject-matter before the court?" In Irwin's case the Sergeant-at-Arms made return that the prisoner was held under an order for contempt. In this case the House has made no return at all; and I propose it shall make no return until the preliminary inquiry has been made and presented to the court. That preliminary inquiry is presented by the Sergeant-at-Arms in this form: "I plead to your jurisdiction. By the law you cannot issue this writ; for upon the face of the petition there is no right on the part of the petitioner to have it issued; and in the nature of a demurrer, admitting all the facts stated in the petition, I deny that there is any right on the part of the petitioner to this writ."

Now what are the facts stated in the petition? I do not know that they have been produced before this House; but they have been published in the papers. I understand that the petition sets out all the facts of the case—sets out the fact that the party has been committed for contempt of the authority of the House in refusing to answer a question. Now, mark you, upon that petition it appears that he is held in our custody upon our judgment that he is in contempt; and the precedents upon that subject are absolutely overwhelming. In the case of The Queen vs. Patty, 2 Lord Raymond's Reports, 1105, where Chief Justice Holt dissented, the court said that there could be no objection to the form of commitment by the House, and, if for contempt, no objection that the contempt does not appear on the face of the warrant, or, even if it did appear, that in the judgment of the court it was not sufficient contempt for commitment; in other words, that as soon as we plead that in our judgment this party has been in contempt it concludes the matter and precludes judicial inquiry.

The question has been discussed and mooted here, how long can we hold this man in custody for contempt? Upon that question permit me to say, by way of parenthesis, that we can hold him only till the close of the session. Until the end of the session the House is regarded constructively as pressing its inquiry upon the conscience of the witness. As soon as the House adjourns the inquiry is withdrawn. The party can no longer be in contempt of its authority and no custody for contempt can therefore endure beyond the session. Upon this point I have the authority of an English court, to which I beg leave to refer, and I trust that in an American Congress the liberty of the citizen is no less dear to us than the liberty of the subject is to the Court of Queen's Bench in England. Her Majesty's court says, in Stockdale vs. Hansard, 31 English Common Law Reports, 67:

> The privilege of committing for contempt is inherent in every deliberative body invested with authority by the Constitution; but however flagrant the contempt, the House of Commons can only commit till the close of the existing session. Their privilege to commit is not better known than this limitation of it. Though the party should deserve the severest penalty, yet his offense being committed the day before the prorogation, if the House orders his imprisonment but for a week, every court in Westminster Hall and every judge of all the courts would be bound to discharge him by habeas corpus.

That is to say, wherever the power of this House goes to the imprisonment of a man one moment beyond the extent of this privilege, the power of every court and every judge in the land is bound to discharge the party upon habeas corpus. And I think that if Mr. Pat. Woods could hear this he would know that he had been imprisoned unjustly and unconstitutionally by this House.

Such being the precedents, I think the law upon this subject is perfectly clear, that as soon as it is made known to this court here in this District that this House, representing the commons of the country, holds a party in contempt of its authority in custody, that court in obedience to its oath is bound to remand him to our custody.

My friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. JENKS] proposed the other day an amendment which is in accordance with all the precedents in the Supreme Court, to this effect: that the court should be asked to make an order for a rule upon the Sergeant-at-Arms to show cause why the writ should not issue. My amendment embodies the same idea, although it is perhaps more definite in form. As it appears by the very petition of the party himself that he is held in custody for contempt of the authority of this House and by its order, I propose that as a preliminary to any return of the body as being legitimately within the jurisdiction of the court, we should raise the point that upon the face of the petition the court had no right to issue the writ; that it has been improvidently awarded and should now be quashed. In that way we avoid the question which we have been discussing for several days and present the issue plainly and nakedly to the decision of the court.

Mr. GARFIELD. Will my friend allow me one question? He has read the section of the statute which says that "the court or justice or judge to whom such application is made shall forthwith award a writ of habeas corpus unless it appears from the petition itself that the party is not entitled thereto." Now I ask, unless it appears to whom?

Mr. TUCKER. To him.

Mr. GARFIELD. To the judge, or to us of the House?

Mr. TUCKER. To the judge.

Mr. GARFIELD. Then, as a matter of course, he is to be the judge of that.

Mr. TUCKER. Very well.

Mr. GARFIELD. If it be within his discretion as a judge to determine that question, and as he has within his discretion determined it, and determined he must issue the writ and has issued it, how can the gentleman now deny it is interfering with the power of that judge's discretion for us to insist he should not have issued it?

Mr. TUCKER. Well, sir, there is this discretion: The judge is very potential, indeed, when we cannot question his divinity so far as to say: "Judge, we think you nodded when you made that order, and we now ask you, because it was improvidently made, to quash it."

Mr. HOAR. Will the gentleman from Virginia permit me to further suggest in reply to the gentleman from Ohio that the judge never adjudicated that question, as appears upon the face of the petition and papers before the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. GARFIELD. He did pro forma.

Mr. HOAR. Neither pro forma nor otherwise.

Mr. TUCKER. Certainly.

Mr. GARFIELD. Must he not then go forward and adjudicate it with the party before him?

Mr. HOAR. The judge therefore has issued a writ of habeas corpus and we are dealing with one improvidently issued.

Mr. TUCKER. This is the point and the gentleman from Ohio says that we cannot——

Mr. HOAR. I beg the gentleman's pardon for again interrupting him.

Mr. TUCKER. Go on.

Mr. HOAR. I am informed in point of fact that the judge refused to hear the petition read before he issued the writ.

Mr. TUCKER. I think he must have refused to hear the petition read. We must require him to read both.

Mr. GARFIELD. We refused to hear the case before we acted on it.

Mr. TUCKER. No, sir, we did not refuse to hear the case; but we will see that the judge of the District court of the district of Columbia shall hear the house of commons of America, and when the house of commons of America makes a motion to quash a writ improvidently awarded by the judge here that he shall hear the motion and he shall decide it.

Now, sir, suppose we make that motion. There is no requirement that the body shall be produced on that motion. He has no right to require it to be produced, for the very motion itself denies his power to have issued the writ and to have required us to plead by return.

Mr. GARFIELD. The judge held in the case of Irwin that he would not hear the motion to quash until the body was produced.

Mr. TUCKER. I only mean to say that it shows if he refuses to hear—I see the gentleman from Ohio moving off, and I desire that he shall hear me.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do.

Mr. TUCKER. If he refuses to hear the motion it will show that corruption has spread from the "real-estate pool" even to the tainting of the ermine of the courts of the District. [Applause.]

Mr. GARFIELD. We have as good a right to say the statement the gentleman makes could only be made when corruption had reached clearly into this House. [Applause.]

A MEMBER. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. GARFIELD. I would not say that.

Mr. TUCKER. I did not hear the gentleman's remark. I suppose it was not personal to myself. The applause in the galleries was so loud I could not hear it.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Let me suggest that in the Irwin case the judge required before he would hear the motion the production of the body. He required, before he would hear the return or the motion to quash which was made, the production of the body, and when the body was produced and the return made the prisoner was remanded to the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. TUCKER. I have heard all that can be said on that subject on the other side, and I will go on. I say that, as I understand it, in Irwin's case the Sergeant-at-Arms made a return to the writ, but did not return the body; and that then on the motion to quash the court said, "I will not hear any motion until you respect the writ which I have issued by making a return of the body." The point I make is this: I would order the Sergeant-at-Arms to make no return, not to plead to the issue at all, not to admit the jurisdiction of the court to have issued the writ, but to move to quash it as improvidently awarded.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. In that very case the very point was made by the counsel on behalf of the House of Representatives, that the writ was issued improvidently. That very point was made before the case came on the second time, and the court held that the body must be produced, and then on the next day these proceedings were held and he remanded the prisoner.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I do not care what the judge did upon a former occasion. But under the amendment which I propose, and which I believe ought to be adopted, he should be made to answer to the motion which we make to quash it, because he had no right to issue it.

Mr. BLAINE, (in his seat, in undertone.) Should be "made to?"

Mr. TUCKER. Be made to. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAINE. How?

Mr. TUCKER. Made through his conscience, if he has one, and by a power that is superior to him, if he has not.

Mr. BLAINE. Excuse me. I thought the language of the gentleman was very extraordinary, that the judge should be "made" by the House of Representatives to do anything.

Mr. TUCKER. The gentleman is no lawyer, as he has often shown in this House, [laughter and applause,] and the gentleman is perhaps unaware that when a court will not execute his duty he may be made to execute it.

Mr. BLAINE. By an order of the House?

Mr. TUCKER. Not by an order of the House. That shows the gentleman is no lawyer. By a writ of mandamus from a higher court that will compel him to exercise a jurisdiction that he is reluctant to exercise.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if I can get through these friendly interruptions—because I never knew a man to disturb a nest that there was not a great deal of fluttering all about it—I will be permitted I suppose to proceed so far as to say that if my amendment is adopted it will present the question to the court in such a manner that he cannot avoid deciding the question upon the facts appearing in the petition, which the gentleman from Massachusetts says he decided upon without reading.

Now, sir, what is the difficulty here? What is the reason that there is any trouble about this matter? Because there seems to be a grave suspicion that the court of the District of Columbia would not do its duty in this case. Far be it from me to throw that suspicion on any man who wears the judicial ermine until he shall have shown a reluctance to perform his judicial duty. But I say that lest this should be the case, I have prepared a bill which on the first opportunity I propose to present to the House that I think will meet the unanimous concurrence of this House, that in all cases where a party is under the order of either House of Congress, committed to custody for contempt or for any other reason, the only court that shall have the power to issue the writ of habeas corpus in such a case shall be the Supreme Court of the United States. To this authority I, in common with my friends all around, from the South as well as the North, and I have no doubt in common with the other side of the House, would be willing to bow. There is no trouble about bowing to their decision as to the extent of the constitutional powers of this House.

While, Mr. Speaker, I have hurried very rapidly through what I have to say in favor of this amendment, I hope it will be adopted, and that it will remove the difficulties which have arisen in the course of this discussion, and will have the effect of quieting them, and presenting the point on which the House will decide.

Mr. BLAINE. Will the gentleman allow me one moment?

Mr. TUCKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAINE. I am permitted kindly by the gentleman to say that I had no intention whatever of doing anything else than making a conversational interruption which the gentleman made the occasion of a fling, and I had no wish or purpose to take part in the debate. The expression was involuntary on my part. I do not know anything in the relations between the gentleman from Virginia and myself that called for the discourtesy with which he treated me. But so long as I am on the floor and twitted with not being a lawyer, I will say to the gentleman I thank God I am not a lawyer trained in the school he was. I thank God I am not a lawyer like the gentleman himself, who, as attorney-general of the State of Virginia, gave an opinion that the local authorities of that State might invade the post-office and compel the postmaster to give up the contents of the mail. I thank God that I am not that kind of lawyer. [Applause.]

I go a little further. The gentleman represents—and with great ability, I will do him the credit to say—that which is known as the great State-rights school that receives its chief inspiration from Mr. Jefferson and the other great lights of Virginia. And yet, sir, he stands here to-day to plead that this House possesses a power over which there is no review anywhere except such as it makes itself. Now, Mr. Jefferson said expressly in a letter, which I recall and could find if I had time, that this Government was so constructed that the absolute power rested nowhere, and he defied any man to show that in any department of this Government anywhere there was absolute power. You take the ultimate judgment of the Supreme Court, which seems absolute. You take the pardoning power of the President, which is without question. Let these powers be misused or abused and there is the power of impeachment, arrest, and punishment. But the gentleman from Virginia, inheriting and professing to represent the principles of Jefferson, says that this House may take anybody on any pretense that may commend itself to its judgment and imprison him at their pleasure, and that there does not exist in the laws to-day the slightest power of relief or review. I thank God again I have not learned law in that school. [Applause.]

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I have no hesitation in saying in reply to the gentleman from Maine that what he took as a fling at him in reply to a conversational and undertone interruption was not intended to be in any degree offensive. I thought that the gentleman from Maine had clearly to his own consciousness some weeks ago in a discussion between himself and the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR] shown that whatever else he might be, and whatever else he might be fitted to be, and whatever other position he might be fitted to fill by the suffrages of his countrymen, there was one thing he had never been trained to be, and that was a lawyer; and I merely meant to say, though I do not intend to be discourteous to any gentleman upon this floor at any time—I merely meant to say that I thought the gentleman had demonstrated again as he did upon that occasion very signally that he was not a lawyer. But, sir, there is one thing that he is if he is not a lawyer, and that is, sir, he is a Pharisee. [Laughter and applause.] He said thank God——

Mr. BLAINE. That I am not as the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. TUCKER. The gentleman says he thanks God that he is not as I am, and I thank my heavenly Father that there is no resemblance between us. [Great applause.] I say amen with all my heart to that. He thanks God that he is not as other men are, even as this poor publican. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BLAINE. The late attorney-general of Virginia.

Mr. TUCKER. The late attorney-general of Virginia, sir. I am proud to have represented the old Commonwealth in that office; I am proud to represent the old Commonwealth upon this floor. I remember the opinion to which the gentleman from Maine refers, and it seems to me that instead of studying the laws of his country the gentleman has been studying up to see if he could not get points upon his colleagues upon the committee and members upon this floor with which he might twit and taunt them when the occasion arose. I really did not expect that that opinion would be referred to. I think it was made pendente bello.

Mr. BLAINE. No, it was before the war.

Mr. TUCKER. Very well, it was a good opinion whenever it was given. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BLAINE. The gentleman will please state what it was?

Mr. TUCKER. Then it was ante bellum. I am not to be misled in this debate. I have no objection to stating what it was. It was in effect that what mail matter a citizen of a State could receive was a question for State laws.

Mr. BLAINE. That was it, and the gentleman holds to it to this day, I understand.

Mr. TUCKER. I do hold to it to-day.

Mr. BLAINE. That the Post-Office Department can be interrupted in performing its duties by a country justice of the peace in a State; that was the opinion.

Mr. TUCKER. I hold to that opinion yet, and the gentleman has shown that he is no constitutional lawyer when he does not recognize a distinction which is as old as the decisions of Judge Marshall, as far back as the case of Gibbons vs. Ogden, in which, and in other cases, it has been held that, between the commercial power of the Federal Government and the police power of the State, the margin and the distinction were as wide as the poles, and so wide that I had supposed even the undisciplined mind of the gentleman from Maine might have seen it. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BLAINE. Where does the power of the General Government through the Post-Office Department end and the State power begin?

Mr. TUCKER. I am glad to say that while there is an old adage that a child—and I believe the adage goes a little further than that, although I will not attribute the rest of it to the gentleman from Maine—that a child may ask a wise man a great many questions that he cannot answer—nor do I attribute to myself the quality of wisdom—yet if the gentleman will read for his delectation the great case of Brown vs. The State of Maryland he will find the distinction as to when goods cease to be imports and become commodities within State jurisdiction drawn with so much nicety by Chief Justice Marshall, that Judge Taney, then at the bar and counsel in the case, dissented from it, although he afterward acceded to it as just and sound.

Mr. BLAINE. Does the gentleman treat post-office matter as "goods?"

Mr. TUCKER. Ah, well! I did not know; but I thought, though the gentleman was no lawyer, he had probably read some books on logic; but I do not believe he is either a lawyer or a logician.

Mr. BLAINE. According to the Virginia standard, no!

Mr. TUCKER. The gentleman says he thanks God that he was not brought up in the school of State rights, as I was. We were certainly brought up in very different schools. The differences between us in our views of the Federal Constitution are very wide; but, sir, I do not propose to go into that matter now. I am not to be betrayed into a discussion of that sort. There are gentlemen in this House, some gentlemen on the other side of the House, who seem to think that whenever I rise upon this floor it is for the purpose of discussing State rights, whether I propose to discuss State rights or not, because that is one of the great bugaboos which is to go along with the "bloody shirt" in the great contest which is approaching. [Great applause.] I suppose that gentlemen bring that question up on all occasions that they may flaunt it in the face of the multitude and secure a vote for Mr. Blank at one end of the Capitol or for Mr. M. at the other end of the Capitol. [Laughter and applause.] The "bloody shirt" is freely used at one end of the Capitol, and here, at this end, is the bugaboo of State rights. [Great laughter and applause.] As for the "great unknown," I do not know where he stands; and I believe, from an anecdote that I have seen in the papers, that the gentleman from Maine does not know who he is, nor where he stands. [Laughter and applause.]

Now the gentleman has imputed to me an intention of which I am in no wise guilty. And if the gentleman had been in the House a week ago, when I made a speech upon this question before, he would have been satisfied that he did me injustice in saying that I denied the power of any court to revise the action of this House, no matter what it might do. On the contrary, as he will see in my printed speech, I assumed this position upon which I stand, as sanctioned by the English decisions; that while the court may inquire into the extent of the privileges of this House, they cannot inquire into and are precluded from any examination of the mode in which those privileges have been exercised. That is the distinction I have drawn, sustained by English and American precedents.

I do not know but I have consumed more time than I ought. I will now conclude by asking the House to adopt the amendment which I have offered.

Mr. HURD. I now move the previous question upon the preamble and resolution reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, with the amendments pending thereto.

The previous question was seconded and the main question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HURD] is entitled under the rule to one hour to close the debate.

Mr. HURD. I will yield fifteen minutes of my time to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. LORD.]

Mr. LORD resumed and concluded his remarks begun this morning. They are as follows:

Mr. LORD. I apprehend, Mr. Speaker, that the real question in this case is not whether the House shall reverse the solemn judgment which it has already entered in the premises; the question is not whether that judgment was intrinsically right or wrong. The simple question before this House is whether having entered this judgment it is compelled to surrender the person of Mr. Hallet Kilbourn, whom it has adjudged to be in contempt. As has already been said, this is a very important question; it is a question which comes to this, whether this House may be compelled, while Mr. Hallet Kilbourn or other witness is being examined before it or when the witness is at the door of this House about entering to be examined, to surrender his person and give up the right of investigation.

Before examining this question it is proper perhaps to look at the surroundings of the case which has called from members of this House such bitter denunciation, and even the threat by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LYNDE] that those who vote to sustain the Committee on the Judiciary shall be retired from the public service. Now, Mr. Speaker and members of this House, has this House rendered any arbitrary judgment? Has it said that Mr. Kilbourn shall be confined ten days, or six months, or ten years? Has it said anything that would take it from the power of Mr. Kilbourn to release himself? Not in the least. He can at any moment be released from this imprisonment by coming forward and stating just the truth in regard to the transactions concerning which he was being examined.

There is no question whatever—I repeat, no question whatever but that this House has jurisdiction over the subject-matter concerning which Mr. Kilbourn was being examined, nor that this House has jurisdiction over his person. He can at any moment unlock the door of his prison; he can at any time, by coming into this House and obeying its mandate and telling the truth in regard to this matter, be released from the confinement of which he complains.

Now, what reason does he give for not doing so? He says that he has nothing but what he is willing to tell, nothing but what he could tell without injury to himself or any one. He says that he has nothing to conceal from this House; that after having told the whole of what he knows, having revealed every personal transaction, or what he calls personal, to which he was called upon to testify, there would be nothing to implicate his character or that of any other person whomsoever. This is his position. Then why does he not state the facts? He says that he cannot do it, because to do so would be to violate a principle. This Mr. Kilbourn therefore seeks to make himself a martyr for a principle. Now what principle is involved? What is there in one's personal transactions, if fairly conducted, in the books and accounts of a person, if fairly conducted, that would do him an injury? And when this House determines, in conjunction with the report of the committee, that such testimony is material, why should Mr. Kilbourn withhold it?

Who is this Mr. Kilbourn who thus refuses to testify? What guarantee has this House in his past history that this point which he makes is sincerely made, is one of principle? It has been developed to this House that since he has been in confinement he has availed himself of a privilege given to him to take of the moneys of the people of the United States at the rate of over $7,000 per annum for purposes of eating and drinking. Now when we are asked to look at this martyr sustaining a principle and to extend to him the belief that he is acting from principle, we cannot but look at the fact that he has thus abused the privilege which it seems in some way was conferred upon him.

Now the question is not before the House—and I beg the House to consider this point—the question is not before the House whether we will make a return to the court which has issued this writ of habeas corpus. No one of the Judiciary Committee, no one here, denies that a return should be made. It is proposed to make a most respectful return stating the fact that this House, in the exercise of its jurisdiction in regard to witnesses, has found this witness contumacious and has condemned him as guilty of a contempt and ordered him into the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms until he shall see fit to answer the questions proposed to him.

The question as to the body is a technical one. My learned friend from Wisconsin [Mr. LYNDE] asserted that the moment this prisoner was taken before the court and the court ascertained and determined that he was held here by virtue of the process and judgment of this House he would be immediately remanded to the control of the House. How do we know that, Mr. Speaker? If that be true, then, certainly the question now being considered is one of no very great importance; for, if it be the duty of that court, as seems to be conceded here, to remand the prisoner the moment it ascertains that he is held by authority of this House, then what is the urgent necessity of taking him before that tribunal? The objection to taking him there is this: that the moment he is there, as is found from all the authorities and as is conceded by every member of this House who has spoken on the subject, so far as I recollect—that the moment he is taken there he is in the custody of the court and he is outside of the custody of the House of Representatives.

Now we are asked by what authority we refuse to produce the person? I say by authority of the last House of Representatives. That House, as is conceded here, refused to surrender the person of a contumacious witness who was ordered into imprisonment by that House. In the first place they did it unconditionally; they said, "We will not give up the prisoner." In the next place they said—what? They said, "We will let the prisoner be taken before the court; but we command the Sergeant-at-Arms not to surrender the person of the prisoner." Now I say that order in all respects affirms and sustains the report of the Judiciary Committee in the present case. I say that, so long as the Sergeant-at-Arms was directed to keep the custody of the prisoner, so long the prisoner was in the custody of the House. Therefore the action of the last House is an authority completely sustaining this House in the position which it has taken.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman please state the difference between the action of the House at the last session and that proposed in the minority report in this particular case? Is not the resolution reported by the minority here identically the same as the resolution of the House in the Irwin case of last winter?

Mr. LORD. I understand that the minority report in this case simply directs that the body of the prisoner be taken before the court; I do not understand that the minority in this case recommend that the Sergeant-at-Arms retain the possession of the prisoner. I understand that in the last House, after full and mature deliberation, the Sergeant-at-Arms was solemnly directed to keep the control of the body of that prisoner. Now in principle what is the difference between that case and this?

Mr. GARFIELD. Will the gentleman allow me one moment to set him right in one respect? I am sure he wishes to be correct.

Mr. LORD. Yes, sir.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman states correctly the first action of the House in the Irwin case. The committee reported against delivering the body, a minority of the committee being in favor of delivering it; and finally, in its first action, the House reached a sort of mixed conclusion: that the Sergeant-at-Arms should take the body before the court, but not lose custody of it. That return was made to the court, and, as several of us here in the House had said we expected the court would do, it answered very properly, "We can accept no such delivery as that; if the prisoner is not delivered into the custody of this court, the court does not consider a proper return made." Whereupon the committee reported the question back to the House; and on the 15th of January, after a long debate, this resolution was adopted:

> That the Sergeant-at-Arms be, and he is hereby, ordered to make a careful return to the writ of habeas corpus in the case of Richard B. Irwin that the prisoner is duly held by the authority of the House to answer in proceedings against him for contempt, and that the Sergeant-at-Arms take with him the body of said Irwin before the court when making such return, as required by law.

So that finally, on a vote of 107 to 64, we ordered the Sergeant-at Arms to make return in accordance with law; and the body was delivered. It thus appears that the action which my friend refers to was overruled on a subsequent day upon a vote of the House by yeas and nays; and, as I understand, the resolution of the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. LYNDE,] representing the minority of the committee in this case, is identical in terms with the resolution which the House finally passed in the Irwin case.

Mr. LORD. Do you mean the last resolution?

Mr. GARFIELD. Yes, sir; the last resolution of the House in the Irwin case; the resolution I have just read. That was the resolution suggested by Mr. Beck, of Kentucky, and which received the votes of many democrats.

Mr. LORD. I was misinformed, then, by the concessions of Saturday as to the final resolution in the Irwin case. It seems that the last House determined in the first place that it would not deliver the person of that witness. In the second place it determined that the person of the witness might be taken before the court, but that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to keep possession of the witness. Finally, however, it seems that the House, knowing possibly what the court in that respect would do, yielded the point, and permitted the prisoner to be taken unconditionally before the court. But, Mr. Speaker, I propose now to show very briefly that the action of the last House in the first instance was correct; that unless this be so we have no control whatever over investigations. It has been suggested that this House adopt the second resolution of the last Congress. I propose to show that this resolution was entirely wrong, (as was conceded by referring me to the third and final resolution of that House,) for sending the prisoner before the court in the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms and commanding him to keep possession of the person would be keeping him within the possession of the House and worse than to refuse to send him at all; for the reason that, in the case of the second resolution being adopted and carried out, there would be danger of collision of authority in the presence of the court. Assuming, as was assumed here the other day, without contradiction, that the action of the last House as expressed in the second resolution was its ultimate action; assuming that the court had then said that the witness was entitled to his liberty; assuming that the Sergeant-at-Arms had then said, "Notwithstanding this court says the witness is entitled to his liberty, I am instructed by the House of Representatives not to surrender possession of him;" what then? There would be a direct conflict in the very presence of the court.

But, Mr. Speaker, I come now to the simple proposition that this House has the power to detain this witness. I come to the proposition that it is the duty of this House to detain this witness, because if the writ of habeas corpus against the final judgment of this House can take the prisoner it may take him while he is in the act of testifying at our bar; it may meet him at the door. Arming the officers of the courts of this District with sufficient writs of habeas corpus they can utterly and forever break up every investigation of this House.

Mr. Speaker, in the judgment of the law this man, Hallet Kilbourn, is as much under the control of this House this moment as he was when he stood at its bar refusing to testify. In fact, in legal intendment, as all lawyers who are present will concede, he is in the actual custody of this House under its final judgment, as a contumacious witness, and will be until he testifies or until the House adjourns.

But, Mr. Speaker, let me call the attention of the House to two or three authorities on this point. In the first place the question has been decided in the case of Kearney, 7 Wheaton, 44, by the Supreme Court of the United States; and what higher authority can the supreme court of this District require? In that case it was decided, after due and mature consideration, as follows:

> The sole adjudication of contempt and the punishment thereof belong exclusively and without interfering to each respective court.
> Infinite confusion and disorder would follow if courts could, by writs of habeas corpus, examine and determine the contempts of others. * * * If granted, the court could not inquire into the sufficiency of the cause of commitment.

Now I apprehend there is no gentleman on the other side, no gentleman however denunciatory of the action of this House, but will admit it has equal authority with a district court of the District of Columbia, to say the least; that this House, in the investigation of matters sent to it and before it, has at least the power to punish a contumacious witness for contempt as much as has the district court of the District of Columbia to issue a writ of habeas corpus or to punish for contempt.

Here is the authority of the Supreme Court of the United States saying in such cases one judicature cannot interfere with the jurisdiction of another because it would create infinite confusion, and because, if the writ be granted, the court could not inquire into the sufficiency of the cause.

Now let me call the attention of Congress to another decision made in my own State and precisely like the case before the Congress. In the State of New York the statute is that in all cases the body of the person detained shall be brought before the tribunal. A writ was issued by Judge Bacon, of the supreme court, for the purpose of bringing before that court a young man alleged to be a deserter. Return was made by the officer stating that he held him by authority of the United States, and finally stating that he did not produce the body in court because he did not regard it his duty to do so, notwithstanding the writ. Judge Bacon, in the first place, stated there seemed to be an anomaly in excusing the production of the body, inasmuch as the writ demanded it, and inasmuch as the statute also required the production of the body; but when he came to read the return he took precisely the course which we may assume the chief justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia will take when he reads the return by this House. And it must be borne in mind in all this discussion we propose to make a return, we propose to treat the court with entire respect; but we propose to make the return that, inasmuch as we hold this man, Hallet Kilbourn, under definite and final judgment, he cannot be wrested from our possession by the writ of habeas corpus. When the learned judge reads our return, if he had supposed he had some power to inquire into the facts, yet if he takes it as true, as he undoubtedly will, when its very truth can be ascertained by the paper upon which he must act, he will say what Judge Bacon says In re Hapson, 40 Barbour, pages 34, 36, 40. This is the language of the court:

> Our statute in relation to writs of habeas corpus * * * provides in broad terms that every person * * * restrained of his liberty, * * * under any pretense whatever, except in certain enumerated cases, may prosecute the writ. By another section it is made the duty of the person against whom the writ is issued to bring the body of the person in his custody * * * before the officer issuing it. * * * The production of the person is also an explicit command of the writ, and as the elementary writers generally state, it constitutes an essential element of the proceeding. * * * But unless the case is entertained and the cause of the detention is to be investigated, it is very obvious that the presence of the alleged prisoner is of no sort of consequence. * * * Even if he were personally present and before the court, it is manifest that his corporal presence and actual production is of no consequence whatever.

Here, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of this House, is the solemn adjudication of one of the ablest judges of the State of New York, by which he holds and affirms, where the return shows that the court issuing the writ of habeas corpus has no power over the question, where the return shows another tribunal has the proper custody and control of the person whose body is ordered to be produced, then the production of his body is of no consequence whatever; and in this case the learned judge held that his body need not be produced; and you will see at once it was a very sensible conclusion.

Every statute is to be read according to its intent. A court has no more right to demand this prisoner under a writ of habeas corpus when he is held by the ultimate judgment of this House for contempt than to require a person to be brought from the pest-house who is stricken with the small-pox or malignant fever. The law is to be interpreted reasonably, according to the necessities and requirements of the case. This principle, correctly applied, will never essentially change or repeal a law, but comes within the familiar rule—

> A thing within the intent of the statute is a part of the statute, though not within its letter; and a thing without the letter is within the statute, if within its intention.

So long as it is true—and the learned gentleman who led on the other side, the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. LYNDE,] conceded it to be true—that the supreme court of the District of Columbia could only remand this prisoner the moment he was taken before it and the return made that he was held for the contempt referred to, it is but an idle form and ceremony to take his body there, a form and ceremony in which I have said I would acquiesce were it not for the fact that if we obey the writ in this regard the House of Representatives at once surrenders the person of the prisoner.

When we are asked for authorities we find them in abundance. I need not refer again to the authorities cited on Saturday from the Supreme Court of the United States and in the courts of England. I bring an authority from my own State directly in point, where the statute expressly, as this statute does, requires the body to be taken before the court; and yet the court there held, after mature deliberation, that when the return made—as our return will do—brought before the court the fact that if the person of the prisoner were in court he would be at once remanded, then it follows that the person of the prisoner need not be taken into court at all.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Will the gentleman give the name of the New York case to which he refers?

Mr. LORD. It is In re Hopson, 40 Barbour.

It is now too late to question the power of this House to investigate certain questions that are brought before it. It is true that this power is not expressly conferred by the Constitution; but in fact it is conferred by the Constitution in the broadest possible manner. The first section of the Constitution of the United States creates the House of Representatives. The second section provides how the House of Representatives shall be constituted. This House and the Senate, therefore, have the dignified position of being the first named in the Constitution. The first creative act of the Constitution was the creation of the United States Senate and the creation of the House of Representatives; and there is no limitation upon the power of the House as exercised by the House of Commons except that its jurisdiction is limited.

Now I wish to call the attention of the House to this point: It seems to be claimed on the part of some that because the Government of the United States, because the Congress of the United States, because the House of Representatives is limited in its jurisdiction to certain subject-matters, it is therefore limited in regard to this question. This is not so. Conceding the fact to be that this House has the power to examine a witness, then it has the power to punish that witness for contempt in case he refuses to answer. The power, then, of this House as to examining and punishing a contumacious witness is just as broad as that of the House of Commons of England. Whatever may be done by any tribunal on the face of the earth in this regard can be done by this House.

[Without concluding, Mr. LORD gave way for the House to take action in regard to the impeachment trial. He subsequently concluded, as follows:]

Mr. LORD. In concluding the remarks that I began this morning I shall omit at this late hour very much I had intended to say, and shall endeavor to confine myself within less time than the fifteen minutes allowed me by the courtesy of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. HURD.]

The strange position taken by my friend from Iowa [Mr. MCCRARY] leads me to concentrate my remarks mainly upon a single proposition. If I understood that gentleman aright, he claimed that it is within the power of any court of the United States, or any court of the District of Columbia having power to issue the writ of habeas corpus, to inquire into a judgment of this House. This House, equal in its dignity and power to the House of Commons of England, having the constitutional power to investigate villainies committed within this District or within the United States, having solemnly adjudicated that the witness brought before us was bound to answer the questions proposed to him, can be arrested in that investigation, can have its judgment reviewed and reversed by any inferior tribunal in the District of Columbia. Up to the time that this sentiment was uttered by the gentleman from Iowa, I had supposed that there was a universal concession on the part of the House that its judgments could not be thus reviewed. In fact in all the arguments made, commencing with the argument of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LYNDE] and coming down through, from State to State, until we reach the argument of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. MCCRARY,] no one suggested or pretended that any court could review the judgment of this House.

A great deal has been said about the invasion of the personal rights of Mr. Kilbourn. I ask the attention of the House to this point; the questions put to Mr. Kilbourn had nothing whatever to do with his personal rights. I have not time to read in full the resolutions passed by the House upon the subject of this investigation. What was this committee charged to do? It was charged with the duty of inquiring into the real-estate pool of the District of Columbia, to ascertain who were its members, to ascertain what had been done in regard to it, because it was believed that a large portion of the property of Jay Cooke & Co. had been covered up in that very pool.

What was the question which the witness refused to answer. He answers very many. He claims that the pool is represented by five individuals. It is important that the House should know who they were. He claims that that pool was represented by five individuals, and therefore any sum which had been made in that pool must be divided by the number 5. So that, in truth and fact, if this pool had been represented only by this one man and Jay Cooke & Co., then the divisor would be 2 instead of 5, and the sum due the United States would be very much larger.

I ask the attention of the House while I refer to these questions in the identical language in which they were put. We have heard very much about this being an invasion of personal rights. I am forced into a discussion that does not belong to this House by the attitude taken by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. MCCRARY;] that is, in regard to the questions propounded to this witness. I read them to the House to show that not one solitary question referred to his personal rights; every question referred directly to this pool and the transactions of the pool.

Every lawyer in this House is familiar with the rule that, when you have an unwilling witness in court, it may direct that witness to be examined according to the rules of a cross-examination, and they have often heard in court learned judges say that although they could not see precisely the purport of the questions, although they could not see precisely to what the questions would lead, yet they would allow them, because they had confidence in the examining counsel. But, Mr. Speaker and members of the House, no such policy was needed here, for the questions propounded to the witness in this case were proper under any rule of proceeding, as will be seen when we reflect upon what was the subject-matter of the inquiry before the committee. What were those questions, as propounded by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. NEW?]

Question. How many members of the pool were there before you became a member? I believe you have in fact answered.
Answer. Five gentlemen besides Jay Cooke & Co. put in $5,000 apiece.
Q. Will you state where each of these members reside?
A. I do not know that I could do that. Mr. Chairman, if you will indulge me, I respectfully decline to give any testimony as it relates to these individuals.

Now, here was the question in the mind of the committee: should the divisor be 2 or 5? Should $10,000 or $30,000 go to the United States? And the most proper question in the world was put to the witness by this learned committee. He was asked to name those persons; he was asked to state where they resided, for the very purpose of ascertaining whether he had told the truth or not. Yet on that point, knowing he was going to be reached and compelled to divulge the truth, which he did not want to tell, (as we have the right to assume,) he avails himself of what he claims to be a privilege, and says: "I will not answer." He did not pretend then that this was a mere personal matter. He had not then made up his mind to be a martyr to a principle; he had not then made up his mind to give the false reason that this was a mere personal transaction, for he was asked not in regard to his person, not in regard to his household, not in regard to his books, but he was asked who were those five persons who composed that pool concerning which this learned committee was inquiring, and he refused to answer.

Why, sir, there is no court or justice of the peace in the whole land so ignorant as not to hold at once that that question was proper, if it referred to the subject-matter before the court. Yet here learned gentlemen ask us to shelter this witness behind the plea of personality, maintaining that we are invading his personal rights. There never was any greater untruth uttered in any tribunal.

Now let me call attention to another question put by this committee:

Q. For the present you decline to state, even if you were certain as to the locality, where they do reside?
A. Yes, sir; I respectfully decline to state anything in relation to individuals who did business with us except upon consultation with my counsel.
Q. Will you please state their names?
A. That I beg to include in the same answer.

Then he is asked to produce certain books. What books? Not the personal books of Hallet Kilbourn; there never was a greate falsehood uttered in a court of justice. The books called for are or were the books of this very pool. Although Hallet Kilbourn claimed to be its trustee and the books were kept in his name, cannot we look behind that shallow device? They were in no sense books of Hallet Kilbourn; they were books of this "pool;" books which this man had the power to produce; books for which this committee had issued this subpœna duces tecum. Yet the witness comes here with this plea for sympathy because imprisoned for refusing to tell the committee who composed that "pool." We know that Jay Cooke composed one part of it. When asked to give the other names the witness refused. When asked to bring forward the books he refused. He defies the power of this House, and says now that he is suffering for a principle.

I tell you, Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the warning we had the other day from the learned gentleman from Wisconsin that those who dared to vote for this resolution would be left at home—not caring for that threat—I say in behalf of the people of the United States that almost to a unit they will see behind this shallow pretense; they will see that this man Kilbourn has secrets which he seeks to cover up. When they read of his grand array of distinguished counsel—the most distinguished and expensive in the United States—they will see that Hallet Kilbourn does not stand alone, and that behind him is a power which is "the power behind the throne."

Now, Mr. Speaker, are we to have our sympathies appealed to in such a case as this? I concede that I am outside the record; but I follow the gentlemen who spoke against the resolution on Saturday and who have spoken to-day. Are we to have this whole matter blinded and hushed up? Are questions which no lawyer on the face of the earth would declare to be improper to be refused an answer? Are we to have this whole matter closed against us under the plea of sympathy; under the allegation that this man is suffering as a martyr in order to vindicate a principle, in order to vindicate his own personal rights?

Now, Mr. Speaker, for fear that some person may be misled, I want to call attention to chapter 7 of the Revised Statutes. I have heard it suggested by various gentlemen that perhaps the statute was intended to take from this tribunal the power to commit a witness. This has hardly been claimed on the other side; yet I find that on my own side of the House the idea prevails more or less that chapter 7, by which a witness who refuses to answer is subjected to indictment, was intended as a revocation of the powers of this House. What could be more false? That statute was not intended as a sword, but as a shield. It was only intended to aid this House. It was never supposed that it was to be used in order to close the gateway to investigation and the door to the truth. That statute could not abnegate the powers of this House without express enactment; and had there been an express provision in the statute, as was well remarked here the other day, this House, going back to the Constitution, representing within its jurisdiction the whole power of the House of Commons of Great Britain, could not be deprived by any act of the Congress of the United States of a right which is an integral and inherent power under the Constitution, belonging peculiarly to itself to work out the truth through these investigations.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] says we must set a limit to our power. Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not know what abuse of this power there has been. I have not been here in Washington to watch these events; yet I supposed I knew what witnesses had proved contumacious and been ordered into custody.

I recollect but two cases where witnesses have been committed, the two cases referred to in this debate, and yet my learned and venerable friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] whom I highly respect, stands up in this House and warns it against an abuse of its own power. He does this when the only witnesses who have been confined under the power of the House, so far as I know, or at least so far as has been referred to in this debate from the beginning to the end, were the witnesses Irwin and Kilbourn. I apprehend, when it is remembered that the witness Irwin covered himself all over with perjury, and when it appears from the questions and answers in the examination of this witness, Kilbourn, that he is attempting to cover from the view of this House thousands of dollars—I say I apprehend it will not be admitted there is any abuse of this power such as to call upon the Congress to commit suicide, such as to call upon the Congress to adopt a rule which, as has been already said and as we must all agree, will close every door of investigation. Then, so far as we are concerned, we might as well close our doors and adjourn and go home.

We are asked what Clay, and Crittenden, and other departed worthies would say to this invasion of the rights of the citizen. I wish those worthies so long entombed were in the House and we had their judgment on this question of "addition, division, and silence." I apprehend the learned Representative from Pennsylvania would not gain any comfort from them.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HURD. I yield now to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, it is not an agreeable task for me to resist the report of a committee of this House, especially when that committee is composed of a majority of my political associates, and more especially when it is supported by eminent lawyers. But, sir, my duty is imposed by the Constitution of the United States, which, as a representative of the people, I have sworn to support, and I must support it according to my honest conviction of its import and meaning. That Constitution is the sunlight to my path. When I heard the resolution under discussion read to the House I must confess, sir, I felt somewhat startled and stunned. I paused and said to myself, "What, is it proposed to disobey the writ of habeas corpus; to suspend it in time of peace, profound peace, and simply to defend the House of Representatives in the execution of a rule, in the imprisonment of a witness for contempt?" Truly, sir, that conspicuous clause in our Constitution, that immortal command, never recurred to my mind with so much directness and force. I immediately turned to my Manual and read:

The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in cases of rebellion or invasion the public safety may require it.

I read it again, and lingered upon it with both love and awe—love and gratitude to our ancestors, the "immortal framers," and awe and fear lest at any time I might be persuaded to disobey and ignore it.

My thoughts involuntarily went back to the dark days of the Republic, when the bloody hand of war was outstretched over the land, when hundreds and thousands of our fellow-citizens and myself were snatched away from home and ruthlessly herded together in the dungeons and prison-pens of the country without even the shadow of just charge or complaint. Too many faces arose to my mind's eye of the young and the old, suffering for long weary days, weeks, and months, some in lingering sickness, some in the agonies of death, and some after death—all innocent as the unborn babe of any crime or real disloyalty to their country. Even then, when there was perhaps some excuse for withholding the writ, we thought "the public safety" did not require it, and we cried aloud for habeas corpus. O! for the great writ of liberty then, that it might come, unbar the gates, and set the prisoner free. O! for one ray of light from judicial power. O! that the cause of this bondage could be inquired into. O! where is the Constitution of our fathers, the freedom of speech or of the press, or personal liberty? I ask my fellow-democrats on this floor what was our shibboleth then, our all-demanding appeal for the personal liberty of the citizen? Habeas corpus.

Mr. Speaker, I could not support this resolution if I would, and I would not if I could. I must be pardoned, sir, for the feeling I display. The proposition touches me deeply. I here declare that in my place as a Representative of the people, or in whatever other capacity I may be called upon to act, I will never ignore or deny to the citizen this great heir-loom of English and American liberty. No political ties, no party zeal, no expected success, shall induce me to lose sight of it for a moment. The living and the dead speak to me and command me to respect it. I am sworn to obey it, and when I fail in that duty may this right arm fall paralyzed by my body.

Now, sir, I beg leave to say that with this contumacious witness, Hallet Kilbourn, I have not the slightest sympathy. I know not the man; never saw him except when he stood at that bar. I believe he is in contempt of the House and was justly imprisoned for a violation of one of its rules. I have no respect for and have never been connected with any rings or like associations for any purpose whatever; and if there are men in the world who stand aloof from pools or rings for speculative purposes or otherwise I think I am one of them. I am even suspicious of my own personal friends who have been said to be connected with them. I have ardently expressed myself in favor of all these investigations into our governmental affairs, that they may be conducted with the most severe scrutiny, and have proclaimed that if democrats be found in fraud or peculation upon the Government, though they may have stood high in popular favor and in my personal esteem, let them go down in the common wreck. I am in favor of the same measure to our political friends as to our political foes. Let us never be amenable to the divine injunction:

> Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam out of thine own eye; and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye.

It is only by acting impartially and justly with all and to all that we shall receive the commendations of a great people, and, what is still more precious, the approval of our own conscience.

I have been quite amazed, sir, at the line of argument pursued by the gentlemen who sustain the report of the committee. They seem to have exercised all their skill and ingenuity to uphold what to my mind seems an illegal and unwarrantable position. I deny the premises from which they argue; they are false, and, as is always the case, arguments drawn from false premises lead to false conclusions. We often fail through the intricacies and mazes of the law and legal decisions as presented and applied by skillful advocates to reach justice and truth. The law to some is but an art, while to others it is a science. Indeed it is but reason, the common reason of mankind, of the highest and most perfect order. Cicero said, "Lex est summa ratio." And Lord Coke perhaps better expressed it "Lex est perfectio rationis." Our Constitution speaks to the ordinary understanding and is not difficult of comprehension, more especially in its isolated mandatory text. The gentlemen who have advocated the majority report of the committee seem to regard the Parliament of Great Britain and the Congress of the United States to a great extent as like systems and clothed with similar powers.

Now, sir, for the purpose of this argument, as to the question under discussion, I deny that there is any analogy between them. The one is unlimited and supreme, the other is limited and the creature of organic law. The one is in its origin a monarchical, aristocratic system; the other a republican system, the emanation of popular sovereignty. The British Parliament is to-day mainly what it was when organized nearly seven hundred years ago in the reign of King John. It is but "the deep-trod foot-marks of ancient customs." The king or queen and the estates of the realm, the lords spiritual, the lords temporal, and the Commons constitute the Parliament. The lords spiritual and the lords temporal were originally appointed by the Crown, and so all hereditary titles of honor. The peers are ennobled of blood, and their dignities can only be lost by attainder. The bishops are only lords of Parliament. It is true the Crown and the House of Lords and the Commons correspond in a degree with our Executive and Senate and House of Representatives, but they all act under different obligations and responsibilities. The king or queen swears to govern the kingdom and the dominions thereto belonging according to the statutes of Parliament agreed on, and the laws and customs of the same. The members of the two houses take the oaths of allegiance, supremacy, and abjuration. It was proclaimed in the days of Elizabeth that "the most and absolute power of the realm of England consisteth in the Parliament." Lord Coke said:

> The power of Parliament is so transcendant and absolute, that it cannot be confined either for causes or persons within any bounds.

To-day there is no limit to its power and jurisdiction; it is not controlled in its discretion; and when it errs, its errors can only be corrected by itself. It is indeed a law unto itself, and that law is the supreme power of the land. The most recent and approved author (Mr. May) on parliamentary law says:

> The legislative authority of Parliament extends over the United Kingdom and all its colonies and foreign possessions; and there are no other limits to its power of making laws for the whole empire than those which are incident to all sovereign authority—the willingness of the people to obey or their power to resist. Unlike the legislatures of many other countries, it is bound by no fundamental charter or constitution, but has itself the sole constitutional right of establishing and altering the laws and government of the empire.

It has, unlike any part of our republican system, an inherent judicature, and hence its time-honored title, the "high court of Parliament."

The most distinguishing characteristic of the Lords is their judicature, of which they exercise several kinds. They have a judicature in the trial of peers, and another in claims of peerage and offices of honor under references from the Crown; another for controverted elections of the representative peers of Scotland, and of all questions touching the rotation or election of lords spiritual or temporal of Ireland. But in addition to these special cases they have a general judicature as a supreme court of appeal from other courts of justice. This high judicial office has been retained by them as the ancient "Consilium regis," which, assisted by the judges and with the assent of the king, administered justice in the early periods of English law. Their claim to an appellate jurisdiction over causes in equity, on petition to themselves without reference from the Crown, has been exercised since the reign of Charles I; and, in spite of the resistance of the Commons in 1675, they have since been left in undisputed possession of it. They have at the present time a jurisdiction over causes brought on writs of error from the courts of law, originally derived from the Crown and confirmed by statute, and to hear appeals from courts of equity on petition.

I have thus dwelt, Mr. Speaker, upon the character and jurisdiction of Parliament to show that, in its origin, authority, and scope, it is almost totally dissimilar to the Congress of the United States. It is true that we take what we term our parliamentary law or rules of government in each House in the main from the English system; but we do not possess judicial power, and, unlike Parliament, are in no sense a court, except indeed in the Senate, when it sits as a court of impeachment, as specially provided in the Constitution. Hence it cannot be maintained that because Parliament issues judicial process, and the House of Commons alone may do so and is held as a court, our House of Representatives may exercise like powers or is in any sense a court.

Now, sir, what, in brief, is our system of government? We are a federal or confederate republic, based upon the sovereignty of the people, the Chief Executive elected by the people, you and I and all of us elected by the people, the Senate by the people one degree removed. We are the creatures of an organic law, a constitution which we are all sworn to support, and in our duties here we cannot, if we keep our oaths, transcend its limits or authority. The President of the United States, unlike the monarch of England, is the servant and elect of the people. He swears to "preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States." That Constitution creates our system of government with its three great distinct branches and defines their powers. It is our higher and highest law. We, as a House of Representatives, are its creature under express affirmative and prohibitive mandates.

Now, sir, let us examine this case closely. The House has committed to prison a witness for refusing to answer questions and to expose the books of a corporation or partnership of which he is an officer or member. I think the House did right, as is admitted, according to custom, and indeed established by statute, in exercising this legislative and quasi-judicial function. But, sir, it may not be amiss, in order to see our way clearly, to consider whether the House possesses the constitutional power to imprison a person for any cause whatever. We find no express authority for it in the Constitution. The only provision which seems to indicate such a power is in the second paragraph of section 5, which says:

> Each House may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its members for disorderly behavior, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member.

Now, sir, from part of that clause alone is to be drawn the only power which this House has to commit a witness for contempt, namely, the words "each House may determine the rules of its proceedings." The balance of the clause refers only to the members of the House. And might it not indeed be contended that the whole clause refers only to members and that the operation of the rules was not to extend beyond them, except indeed in protecting the House from intrusions and disorderly conduct by the public? The question may not be inappropriately asked here, can this House in the exercise of its rules or of any power in the Constitution imprison one of its own members? And if not, can it imprison any other person? I was interested in the argument of my friend from Ohio, [Mr. HURD.] It was ingenious and able. The law and the decisions he quoted were good, but I must be allowed to say they did not apply to the case at bar. The chief case he instanced, that of Anderson vs. Dunn, reported in 6 Wheaton, was simply on writ of error on an action of trespass against the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives for an assault and battery and false imprisonment, and the question was whether imprisonment by the House for a breach of its privilege and contempt of its dignity and authority was a legal justification and bar to the action; or, in other words, whether the House had the power to imprison at all. There was no writ of habeas corpus in the case. Mr. Justice Johnson, who delivered the opinion, said:

The present question is, What is the extent of the punishing power which the deliberative assemblies of the Union may assume and exercise on the principle of self-preservation?

The counsel for the plaintiff contended that the House had no authority to issue the warrant; that the warrant was illegal on the face of it, and that in either case it was no justification to the officer who executed it; that the power of issuing warrants was judicial; that the Constitution provided that "no warrant shall issue but on probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation;" that at common law the power to punish for contempt was incident to courts, but Congress and House of Representatives being terms unknown to the common law could derive no claims through it; that courts only could enforce the laws, they were therefore clothed with authority to compel obedience; whereas the Legislature is merely deliberative.

The Attorney-General held that the House of Representatives exercised the power to punish for contempt as incidental to its legislative or judicial capacity, and that the necessity of self-defense was as incidental to legislative as to judicial authority; that it was sufficient protection to the officer that the House had jurisdiction to punish contempts and that it had adjudged the plaintiff guilty of contempt; that the doctrine was established by the Supreme Court that the grant of the powers expressly given to Congress in the Constitution involved all the incidental powers necessary and proper to carry them into effect.

Mr. Justice Johnson, in delivering the opinion, said:

It is certainly true that there is no power given by the Constitution to either House to punish for contempts except when committed by their own members, nor does the judicial or criminal power given to the United States in any part expressly extend to the infliction of punishment for contempt of either House or of any co-ordinate branch of the Government. Shall we therefore decide that no such power exists? It is true that such a power, if it exists, must be derived from implication, and the genius and spirit of our institutions are hostile to the exercise of implied powers.

He, however, affirmed the judgment of the court below, on the ground that the House of Representatives and all legislative assemblies possessed an incidental power, to protect themselves in the maintenance of their own dignity, to punish for contempt; but this was a power not substantive and independent, but auxiliary and subordinate; and that was "the least possible power to the end proposed," which was the power of imprisonment. The learned justice said in the same opinion, which I quote in answer to the ideas advanced in this discussion, of analogy between the Congress of the United States and the Parliament of Great Britain:

But the American legislative bodies have never possessed or pretended to the omnipotence which constitutes the leading feature in the legislative assembly of Great Britain.

Now, sir, it will be observed that the question under discussion is not touched by this opinion and indeed was not in the case of Henderson vs. Dunn at all. The question in that case I repeat was whether the House had power to commit for contempt. That is admitted, and I have adverted to the case with so much particularity to show that such only was its extent.

Who can doubt for a moment, after reading the decision of that able jurist, that he would have held that this House could retain a prisoner against a writ of habeas corpus? If so, he would have placed himself by his own argument in the ridiculous attitude of maintaining that the House, in the exercise of merely an incidental, implied, and subordinate power could vitiate and annul an express power and prohibitive mandate of the Constitution. He would have maintained that a legislative and quasi-judicial incidental function was superior to the highest and most sacred function appointed by the Constitution to the judiciary branch of the Government of the United States.

It must be perceived, sir, that the entire argument of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HURD] and of his colleague, [Mr. LAWRENCE,] and indeed of all who have supported the majority report of the committee, is based, first, on the idea of similarity of authority between the Congress of the United States and the Parliament of Great Britain; and, secondly, that this House has equal power with a court of justice, and, indeed, is a court. All their citations apply to courts. I have shown that the two houses of Parliament are courts, but deny that this House of Representatives is a court, or can exercise, in legal acceptation, judicial functions. It cannot issue judicial process or "due process of law," as meant by the Constitution. Judicial process means something to be done by a judge—judex or judices. We have none here.

I will repeat the quotation from Blackstone, which my friend [Mr. HURD] made, and upon that hang all the others he made:

All courts, by which I mean to include the two houses of Parliament and the courts of Westminister Hall, can have no control in matters of contempt. The sole adjudication of contempt and the punishment thereof belong exclusively and without interfering to each respective court. Infinite confusion and disorder would follow if courts could by writs of habeas corpus examine and determine the contempt of others.

That, sir, is, of course, good law and I admit every word of it, and so the citation from his own learned father, Hurd on Habeas Corpus:

It is a rule essential to the administration of justice that when a court is vested with jurisdiction over the subject-matter upon which it assumes to act and regularly obtains jurisdiction of the person, it becomes its right and duty to determine every question which may arise in the cause without interference from any tribunal.

This is all true, sir, but applies exclusively to courts. I make no question of the power of a court of superior jurisdiction to hold a prisoner against a writ of habeas corpus issued by an inferior court, nor of the power of any court of jurisdiction in the case to hold a prisoner in execution of its judgment against the interference of any other court; but, sir, can any power, or court if you please, in this land—for the Senate may be a court of impeachment—which has not the authority to issue a writ of habeas corpus, hold a prisoner against a court that has such authority? Suppose, sir, when the Senate of the United States—a body that never dies—was sitting as a court of impeachment in the trial of President Johnson, they had committed General Sherman, who was a witness, for refusing to answer a question, as they had a right to do, would they have refused to obey a writ of habeas corpus issued by the Supreme Court of the United States, or indeed of any court having the power to issue the writ? The Senate even, sitting as a court as authorized by the Constitution, which this House can never be, would have been bound to obey the constitutional mandate in respect to habeas corpus. I contend that this House has no option but to obey the writ, from whatever court it may issue, from the Supreme Court down to the lowest whence it may come.

But, sir, how is this great process regarded even by Parliament? It is guided by no law but its own; it is supreme, and could abolish the writ of habeas corpus if it pleased. Yes, sir, it could abolish or ignore Magna Charta itself. The latest and most approved English authority on the subject says:

The habeas corpus act is binding upon all persons whatever who have prisoners in their custody; and it is therefore competent for the judges to have before them persons committed by the houses of Parliament for contempt. There have been cases indeed in which writs of habeas corpus have been resisted, as in 1675, when the House of Commons directed the lieutenant of the tower to make no return to any writ of habeas corpus relating to persons imprisoned by its order, and in 1704, when similar directions were given to the sergeant-at-arms. But these orders arose from the contests raging between the two houses, the first in regard to the judicature of the Lords and the second concerning the jurisdiction of the Commons in matters of elections; and it has since been the invariable practice for the sergeant-at-arms and others, by order of the house, to make returns to writs of habeas corpus.

In England, however, it is the practice of the courts not to inquire into the causes of the commitment, but to sustain it and remand the prisoner to Parliament, acknowledging its power and supremacy. As in the case of Lord Shaftesbury, who had been committed by the House of Lords for contempt, when brought before the court of King's Bench he was remanded. Lord Chief Justice Rainsford said:

He is in execution of the judgment given by the lords for contempt; and therefore if he should be bailed he would be delivered out of execution. And again, this court has no jurisdiction of the cause, and therefore the form of the return is not considerable.

The House of Commons alone is, in England, considered a court. As Mr. Justice Powys said in another case, The Queen vs. Paty:

The House of Commons is a great court, and all things done by them are to be intended to have been rite actæ.

In 1751 Mr. Murray was committed to Newgate by the Commons for contempt, and was brought up to the court of King's Bench by a habeas corpus. He was refused bail, Wright, justice, saying:

It need not appear to us what the contempt was for; if it did appear, we could not judge thereof; the House of Commons is superior to this court in this particular. This court cannot admit to bail a person committed for a contempt in any other court in Westminster Hall.

In Brass Crosby's case, in 1771, De Grey, chief justice, said:

When the House of Commons adjudge anything to be a contempt or a breach of privilege, their adjudication is a conviction and their commitment in consequence an execution; and no court can discharge or bail a person that is in execution by the judgment of any other court. And again, courts of justice have no cognizance of the acts of the houses of Parliament, because they belong ad aliud examen.

Now, sir, I hope the distinction which I make is clear, that the Parliament, even the Commons alone, is a court, and this House of Representatives is not; but even in Parliament they consider the writ as so important, so sacred to English liberty that in all cases they obey it, although not bound to do so by any superior authority. We, on the contrary, must act by superior authority and by express command. We have no more right to disobey that clause of our Constitution which says, "The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended," &c., than we have to disobey the clause which immediately follows it, namely: "No bill of attainder or ex post facto law shall be passed," for who will say that the Congress of the United States can pass a bill of attainder or an ex post facto law?

But it is said, sir, that the supreme court of the District of Columbia may not remand the prisoner if taken before it but may admit him to bail or discharge him. I ask, what right have we to suppose that the court will not do its duty in the premises? We must exercise that comity which is due to all courts and which belongs to all branches of the Government. My judgment is that the court ought to and I have a right to believe will, return the prisoner to the custody of the House, or, in other words, sustain the commitment in respect to the authority of the House in the exercise of this incidental power or usage to maintain its dignity.

But, sir, take the alternative. Admit that the court does not adjudicate as we have a right to suppose it will, but assumes to inquire into the cause of our commitment. May it not be possible that we have erred in judgment? This House is not infallible, nor is any human power. It then becomes us to inquire whether or not we have invaded other great constitutional guarantees to the people.

We have these clauses staring us in the face, and we are sworn to support them:

The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.

No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia, when in actual service in time of war or public danger; nor shall any person be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation.

In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the assistance of counsel for his defense.

And again:

The enumeration in the Constitution, of certain rights, shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people.

I admit, sir, that these clauses do not directly apply to the case we are discussing, but in some aspects of it they may do so, and they are worthy of our most serious consideration. Sir, what to us is the right or claim to hold this prisoner according to the lex et consuetudo parliamenti, the law and custom of Parliament, as weighed in the balance with these great guarantees of freedom to the citizen?

Habeas corpus is the leading feature of Magna Charta, and has been the great bulwark of English liberty for nearly seven hundred years, since the noble barons extorted it from King John at Runnymede.

No freeman shall be seized or imprisoned but by the judgment of his equals or the law of the land.

It has been held in veneration for centuries, and the laws of England provide a punishment for the judge who dares to refuse the writ; he incurs a forfeiture to the complainant. It may be suspended in time of war, but Blackstone wisely said:

The suspension of it in time of war is the sacrifice of the security of personal liberty for a time the more effectually to secure it in the future.

We can appreciate the wisdom of that utterance now. Sir, this personal privilege to man is even more ancient than Magna Charta. It was recognized in some sense among the Romans, even since Paul, nearly nineteen centuries ago, stood at the judgment-seat declaring he was free-born and a Roman:

I appeal unto Cæsar.
Then Festus, when he had conferred with the council, answered, Hast thou appealed unto Cæsar? unto Cæsar shalt thou go.

Sir, it has been said in this debate that really we had no writ of habeas corpus until it was enacted and defined by law; that, although incorporated in the Constitution, it was vague and undetermined; that it required legal enactment to make it of practical effect. Sir, did not the framers of the Constitution understand what it meant? Did they say "The privilege of a writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended?" No, sir; they said "The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended," &c.

Did not James Madison and Alexander Hamilton and Benjamin Franklin and the other immortal framers of that instrument understand what habeas corpus was? Did not the learned and great Jefferson know what it meant when he said in his inaugural address as President of the United States:

Freedom of religion, freedom of the press, and freedom of person under the protection of the habeas corpus and trial by juries impartially selected, were among the principles "that form the bright constellation which has gone before us and guided our steps through an age of revolution and reformation. The wisdom of our sages and the blood of our heroes have been devoted to their attainment!"

The great men of our revolutionary era, and after, understood it and intended it to be understood, as the courts and the great lawyers of England and America held it to be, as it was regulated by the statute of Charles II—

That the person shall make due return of the writ and bring, or cause to be brought, the body of the party so committed or restrained into or before the lord chancellor or the lord keeper of the great seal of England.

The writ was intended to be executed in its literal meaning—"habeas corpus," you shall have the body. Without the delivery of the body the execution of the writ would be imperfect and farcical. Let me ask, Mr. Speaker, what sacrifice do we make by obeying this process? It is supposed that the Government had an interest of twenty or twenty-five thousand dollars in this real-estate pool, and if that could be recovered and returned to the Treasury of the United States it would be so much saved to the people. But, sir, do we know that the Government had anything in that pool, or indeed that there was any crime or fraud in the business at all? Was it not a mere suspicion, although perhaps well-founded, by the investigating committee? May it not be that this contumacious witness is an honest man, and has been acting under a mistaken, false pride in his refusal to answer questions? May we not at least give him the benefit of a doubt?

But in any event, Mr. Speaker, regardless of consequences, let us do right; let us bravely and promptly do our duty. Let not the American House of Representatives refuse to execute this great writ so precious to our people, which indeed lies at the foundation of every free government on earth. I would rather, sir, march in solid column with every man in this House, our honorable Speaker at the head, escort this man in all dignity and surrender him at the foot-stool of the judicial power, than hold him a single hour against this process. The people would honor us for it; indeed it would be a glorious sight in the eyes of the nations, and the more humble or mean the individual the more honor to the high representatives of the people. Let us not set the example of disobedience to this almost God-given injunction; if we do, be sure, sir, it will come back to plague us.

It is true, sir, we are the great inquisitorial power of the nation. The people expect us to investigate public affairs, to root out, if possible, all fraud and evil in official places, to expose the wrong-doer, to promote economy and reform in every branch of the Government; but, sir, the very moment in our investigations or acts we come in conflict with the law of our origin, our being, the moment we stand face to face with an interdiction of the Constitution—especially that above all others: the fundamental right of the citizen—that great people would say to us, "Stop! stop!" suddenly as an eclipse of the sun at noonday; "thus far shalt thou go and no farther."

Let us remember how often the obedience to this writ has vindicated the right over the wrong, the innocent over the guilty; how often it has built up the heart of the disconsolate father, and cheered and made glad the stricken mother. Many a poor boy have I myself seen taken from the grasp of the military power of the United States even, and returned to his weeping mother in obedience to this mandate from a mere county court. Shall we not respect it, sir? Shall we not observe the distinction between the judicial and the legislative departments of our Government? What is Hallet Kilbourn and all he knows, every secret in his bosom, in comparison with this great privilege of the American citizen? Better, sir, let ten thousand Kilbourns go—be set at liberty and escape into the distant forests and there perish with the savage and the beast of the wild wood. Yes, sir; better let all impeachments go, all the Belknaps in Christendom untried and unwhipped of justice, than hesitate to respect and obey the habeas corpus. It has been the palladium of liberty for ages. It is consecrated in the hearts of our people. It was in principle proclaimed by our fathers in the Declaration of Independence. It is asserted in every bill of rights in our States, and is signally ingrafted in the Federal Constitution. It is a blood-bought inheritance. Under its protection, in the main, though oft through tribulation, we have run a glorious race, and are about to complete a well-rounded century of liberty and law, and I trust a golden era is opening upon us and our children. It is the terror to tyrants, and the last hope of the prisoner. It is the sheet-anchor of freedom wherever on earth the rights of man are recognized. It is the brightest orb in the political firmament. It is the polar star of the American Constitution. Let us guard it with devotion and vigilance as the vestal and very vital flame of liberty, and transmit it unimpaired and sacred through generation and generation to our latest posterity. Stand by the writ forever.

Mr. HURD. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LAWRENCE.]

Mr. LAWRENCE. I will occupy the time in presenting as fully as I can some suggestions which seem to me appropriate to the occasion. I will say a word, in the first place, in reply to the gentleman who has just taken his seat. He seems to suppose we have suspended the writ of habeas corpus, or will do so if we refuse to permit the body of Kilbourn to be returned to the court which has issued the writ. He seems not to be aware of the fact that the habeas corpus act provides that where a party is in jail under sentence, and that fact appears by the petition, the writ cannot issue.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. Yes. But in that case he is held by a court under judicial authority, which we have not.

Mr. LAWRENCE. The gentleman might as well argue that that clause of the statute which denies the right of a judge in certain cases to issue the writ has suspended its privileges, as to say that this House does so when by its sentence it holds a disobedient witness in confinement. This House has no judicial authority, but it has the lawful authority of its privileges and powers to imprison a recusant witness in an authorized investigation as fully as any judicial court. That clause of the Constitution which denies the right to suspend the privileges of the writ of habeas corpus has no relation to such case as this. It forbids any exercise of executive power which shall deny the right to the writ, and it equally prohibits Congress or either House, or even a court, to declare generally or in a special case that no writ shall issue where according to law a party may be entitled to it. But if he is not by any law entitled to a writ, then there is no privilege to be suspended. A party lawfully imprisoned in execution by an authorized and lawful sentence was never in any country entitled to the writ, and a denial of it suspends no privilege he is entitled to. When a party has had his trial, his "day in court," his rights are res adjudicata, and as to him there is no privilege of the writ. The constitutional provision against suspending the writ therefore does not apply or have reference to imprisonment by virtue of a sentence of the House no more than it does to a sentence to imprisonment after a fair trial in a judicial court. So much, then, for that question.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LAWRENCE. I would if I had time; but this is so limited that I cannot yield to my friend as I could wish to do if I had sufficient time.

I now proceed to consider the question more immediately before us. There is danger that in the excitement of the hour we may lose sight of the real question. The real question is, can a judicial court release a witness from imprisonment who is held by order of the House for refusal to testify in an investigation which the House is making in a matter clearly within its jurisdiction? I say not. And having no power to release, it cannot interfere with the business of the House by writ of habeas corpus.

Among all the cases which have been cited by gentlemen on either side of this House, there has not yet been one where any court ever did reverse a sentence of imprisonment by a legislative body.

Mr. GARFIELD. In the Emery case which I quoted on Saturday, volume 107 Massachusetts Reports, page 172, the court discharged the prisoner, who had been sentenced by the Massachusetts house of representatives to twenty-five days' imprisonment.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I had not finished the sentence I was uttering. There never has been a case where a court discharged a person confined under sentence of imprisonment by a legislative body, except in some cases where the constitution limited the power to imprison to enumerated specific cases, and where the imprisonment was outside of these, and so unauthorized. But, Mr. Speaker, that is not the kind of jurisdiction we are now exercising. The question we are to decide now is whether in this case, where we are exercising an acknowledged jurisdiction under that clause of the Constitution which gives Congress the power to legislate in reference to the District of Columbia "in all cases whatsoever," where we exercise a general jurisdiction—a jurisdiction not limited by enumeration or specification—whether in such case as that a judicial court can inquire into and reverse a sentence of imprisonment which this House may pronounce. I say in such case as that no court has ever claimed to exercise any right to interfere with an imprisonment ordered by a legislative body. This precise question, Mr. Speaker, has been decided in the case of Passmore Williamson, which will be found in 26 Pennsylvania State Reports, and from which I will read a single sentence. The learned judge in delivering the opinion in that case says:

> The conviction of contempt is a separate proceeding and is conclusive of every fact which might have been urged on the trial for contempt, and among others want of jurisdiction to try the cause in which the contempt was committed.

That authority is backed up and sustained by the decision of the King's Bench in the case of Lord Shaftesbury, tried in 1675, and which will be found reported in 6 Howell's State Trials, 1269. And there are numerous other cases, all bearing upon the same question and resulting in the same conclusion, which will be found referred to in May's Parliamentary Law, on pages 77 and 78. (1 Freeman, page 153; 1 Modern, page 144; 3 Keble, page 792; Queen vs. Patty, 2 Lord Raymond, page 1109; Salkeld, page 503, and numerous other cases.) I will not stop to read these cases, but will content myself simply by referring to them as authorities which sustain the right of a legislative body to imprison for contempt in the exercise of its legislative powers, and which deny the right of any court to take from the custody of the sergeant-at-arms a person held under the legislative sentence.

But a good deal of stress has been laid on the case of Burnham vs. Morrissey, 14 Gray, 226; and my colleague [Mr. GARFIELD] has referred to another case in 107 Massachusetts Reports.

In the case reported in 14 Gray the learned judge who pronounced the opinion undoubtedly did say that one branch of the Legislature of Massachusetts was not the exclusive judge of the cases in which it could imprison for contempt. But why? Because the constitution of Massachusetts expressly enumerated the cases in which either branch of the Legislature might imprison for contempt, and by that enumeration excluded the right of the house to imprison in any other class of cases.

Now, sir, if this House were exercising a jurisdiction under a constitution which enumerated the cases in which it might imprison for contempt, and if the House had gone outside of that enumeration, then I would say at once that the courts might make inquiry to ascertain whether we had kept within the enumerated cases prescribed by the Constitution, in which the House had power to imprison for contempt.

But here, as I have already remarked, we are not exercising a limited jurisdiction, but a general unlimited jurisdiction given by that clause of the Constitution which confers legislative powers as to the District of Columbia. If we were exercising a jurisdiction under the legislative powers given under that other clause of the Constitution which says that "all legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress," and if we were attempting to exercise jurisdiction in a case in which the Constitution had given Congress no power or had excluded its exercise, then I would concede that the question would be a very different one from that which is now before the House. There are limitations in favor of liberty and personal rights imposed on Congress and each House of Congress by the old amendments to the Constitution. If the House were clearly transcending its powers, or invading personal liberty or the liberty of the press outside of its acknowledged jurisdiction, the courts might then well inquire whether we were exercising a jurisdiction authorized by the Constitution, or whether we had stepped outside of it and gone beyond the authority under which we were acting, in undoubted acts of tyranny ultra vires.

Mr. CONGER. Does the gentleman claim that this power given to Congress is vested equally and absolutely in either branch of Congress.

Mr. LAWRENCE. O, the power to punish for contempt is a power which is given to each branch of Congress.

Mr. CONGER. Where is that power given in the Constitution?

Mr. LAWRENCE. It is one of the incidental powers of each branch of Congress, as has been abundantly shown in this debate and as has been determined by the Supreme Court. When a question of this kind has been determined by the Supreme Court, it is at least some evidence that it has been rightly determined. The authority for this incidental power is very well stated by the great commentator Kent, who says:

> Whenever a power is given by a statute—
